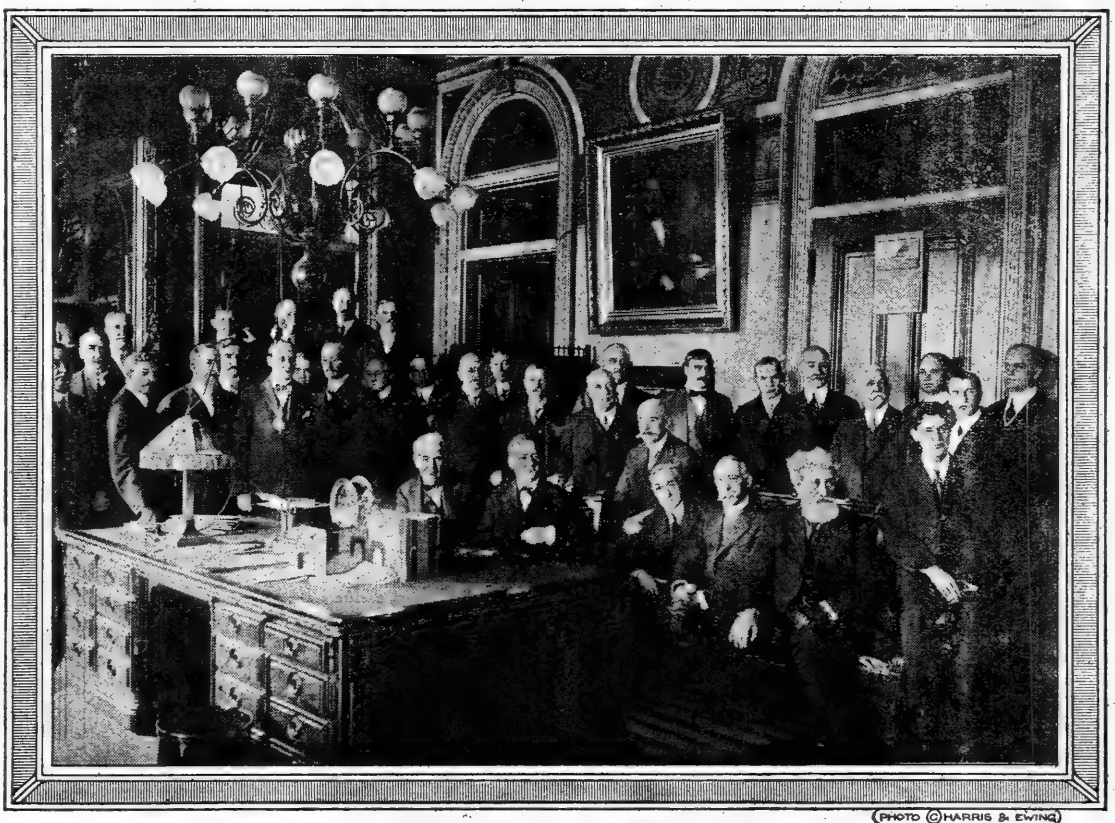
Great Experts Discuss the Navy's Needs

A Real Conversation Between Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, Admiral Taylor, and Thomas A. Edison on How to Meet Some of the Great Problems of the Day, Especially Arranged and Stenographically Reported for The New York Times



(PHOTO © HARRIS & EWING)

First Meeting of the New Naval Advisory Board, Assembled by Secretary Daniels from Among the Most Notable Scientists in the Country.

By Edward Marshall.

HERE is the detailed record of one of the most remarkable conversations ever occurring anywhere in the world. It was arranged and consummated for THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Those participating were Thomas A. Edison, the world's greatest inventor; Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the United States Navy; Admiral D. W. Taylor, Chief of the United States Navy's Bureau of Construction, and myself.

The Naval Advisory Board, that amazingly original, infinitely able and truly democratic body recently organized, which itself is the outgrowth of one of these interviews (that with Mr. Edison, published May 30th) had just completed one of its early sessions. I had been waiting all the afternoon for its adjournment, sitting, meanwhile, in the historic room which is the office of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. Edison came in with the Secretary of the Navy and a dozen others. Soon Admiral Taylor joined them.

Presently the room was clear of every one but us, as had been pre-arranged that morning.

Then we formed a little group near Lincoln's globe, the Secretary, the Admiral and the stenographer, (a good stenographer whose name is Almond,) on three of the old room's historic chairs, Mr. Edison and myself on a settee.

The article which follows is the record of the thought of these three men, expressed at a time when they had just been keenly stimulated to reflection on these especial topics by discussion of them with the most extraordinary group of scientists that ever gathered for the patriotic purpose of laying at a nation's feet their specialized ability.

Later their expressions were carefully rounded out. I went back to New York that night with Mr. Edison to go over the whole thing, and caught the first returning train to Washington next morning, so that the Secretary and the Admiral might have an opportunity to do the public a like service.

After the whole matter had been written, condensed and pulled together into concentrated form, not too conversational to distract the attention of the reader from its salient points, it was submitted to each one of its principals for his revision.

So, as it is, it must be as true a statement as in any way could be prepared of what these men, Edison, the greatest of the world's inventors, Daniels, the Secretary of the Navy, and Taylor, the Admiral in charge of our Bureau of Construction, think we ought to do, believe we can do, and propose to try to help us do to preserve this nation from such horrors as have plunged Europe into mourning that is near despair and set back the clock of civilization by decades.

I began the conversation by asking Secretary Daniels what he thought the new Advisory Board was likely to accomplish for the country's good. And from this point I shall use the record exactly as it has been approved by all concerned, presenting it as graphically as possible, in the form of dialogue.

SECRETARY DANIELS—I am sure that it will prove to be a wonderful step forward. The willingness of these eminent civilians to give their time and energy to the country's welfare at this time is patriotism of the highest order.

MR. EDISON—The welcome which the navy men have given us outsiders is astonishing. It looks like patriotism all around.

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—The United States Navy, as a whole, sir, is glad to see you aboard. Your interest and that of all the other eminent gentlemen who have come from shore to help us ought to give us the most efficient navy in the world. I believe this board is going to make history.

THE HISTORIAN—It has been the general impression—

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—I know. It always has been the belief, outside, that the civilian inventor has not been given even a square deal by the navy, let alone welcomed here. This has not been warranted by facts, and the appointment of this board and the eagerness with which the whole navy greets the promise of its co-operation must forever set aside even the suspicion that it can in the future.

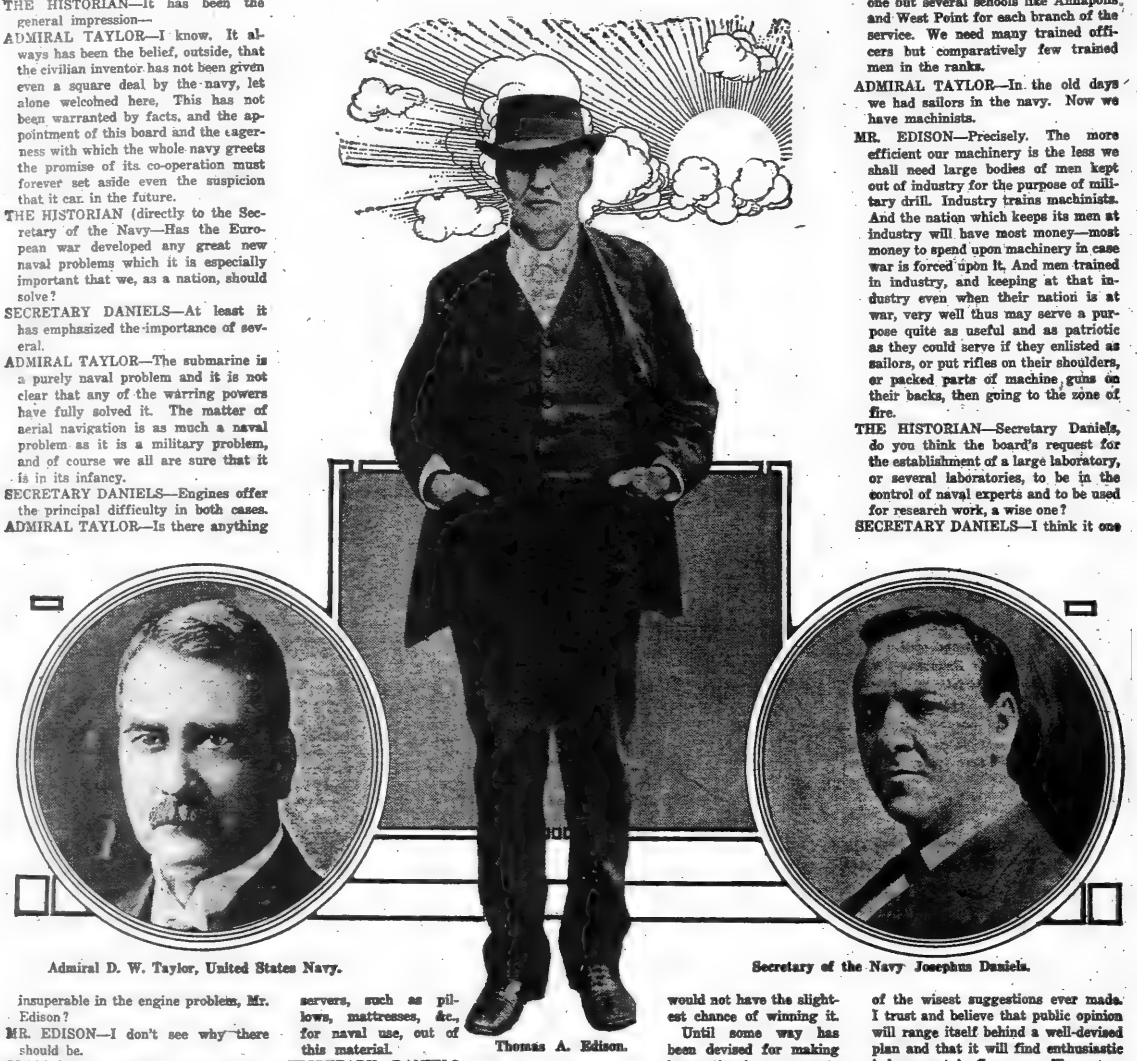
THE HISTORIAN (directly to the Secretary of the Navy)—Has the European war developed any great new naval problems which it is especially important that we, as a nation, should solve?

SECRETARY DANIELS—At least it has emphasized the importance of several.

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—The submarine is a purely naval problem and it is not clear that any of the warring powers have fully solved it. The matter of aerial navigation is as much a naval problem as it is a military problem, and of course we all are sure that it is in its infancy.

SECRETARY DANIELS—Engines offer the principal difficulty in both cases.

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—Is there anything



Admiral D. W. Taylor, United States Navy.

Thomas A. Edison.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels.

insuperable in the engine problem, Mr. Edison?

MR. EDISON—I don't see why there should be.

SECRETARY DANIELS—Even if there is, this board, now, will find a way around it.

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—Our navy has had more from civilians already than many may imagine and we have been more cordial than we are given credit for. It was six years ago that Sperry came to us with the gyroscope compass and a gyroscope device for controlling the rolling of ships. I think he, himself, will tell you that he was given a respectful hearing and a good deal of help in the department. The department has spent several thousand dollars in developing his ideas and now we are putting his devices into practical service on the ships. It would be a strange thing if the navy should scorn civilian brains.

The navy itself has turned out some good inventions, but I can name three epoch-making achievements of civilians. Indeed they have revolutionized the sciences of naval defense and offense.

Holland was a civilian, and the world owes the practical submarine to him.

Wright was a civilian, and the world and all its navies owe him for the aeroplane.

Marconi, a civilian, gave to the world, and more especially to its navies, that inestimable scientific advance—more important to the seafaring man than to the landsman, all must admit—wireless communication.

MR. EDISON—Fine! Any more?

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—Plenty. For years, in irregular and unsystematic ways, the navy has been able to utilize the ideas and the advice of civilians. It was an officer in the Revenue Service, not in the navy, who discovered that floss-silk makes fine life-preservers, and we are now making not only life-preservers proper, but other things which may be used as life preservers, such as pillows, mattresses, &c., for naval use, out of this material.

SECRETARY DANIELS—Electric steering-gear was a civilian invention, was it not?

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—Yes. Before the Spanish War we had several methods of turning the turrets on our warships, among them hydraulic and steam systems. Then a civilian came along, suggesting that we turn them by electric power. It was an absolutely new thought. Our navy eagerly took it up, and, in that detail, remains far in advance of the other navies of the world. I think all the European vessels engaged in the present war turn their turrets by one or another of the old systems. Since we adopted that which we now use we have tried out three other methods, all originating outside of the department.

SECRETARY DANIELS — The existence of this board adds vastly more to our national defenses than the construction of a dozen fortresses or the launching of a fleet of naval ships could do.

MR. EDISON—We must make it too dangerous an adventure for any nation to enter into war with us. Always in the past war has been left to solve its own problems. If peace now foresees them, war will not need to solve them. There are more kinds of unpreparedness than one. That kind really might prevent war.

SECRETARY DANIELS — Speaking generally, you believe in preparedness for war?

MR. EDISON—Not for war but for defense. It was unpreparedness for defense that wrecked Belgium. If France, Belgium and England had been prepared for defense as well as Germany was prepared for war, would any of them have been embarked, today, on the adventure which has so upset the world? I don't think so. Those who began the fight would have been well aware that if it started they would not have the slightest chance of winning it.

Until some way has been devised for making international agreements count, as long, indeed, as one bad boy, one ruffian, exists among the nations, other nations must be ready to protect their rights, just as we must have police upon our city streets until the last burglar disappears from them.

SECRETARY DANIELS—How would you define preparedness, Mr. Edison?

MR. EDISON—The nation which is ideally prepared, is prepared in such a way that the process does not bear too heavily upon its people.

I am sure that a preparedness sufficient to protect a nation against predatory neighbors, near or distant, can be accomplished without, for example, disturbing industry. The preparedness of Europe disturbed industry in two ways: first it robbed it of its workers, second, it overtaxed it and them.

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—And what suggestion would you make for a preparedness for us which would not be a burden on our people.

MR. EDISON—The nation which is overprepared with the machinery of war can afford to be underprepared with men. I said something of that sort in the interview which first suggested the appointment of the Naval Advisory Board. Stop and think.

SECRETARY DANIELS—Are you satisfied with the working out of your own plan toward preparedness so far as the appointment of this board goes?

MR. EDISON—Naturally it pleases me. The old way of industry and of war was first men and then, perhaps, machines. The new way is, first, certainly, machines, and then, perhaps, men. With inventors working with trained brains, and with machinists working with trained hands, the trained sailor or soldier for the ranks becomes much less important than he used to be. We ought to have trained officers in great abundance. I think we should have not one but several schools like Annapolis and West Point for each branch of the service. We need many trained officers but comparatively few trained men in the ranks.

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—In the old days we had sailors in the navy. Now we have machinists.

MR. EDISON—Precisely. The more efficient our machinery is the less we shall need large bodies of men kept out of industry for the purpose of military drill. Industry trains machinists. And the nation which keeps its men at industry will have most money—most money to spend upon machinery in case war is forced upon it. And men trained in industry, and keeping at that industry even when their nation is at war, very well thus may serve a purpose quite as useful and as patriotic as they could serve if they enlisted as sailors, or put rifles on their shoulders, or packed parts of machine guns on their backs, then going to the zone of fire.

THE HISTORIAN—Secretary Daniels, do you think the board's request for the establishment of a large laboratory, or several laboratories, to be in the control of naval experts and to be used for research work, a wise one?

SECRETARY DANIELS—I think it one of the wisest suggestions ever made. I trust and believe that public opinion will range itself behind a well-devised plan and that it will find enthusiastic indorsement in Congress. The potential value of such a laboratory cannot be overestimated.

Out of this laboratory not only will come knowledge, but will come systematized effort in the application of the world's knowledge to our especial problems. This, in its turn, will mean the growth of knowledge. Even the failures made by the experimenters will mean much. I believe that most experimenters will tell you that those of their experiments which have failed have been of great instructive value.

MR. EDISON—Progressive individuals and great corporations in business have found research work a very profitable way of spending money. I know of a number of concerns which have started small laboratories, only to increase them steadily as they learned of their importance, and I know of no concern which, after the establishment of research work, has abandoned it. If research will pay the individual or the corporation in dollars and cents, it will pay the United States in efficiency.

SECRETARY DANIELS—There is no problem which the American cannot solve, and none which he will not solve if he be given time enough and the right facilities for work.

MR. EDISON—In the commercial world Americans have spent more than any-

...ne of time and money on experiments. Except, perhaps, Germany, American private corporations have spent millions on experiment to thousands spent in similar ways in any other nation. Private American corporations have spent far more in this way, during the past twenty years, than our Government has spent since the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

We shall not find the work of this board an expensive matter. Really, experiments made in advance are much more economical than those which are made in the face of emergency, after the need has arisen and is so urgent as to require haste, and those whose cost is greatest are those which are deferred until they are too late.

This is preparedness of the right sort, I am sure. The trouble with most military and naval preparedness is that it usually is acomplished by all sorts of waste, due principally to the fact that it has not been preceded by enough experimentation.

SECRETARY DANIELS—Working as we now are planning to work, it ought not to be difficult to avoid waste.

MR. EDISON—While the laboratory will cost money, it will save money, too, for it will do away with much fruitless expenditure, such as has been unavoidable under the old system.

The experimental tank at the Navy Yard saved a large proportion of the coal bill of the fleet and notably increased its speed. The lessons it has taught have benefited not only the navies of the world, but the world's merchant marine, as well. Think of what the experiments to come may do!

THE HISTORIAN (who had heard some talk in Washington of increasing difficulty in securing recruits for the navy)—Will this plan tend toward adding to the attractiveness of naval service among high-class young men?

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—It seems inevitable that it should do so. Indeed, I am convinced that it will have a powerful influence in that direction. It will help to make the navy understood and popular with the country at large.

The more young men know about it the more likely they will be to want to join it. Young Americans are getting to have a very high regard for training which will help them toward efficiency. Naval training will do that, and, because of this board, will do it more emphatically in the future than it has in the past.

It has been proved abroad that a certain amount of drill and discipline is a distinct help in civil life. And a young man entering the navy has a perfect opportunity to qualify among one of several lines sure to be valuable after the period of his enlistment ends.

The navy offers splendid technical training in mechanical and electrical engineering; it inevitably must tend to help immensely any youngster with a trend toward either. To young men who, through lack of opportunities, find themselves deficient in any of the common branches, it offers splendid opportunities to become proficient during their periods of enlistment.

SECRETARY DANIELS—The board, too, will be an influence toward peace. That is the essential thing that we, as a nation, most hope for.

Personally, I hope that after this great war the whole world will come together for peace, and I am sure that every member of the board emphatically shares his hope. I believe it will be an influence in that direction.

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—And every officer of the navy, too, sir. It is my belief that no idea could be more erroneous than that which credits the professional naval or military man with a desire for war. Why should they want war? If war comes, will they not be the ones to suffer the most whether we win or lose? We in the navy don't want war. Our hope is that we serve a very useful purpose in preventing it, and we regard a prepared army and navy as the best insurance against war.

I cannot believe that the best way to avoid it is to be unprepared to defend ourselves when so many nations are so competently prepared to make assault upon us.

THE HISTORIAN—What are some of the unsolved problems which the board most usefully can look into?

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—The rapid development of the aeroplane for land work makes its more complete development for naval work a real necessity. Everywhere the instruments of aviation are far less developed for shipwork than they could be and should be.

Although aero manufacturers, here and abroad, have done much, much remains to be done, and there is this satisfaction about aero development: whatever is done along that line by the armies and navies of the world, or by private manufacturers for army and navy use, will be of general benefit, for there can be no doubt that we are on the eve of the beginning of an era of air-navigation with a commercial as well as a military significance.

ADMIRAL TAYLOR—The European war has demonstrated the necessity for improving the protection of our ships against undersea attack by mines and submarines. Naval constructors all over the world are working on that problem.

The peril is not a new one, but the increase in torpedo size gives it some new aspects. Far from being obsolete, the torpedo has sunk several naval vessels during the course of this war.

We also must look to the development of surface craft which will serve protectively against submarines. In England small, very fast boats are being used as scouts and anti-submarine gunboats. In the navy we have dubbed them "terriers."

Destroyers have done good work, but craft even smaller have been most useful, and this presents a problem we must study.

We scarcely can hope to render capital ships immune from submarine attack, but it is not beyond reason to believe that we may make them less sensitive to it than they at present are.

Developments in the submarine itself seem likely ere long to do away with much of the present effectiveness of its small enemies. This puts us squarely face to face with the other problem. Already we have made experiments which indicate the possibility of great improvement.

In naval warfare this struggle has developed nothing so astonishing, so epoch-making, as was developed in our civil war when the Monitor met the Merrimac in Hampton Roads and the ironclad ship became a fact.

The various types of ships seem to have functioned about as they were expected to. None of them has really startled any of us.

We are continually making progress with big ships, although it must be slow, because of the immense expense and great time required for such experimentation.

MR. EDISON—The nation always has had reason to admire its navy's aptitude for seizing new ideas.

SECRETARY DANIELS—And, now that this board is fairly under way, new ideas, great ideas, will be plentiful.

Dowager Queen of Italy Writes War Poem

Verses by King Victor Emmanuel's Mother Are Being Read to Wounded in Hospitals

Dowager Queen Margherita of Italy, widow of King Humbert and mother of the present King Victor Emmanuel III., is the author of the patriotic war poem of which a translation in prose is printed herewith. Each verse has been printed separately in Italy and placed before the eyes of wounded soldiers lying in the hospitals in order to comfort them in their sufferings.

By Dowager Queen Margherita of Italy.

May your heroic endurance of pain be a splendid example to the growing youth of our land!

Like storm clouds, fearful dangers crowd upon us from all sides. But our soldiers, their eyes fixed on the Star of Italy shining in the heavens, remain imperturbable amid the unchained tempests.

O beautiful land of Italy, your children have given their all to thee willingly that they might see thee shine forth in even greater beauty. Remember this forever, and inscribe their names in golden letters in the pages of this history, where they have already inscribed their names in letters of blood.

God bless those who, forgetful of themselves, brave with serene courage the worst sufferings for the sake of their country!

O heroic defenders of Italy, may you find in this place rest from your glorious labors and draw therefrom renewed strength to stand new tests if your country summons you again.

O heroes, who endure in silence your bleeding wounds, remember, every one of you, that your country thrills with admiration for you, because she knows that your wounds are the price of her glory.

Honor, immortal honor, to those splendid legions of heroes, who, every day, every hour, offer to thee in silence their lives, O fatherland, and ask nothing in exchange but that thou mayst rise to greatness!

Flowers, living jewels of the smiling fields of Italy, borne by the breeze that blows from our azure sea, rain down in a flood of light upon the brows of our soldiers, and bring to them, in each of your petals, the gratitude of Italian hearts.

Love of country, sacred love, pure love, ardent love, in thy name every sacrifice becomes easy, every suffering bearable; thou softenest pain and instillest happiness into the souls which are thine wholly.

Every drop of blood shed for Italy becomes a precious jewel that will enrich Italy's crown.

The angels of God bear to the heavens the prayers of all the women of Italy for the soldiers, and each prayer comes back as a benediction on our Italian soil.

Italy, look upon thy children armed for thy glory, see the blood generously shed by them for thy honor, and be proud, for never wilt thou see children more devoted to their mother.

Dazzling sun that lightest this beautiful land with thy rays of gold, hast thou seen aught more marvelous than the heroism of the children of Italy?

Let all bow deeply when one of the brave men, wounded for the glory of our country, passes. No salute can honor their courage enough.

Blessed be the soldiers of Italy, whose calm heroism has realized the dream of so many centuries!

The flag is passing; salute it, all ye who have the good fortune of seeing it, and remember that in its folds are enshrined all the heroic deeds which have given to our country all her greatness.

Unfurl to the winds the banners of Italy, that all may see them, and say, as they are borne past: "We thank you, O brothers, O brave men; it is through you that our glorious colors are clothed in new and imperishable glory!"

Faith and love of country united lend wings to the soul and rise in strong flight toward all that is true, good, beautiful, great.

May all who have seen the Italy of today and felt all the greatness of the nation's soul, rejuvenated by the heroic exploits of her children, give thanks to God for such good fortune.

Italy, sacred name, sweet name, thou fliest to the lips of the soldier of iron, vigilantly guarding our Alps, and to the lips of the hardy mariner who defends thy shores and the sea which is thine; both drink in from thy name the energy for the sublimest of sacrifices.

When the children of thy children, O brave men, look upon the scars of your glorious wounds, they will dream of deserving some day the gratitude of their country, as you have deserved it, heroic defenders of Italy.

THE railway system of Japan is practically a Government monopoly, only 265.58 miles of railway being privately owned on March 31, 1915, (the latest date for which statistics are available,) out of a total mileage of 5,944. It is reported that the Imperial Government Railway Bureau has planned to construct 80 miles and 52 chains of new lines in the fiscal year 1915-16 at an estimated cost of 8,543,859 yen, ($4,200,022.) The Government lines are slowly being extended to tap all portions of the country where industry, agriculture, manufacturing, forestry, and mining are so far advanced as to require a ready means of transportation to the central markets. It is intended to construct on an average about 200 miles of new lines a year until such time as the country will no longer require any great extension of the existing system.

The great arid wastes of Persia would lead one to believe that the country does not produce sufficient grain to supply the needs of its population. Such, however, is not the case, and considerable quantities of grain are exported each year. The principal grains grown are wheat, barley, and rice. Corn is planted in small quantities, but is only used for roasting ears. Oats and rye are seldom sown. Except along the Caspian coast Persian agriculture is dependent almost entirely on irrigation. The agricultural implements used in Persia are of the most primitive kind. Plows are made from forks of small trees with the addition of a share of iron. It is stated to be doubtful, however, whether the yield of grain would be greatly increased by using modern plows, as there is no sod and this crude implement seems to stir the soil fairly well.

Guncotton Builds a Boom Town Overnight

Rush of War Orders at du Pont Plants Transforms Hopewell, Va., from a Desolate Settlement to a City Where Fortunes Are Being Made—and Lost

WHEN I walked into the little "tonsorial parlor" next door to the hotel in Petersburg, Va., I found the barber fairly gloating over the front page of a Richmond paper. Elation was written all over him; he was so pleased with what he saw that he didn't even notice my entrance.

"Well, what makes you so happy?" I asked, not being one of those refined persons who discourage conversation in barbers. (In fact, I like it.)

He held out the paper before me and pointed to the headline:

GREAT ARTILLERY DUEL IN FRANCE—ALLIES LAVISH WITH AMMUNITION,

I didn't see anything in this to make a Petersburg barber particularly happy. But it was all explained in a moment. He had four lots only half a mile from the du Pont guncotton plants at Hopewell. He had bought them three days before at $75 apiece. The hotel proprietor had offered him a hundred for them yesterday, "and he figured they'd be worth a hundred and fifty tomorrow.

And if these artillery duels kept up—!

That is the sort of thing you hear on every corner in Petersburg today. This little town—indeed, all this section of Virginia—is Hopewell-mad. Everybody there has had his imagination hit by a boom that is, in many ways, the most remarkable in the history of this booming, fast-living nation.

In hotel corridors and along the street one finds little knots of men with their heads close together, talking excitedly and looking at blue prints marked off into squares and streets. If one crowds close enough he is apt to hear snatches of talk such as "building eight more units," "du Pont's going to buy a thousand acres along the railroad," "Russia put in an order for fifty million dollars' worth of guncotton," "trolley line going to operate before Christmas," and so on. Some of these men are poor and hope to be rich; some are rich and hope to be richer. All of them are full of confidence that Hopewell is not a mere mushroom growth, that it is going to last.

How long the prosperity will endure nobody can tell, but there is no doubt that fabulous profits have been made by the lucky ones. Any business man in Petersburg can tell you of several clean-ups that sounds like the stories of the Forty-that sound like the stories of the Forty-

The most eloquent bare fact is that last February the land that is now the settlement of Hopewell was not worth on the market more than $10,000. Now the market value of it is rated at anywhere between a million and a million and a half. And this does not include the outlying portions that are being cut up into suburban lots.

In March there was only one house on the opposite side of the track from the du Pont plant, where the heart of the settlement now is. There were no buildings anywhere around except those put up by the company down at City Point, on the angle of land formed by two rivers. Nobody thought that it would be anything more than a company lay-out. It was not till the beginning of April that a few canny folk waked up to what was going to happen.

Hopewell is nine miles from Petersburg, down where the James and Appomattox Rivers come together. In its natural state it is one of the dreariest, most desolate spots in the world. Until this year it had been dreary and desolate ever since the first settlers came from England in 1710. Today its main street is more crowded than Fifth Avenue or Broadway. There is not a more cosmopolitan or vivid spot in America. Greeks, Italians, Bohemians, and Russians, and many other peoples jostle one another on the narrow streets, and in among them are a goodly number of the native white men and black men of America. But no Germans, Austrians, or Turks! The company has cleared them all out.

The du Pont plants employ at least 18,000 men in the manufacture of guncotton and in the construction of new buildings. A reasonable estimate of the weekly pay to these men is $400,000, which means $800,000 on every bi-weekly pay day—most of it turned loose on Hopewell, and the rest of it on Petersburg. The week goes on twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. One hundred and fifty carloads of material—for manufacture and consumption—come in every day; and fifty carloads of guncotton go out.

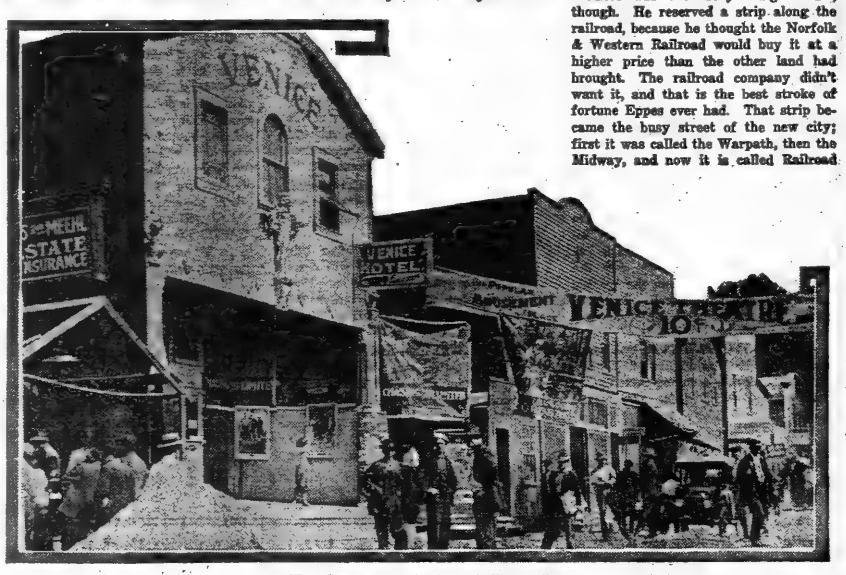
One thousand bales of cotton linters—the part of the cotton that is left on the seed after ginning and is then taken off in the cottonseed-oil mills—are consumed in the du Pont plants at Hopewell every day. This represents half the country's total supply of linters, and the demand here has sent up the price from about one cent to four cents a pound.

And all the while there is building, building, building. Cars loaded with steel, galvanized iron, lumber and the ingredients for reinforced concrete roll into the great du ont inclosure—1,600 acres surrounded by a high fence and patrolled night and day by guards. Two guncotton plants are already in operation; an acid plant, said to be the largest sulphuric acid plant in the world, is nearly done; and a third guncotton plant is under way. Thousands of skilled and unskilled workmen—nobody outside knows just how many thousands—are kept going at top speed putting up the buildings—not only structures for the manufacturing itself, but an ice plant, an electric light plant, a steam plant, and a pumping plant. They are building cinder roads and streets through the property. There are fifty miles of railroad sidings in the enclosure.

But it is the real estate end of the project that interests the people of the surrounding country. And it is in real estate that fortunes have been made in Hopewell. Of course, fortunes may be lost there too. That remains to be seen. The most enthusiastic boomers admit that it all depends upon whether the du Pont industry is permanent or temporary. Nobody expects the production of explosives to go on at the present hectic rate, but many of the local lights with a reputation for prudence think there will always be a big production of high explosives at Hopewell. To back up this opinion they point to the substantial construction of the du Pont plants and to the double-tracking of the Norfolk & Western Railroad branch line from Petersburg to Hopewell.

A man named Eppes, whose family were among the settlers of 1710, has lived at Hopewell all his life. Until last Spring he was a land-poor farmer. He had two tracts, something over ninety acres altogether, that he decided to sell in April. He got $80,000 for ninety acres. People thought the man who paid it was crazy. Eppes thought he had made a good deal, but today he is cursing his poor judgement; for it is on those same ninety acres that the settlement has built up, and if he had waited four or five months he could have sold for a million.

There was one lucky thing he did, though. He reserved a strip along the railroad, because he thought the Norfolk & Western Railroad would buy it at a higher price than the other land had brought. The railroad company didn't want it, and that is the best stroke of fortune Eppes ever had. That strip became the busy street of the new city; first it was called the Warpath, then the Midway, and now it is called Railroad Avenue. The ground leases along Railroad Avenue bring Eppes in five thousand dollars a month. He hasn't had to bother to put up the buildings—the leaseholders do that.



The Amusement Section of Hopewell.

There was never a worse road—there couldn't be—than the one from Petersburg to Hopewell. At least that is what you think until you see the stretches of earth that pass for streets in Hopewell itself. Not only are they not streets; roads would be a fancy name for them. They are more like ridges and ravines occasionally relieved by mud puddles. Nobody has time for street or road building; all energies are devoted to putting up houses.

Feverishly they build houses, but they haven't begun to catch up with the demand. Hundreds of tents are rented out for $10 and $12 dollars a month by owners of land just beyond the built-up section. Five thousand men have to go to and from Petersburg every day, because they can't get any place to sleep in Hopewell. The Norfolk & Western runs its trains in two or three sections of ten cars each, and yet can't seem to get enough rolling stock; the workmen not only fill the inside of the cars, they cling to the platforms and hang on to the windows like flies.

In June a Methodist preacher who had a little farmhouse in Hopewell sold eighty acres for $80,000. He kept eight or nine acres, and not long ago he was offered $19,000 for that. Incidentally, the preacher, while he got the $80,000 from the purchasers in the June transaction, made them pay him $1,000 extra for his growing crop.

A Roman Catholic priest, on the day of the first auction sale of lots last Spring, asked a railroad contractor, a friend of his, to buy ten or twelve lots for him because he couldn't attend the sale himself. The contractor told him he was foolish to buy, but the priest stuck to his request. Toward the end of the sale the contractor bought twelve lots for $1,250. Two weeks later the auctioneer came to the contractor and offered him $12,000 for the same lots. Whereupon the contractor ran to the priest and advised acceptance.

"No," said the priest, "if they're so anxious I'll hold those lots a little longer."

In August he received an offer of $25,000 for the twelve lots, and refused that. And he has not sold yet.

That shows the confidence the people who live there have in the future of Hopewell. They can give the stranger all sorts of reasons for their faith. If their predictions turn out, they'll be put down as wise men; and, of course, as fools if the bubble bursts.

The du Pont people, like Uncle Remus's rabbit, "ain't sayin' nothin'." Maybe they don't know themselves what's going to happen. Evidently they didn't foresee the extent of the development up to date, for they had to go into the market long after they bought their first land and buy more at a greatly advanced price.

The men in authority at the du Pont plants have two principal occupations: one is making explosives and the other is refusing to be interviewed

Politically Hopewell is a fiction. There isn't any such place. It is just part of Prince George County. It has grown up since the Legislature adjourned, and there's been no chance to incorporate it. Even if the Legislature were in session now, folks say Hopewell couldn't be incorporated because it hasn't enough voting citizens in it. Out of a population of from 30,000 to 40,000, there are said to be less than fifty voters.

Up to a little while ago Hopewell was as wide open as a Western mining town ever was. Roulette on the sidewalks, and liquor sold openly, though the county was legally dry. Fights on the street every minute, and every other man carrying a pistol. Things got so bad that the State authorities in Richmond were disturbed and sent for some of the leading citizens. The result was that the local Chief of Police—put into his position by the unofficial action of a business men's league—was arrested on a charge of bribery and the State sent some of its own officers to keep a watch. But the main reliance was placed, and still is placed, on the force of police and detectives employed by the du Pont Company. This force is under the command of Major Sylvester, formerly head of the Washington Police Department.

Despite its wonderful prosperity, Hopewell is today about the most dilapidated-looking settlement ever seen anywhere. The houses are of the flimsiest frame construction, except those put up by the du Ponts at City Point and some of the newer ones in the outlying parts, and everything is unkempt and dirty. But the leading citizens say it is going to change. A few brick buildings are beginning to go up already, and the "suburban" houses—some of them—have a look that approaches neatness.

Meanwhile the real estate deals, acreage sales, and auction sales go on. Buyers crowd over one another. The Hopewell boosters tell the visitor proudly that not a lot has been resold yet at a loss to the seller. The latest movement is a campaign, started by Petersburg business men, to annex Hopewell to Petersburg. They say that that will solidify the prosperity of the remarkable mushroom city. But at the bottom of it all is gun-cotton. And the hopes of Hopewell are built upon the continuance of the du Pont plant for the purpose of supplying explosives to the United States and foreign Governments after the present war is over.

Herr Reicher Plans to Do in America What He Did in Germany—Repertoire to be International and Include Ibsen and Gerhart Hauptmann

BY rights I should be dead, for I belong to German stage history," said Herr Emanuel Reicher to a TIMES representative last week. "It was my part years ago to meet with incredulity and ridicule in my efforts to supply the German workingman with a prodigal return of dramatic art for a most economical expenditure. Now, I feel that I have done enough for Germany, and I wish to offer my services and my experience to the American people, for whom I have always had the highest regard."

Herr Reicher is the director of a two-fold movement, which he calls "The Modern Stage" and "The American People's Theatre." The plan is the result of a long postponed intention to attempt in America something of the same sort as the "Free Stage" and "People's Theatre" movements which have been successful in the Freie Buehne of Otto Brahm in Berlin, in the Théâtre Libre of Antoine in Paris, and in the Art Theatre of Stanislavski in Moscow.

Tentative beginnings were made in this direction last year, but owing to unfavorable conditions Herr Reicher was prevented from carrying out the plan as he had conceived it. Two successful productions indeed were made—that of "Elga" of Gerhart Hauptmann, with Fräulein Hedwig Reicher in the leading part, and of "John Gabriel Borkman" of Ibsen, in which the title rôle was played by Herr Reicher himself.

"I was told that theatres would be going begging," he explained, "that first-class artists would be available for a song. Happily for the rest of the dramatic profession, the contrary proved to be the case, so that our five presentations were limited to two. But this season I have looked about me to some purpose, and all arrangements for seven productions have been made.

"Twenty-five years ago," he continued, "I was interested in the founding of the Freie Volksbuehne in Berlin, which followed by five years our successful launching of the Freie Buehne for the presentation of masterpieces of dramatic art of all countries, which had been overlooked or ignored by the conservative theatres. Our 'People's Stage' presented the same class of play, but presented it to the people, to the artisan with his wife, to the clerk, the secretary, the Government employe, the shop employe, to the great public whose pleasures must be strictly limited to the small-priced amusements.

"This great class had, on that account, been rather looked down upon by the managers. A play with an intellectual appeal was dubbed 'out of their depth.' 'The working man?' said the manager. 'Oh, he wants his cheap amusement, of course, but to please him, the amusement itself must be cheap, too.' We were laughed out of court with our proposition to give him the best for his 50 pfennigs.

"How soon our faith was justified! The Freie Volksbuehne was an immediate success, and just before the war the Verein had a membership of over 120,000, and the theatre which it had built was not big enough to hold its members, who had to be accommodated at extra matinées at other houses. The criticisms and comments that I have heard from this public are extraordinary. So penetrating, so treffend"—there is no good translation for treffend, and Herr Reicher was speaking German.

"Our present plan," he continued, "is a combination of these two ideas—the Free Stage and the People's Stage. I am almost more interested in the second development. President Wilson said recently that the roots of the strength of a country are deep down in the people, and that is my opinion. It is to the plain people of this great country that I wish to appeal. To the rich—yes; to them, too, for their appreciation, for their interest, intellectual and financial. We are going to make an appeal to all."

The plan by which this widespread movement is to be carried out has been worked out in full detail. Seven productions of modern plays are to be made in the Garden Theatre, beginning Tuesday, the 16th of November, with "When the New Line Blooms," a comedy, new to New York, by Björnstjerne Björnson. This piece will be presented for one week to the subscribers to "The Modern Stage." Admission will be by previous subscription only, though extra single tickets may be purchased by subscribers.

"Everything must have a beginning," explained Herr Reicher. "When it was first proposed to me by my friends that the moment for launching my project in America had arrived, they urged upon me a guarantee to cover a possible deficit. But I don't want to have any deficit to cover, and so the subscription system has been adopted to insure our beginning."

After the play has run for a week, comes the turn of the People's Theatre. The same production will be run for three weeks at prices which are within the means of even the most modest incomes. But a membership system is in force here, too. A card of membership must be obtained by those who wish to attend these performances. These cards are free and are to be had at the numerous pay stations, at least 200 in number, which are distributed through all quarters of the city.

To obtain admission to the theatre a stamp is purchased for 25 cents at one of these stations, which is then attached to the back of the membership card. A coupon is presented to the buyer at the same time. He presents this and his card at the theatre, chooses his seats, pays the difference, and has a round hole punched through his stamp. After a three weeks' run, the bill is changed, and the second production is put on for one week for the members of "The Modern Stage," and subsequently runs three weeks for those of the "People's Theatre." A monthly magazine, with interesting matter about the play, portraits of the author and of the leading exponents of the characters, criticism, and comment on the work, is issued and sent fourteen days before each production to subscribers free of charge, and supplied as a program in the theatre. Textbooks of the plays are sold, in Continental fashion, in the lobby.

"It would be an excellent thing for native dramatists," said Herr Reicher, "if all plays were sold in cold type in the theatres in which they are presented. The volatile pleasure of the moment having evaporated, the work could then be judged on its merits and we should often see what very poor stuff it has been.

"One of my greatest problems has been the choice of plays. I am most desirous of encouraging home talent, and it will be seen from the list of plays to be presented that American authors have a large share in the honors.

"One of the foremost objects of our scheme is the opportunity it affords to young authors. The true playwright looks neither to the boxes nor to the gallery, but writes from his heart what he has to say, ignoring the final direction. It is proverbially hard for a nameless author to dispose of work which strikes out a new line. He notes the success of the machine-made play, its finality the chief factor in that success; and he must be made of uncommon stuff if he will risk the chance of acceptance by obstinately persisting in his own originality. Give him a chance of production for the unusual play and save him from the mechanical work to which his Pegasus must submit to live. This is another of the things we wish to do.

"Playwriting must develop in order to save the theatre from the moving pictures. At present, effort seems to be concentrated upon making plays more and more striking pictorially, or more and more realistic. The legitimate stage can never be either as pictorial or as realistic as the cinematograph productions. It is a waste of effort to strive along these lines alone. The stage must fall back upon the spoken word in order to preserve, not only its pre-eminence, but its very existence. How happy I should be if our movement for the presentation of international plays of unusual appeal should lead the managers to lift the play itself to its true position of domination.

"Of tremendous importance is the company selected to produce these plays. I have had a very large number of applicants for positions in my company. I am convinced that there is an abundance of dramatic talent in this country. Unfortunately existing conditions have not given it the best chances of development. The insistence of the managers upon giving an actor only the one kind of rôle is a constant shackling of his talent, which leads to many evils.

"The young aspirant is told, 'You played a comic servant last year. This season we have no comic servant part for you.' 'But I can play other characters!' protests the applicant. It is no use. The public has been taught to accept an artist in one line of parts only, and he is expected to stick to them closely. This is fatal to his growth as an actor, but it leads also to other evils. It concentrates attention solely upon the actor, never upon the character which he portrays, which state of affairs in itself leads to constant hampering of his powers. He must show himself in the aspect familiar to the public, and he labors to give every part the same familiar characteristics, whether the author has written them into it or not. Versatility is rigorously repressed, characterization is ignored.

"More than this, the public invests its favorite with the personality of the rôles he plays. The hero is believed to be heroic at the breakfast table, the villain villainous in his daily life. The heroine must be a lovely character, and the adventuress must scheme in her sleep. We have young women in our company who will play elderly ones and young men who will do grandfathers. We shall not attempt to let older actors portray youth. Their struggle to do this in real life is too pitiful as it is. I have engaged an older woman for suitable parts whose efforts to preserve the shattered remnants of her youth went to my heart. Bitter experience had forced her to this transparent subterfuge.

"I am no believer in the star system, and I will have none of it. My daughter and I have no intention of monopolizing the leading rôles, and it is part of my plan to redistribute the parts in a play from time to time among the cast, so that the exponent of a smaller rôle may have his chance at the big one, and vice versa. This will help to draw attention from the personality of the actor and direct it, as I wish, toward the part.

"Our repertoire is as international as I can make it. We commence with a Norwegian comedy which I find peculiarly fitted to American domestic conditions. The second play is a drama of Gerhardt Hauptmann, 'The Weavers,' which will be presented on the 21st of December. January, the 25th, will see a bill of one-act plays, 'Madonna Dianora,' of Hugo von Hoffmansthal, a romantic lyric which will serve to introduce this extraordinary writer to our stage. Later I hope to present more of his unique work.

"This will be followed by 'The Girl in the Coffin,' a representative drama by Theodore Dreiser; and by two one-act pieces by David Pinski, 'The King,' and 'The Dollar.' Pinski is a Russian Jew who has passed many years in America, and of whom I predict great things. In February the offering will be Ibsen's powerful 'Rosmersholm,' and in March, three one-act plays by Percival Liede, an American who has just had a long play accepted by A. H. Wood. In April we launch a new comedy by another American, Zoe Akins, a thing with all the gay sparkle of a French salon piece; and our last production will be 'Uncle Vanja,' of Anton Tschechov, the brilliant Russian who has been associated with the Art Theatre in Moscow.

"Next year we hope to continue our international policy, and plans are being made for the presentation of 'Nachtasyl' of Gorky; 'Marquise,' one of the best and least known comedies of Sardou; 'Gloria,' by d'Annunzio; 'Der Bund der Jugend,' Ibsen's only lustspiel and first prose play; 'Ueber die Kraft,' by Bjornsen, a big drama of Hauptmann, and I hope a long play by David Pinski, perhaps his 'Maria Magdalena.'

"All these will, of course, be given in English, and I long to do some Shakespeare also—Shakespeare from the psychological side, for he is certainly as great a psychologist as Ibsen. Although he has been obscured and overlaid with too elaborate costume and scenery, I should like to include something of Hoffmansthal, whom I consider the d'Annunzio of Germany.

"We are in the hands of our friends. We are neither a charity nor a Board of Education, and yet we are something of both. We do not beg, but we will not look gift horses in the mouth. If any of our friends wish to help us, they may do so by taking the boxes for 'The Modern Stage,' at any figure which their generosity prompts, or by purchasing seats in the People's Theatre in quantities, which they may distribute to their employes or to those who are interested in the drama for its own sake.

Octave Thanet Flays the Advanced Woman

The Well-Known Writer Calls Attention Frankly to Some of the Dangers Now Confronting American People from New Movements and Modern Ideas

MISS ALICE FRENCH (Octave Thanet) of Davenport, Iowa, conspicuous as a writer of short stories, but best known, perhaps, through her novel, "The Man of the Hour," recently expressed herself to a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES in regard to some of the dangers now confronting the American people.

"Not in all the history of our nation has there been an hour more fraught with grave possibilities than this," said Miss French. "The terror of it, the immense sorrow of it, is in all our hearts under all our smiles. We believe that war will be averted. There were other times in our history when it was not averted.

"By the measure of our hope is this hour less portentous, and by that alone; for the possibilities are more hideous and on a scale so gigantic as to palsy the imagination. But there is one thing which already we know; though the worst should come, we shall meet it as a united people. Though we escape now, there are many threatening difficulties in the future; and it seems impossible that our own unwisdom shall not bring us into conflict with some nation, sooner or later.

"I believe that neutrality has its limits and I do not accept the platform of the Women's Peace Party. There has grown up among women a blind horror of war, a blind devotion to peace. In time of trouble the innocent peace-loving bystander may prove to be a poor thing for safety. Our historical failures in national preparedness for war I should class as sins of blind optimism and cowardly indolence.

"In these trying times, with more than half the world aflame with war, it is well to remember that if the lessons of history mean anything at all, a people never were permitted to have peace unless they were willing to fight for it. Picture a half-equipped navy beaten down, a handful of regulars annihilated, our great cities obliged to ransom themselves from fire and sword with millions, our families in danger of the invaders' insolence, do you think then that we shall feel that we have played a noble part, refusing to countenance war by believing in its possibility? Or will the talk about the grand moral figure the United States presents by her defenselessness and refusal to arm be any comfort?

"The safety of our country should be our first consideration. The love of the human heart may include the home, the family, the town, the country, but when it tries to take in the whole world there ensues a certain cold feebleness. We lose the individual touch. There is a lack of patriotism among our modern women. War is not altogether terrible, and is sometimes needed to cut out the cancers of our soul.

"Are the women in the clubs of today as good women as their mothers? They think they are better—but are they? In their advanced views some are advocating radical changes in the institutions of home and marriage. While the great majority of our women are opposed to such havoc-making doctrines, the majority is less today than it was yesterday, and even among the most conservative we find the new doctrines of frank speaking.

"My generation cannot feel that levelling all the outer fortifications of reserve is going to help defend the citadel of virtue; nor that trying to know as much as possible about vice and telling all we know is going to make us purer and purer. No nation can be great if its women are not noble and highminded, as well as pure. A small pattern of a woman is like a little barking dog, always under the wheels. All the devotion, all the self-sacrifice in the world cannot make a good mother out of a fool.

"It is often said that women are in the world to help the men. This does not seem to me to reach the inward truth. Women are in this world for the same reason that men are in it—to help the children. Thus to bequeath to each generation a greater moral wealth. No woman may live only for herself.

"If the wider life of woman today does not make her a truer comrade to her husband, a wiser guide to her child, a gentler helper of those who bear heavy burdens, a better friend, a better citizen, the wider life is a failure; and the sooner the gates are put up again the better. If the wider life enlighten the conscience of women, it is justified. There probably never was so much conscience and pity and general yearning idealism on the tramp as there is today—but there does not seem to be very much more common sense.

"In Denver, at a General Federation of Women's Clubs fifteen years ago, there was a discussion about strikes and industrial discontent. The question was asked, "What do you do about strikes in Colorado?" Then arose Britomart from the further recesses of the far gallery where Colorado hospitality obliged her delegation to sit; in a clarion voice she called out: 'We do not have strikes in Colorado; we have woman suffrage!' Within the year the biggest, the bloodiest, the most brutally fought strike this country had ever seen began in Colorado. And Colorado has held that bad eminence in strikes ever since. But, there is industrial ferment and fury the world over; so it were not fair to demand that Colorado be the shining exception.

"But it is fair to demand of the women who ask the wider life that at least the wider life should not make us worse women. For women have in charge the ideals of the race. To them is committed the divine fire. What they are, not what they say, will keep the torch aflame or let it miserably dwindle to a smudge. I have no illusions about my sex—I have been one of it too long. Nor have I any illusions about the celebrated feminine intuition—it has fooled me too often.

"But at least there are certain squalid sins which centuries of prohibition have deprived of the power to tempt decent women. I don't say that they did not tempt women once, nor that they may not, if the ideas of some alleged emancipators of women obtain, tempt the woman of the future; but I do say out of my woman's experience and my woman's heart that they do not tempt good women now.

"There is another point wherein the grandmother and the mother of the past, the much-derided Victorian, has the advantage. She might have personal vanity, but she had no vanity for her sex; she quite believed that as man had tougher muscles he had a broader and stronger intellect. In the old countries such a view is still prevalent.

"The Victorians had 'that ripened temper which takes everything into account,' as the wise Swiss expresses it. Neither (for that reason) did they mistake words for things. We do. It is one of the vicious mental processes of our sex today. Another is our inability to see the real values of things. We have in general no moral sense of proportion. Whatever we want ourselves becomes to our myopic minds the most important thing on earth.

"That is the explanation for the English militant's violent unreason. There was nothing so important as votes for women. When the great war came along they instantly became obedient patriots; they had been awed by something too big for their fury. Even so thunder will drown the spiteful crackle of fire crackers! But, recalling all their unbridled tampering with bricks and stones and fires and Ten Commandments, one understands the remark of George Meredith's Pilgrim: 'I expect,' quoth he, 'that woman will be the last thing civilized by man!'

"One vice of our age has affected men and women alike; insidious and deceitful, it has softened the fibre of our consciences until we no longer seem to have the nerve to make a stern decision. Sentiment is a beautiful and precious thing. Sentimentality is neither beautiful nor precious, although always posing as both, and there is hardly any vice so dangerous.

"We in our sentimentality accuse society of every injury which is done to it. We cringe at the thought of hanging the most abominable murderer. We have expended more money than Germany spent for her peerless army on our amazing pension laws.

"Our pity concerns itself with almost every class of suffering human being, except the taxpayer, who really seems to need it most. For if there is one thing on which women pride themselves it is their 'municipal housekeeping'; and alas! sometimes municipal reform is more costly than graft! Probably because nothing is so merciless as a good woman who has not the sense to see when to hold her hand.

"Our sentimentality is responsible for most of our dubious 'reforms.' And it has defeated some of our most efficient ones. It is always strong in demanding every kind of municipal improvement, regardless of expense. One of its unexpressed axioms is that we cannot have too much of a good thing. If little is good for the public weal, more is better, and the limit is best of all. But every one who has ever taken calomel knows better.

"The mischief done by such misspent ardors is not that they are adopted in their entirety by the great majority of women; they are not; not in Iowa anyhow; but while the bombs of an airship may not destroy a town, bits of the poisonous thing may wound and kill. Compassion is a high moral quality, but not the highest or the only. There are others of the nobility—courage, justice, honesty, loyalty, reverence, honor, all are valuable in our home life and in our national life. We hear today a vast deal about moral courage; it might be well to hear a little more about physical courage, too."

Of the pacifists who think almost any kind of peace is better than the mildest kind of war Miss French said:

"There is China. China has always been a peaceful nation. Chinese mothers didn't raise their boys to be soldiers; no, they raised them to take orders from little Japanese boys whose mothers did raise them to be soldiers.

"The present war has produced results that a half century of previous effort could not produce, such as the suppressing of the vodka traffic. Everywhere there has been an awakening to the primitive, basic virtues—courage, loyalty, self-sacrifice. The well-regulated army is a school today, teaching many trades; best of all, teaching obedience, cleanliness, order, courage, and love of country. In this war temperance and democracy are being taught as no preachers could teach them."

Miss French said she hoped the organized women of the country would throw whatever influence they may have to provide adequate national protection for the future. She urged them to study their country's history, government, resources, to inform themselves at first hand regarding the condition of the army and navy. "Work now," she said. "Safety first, then peace."

To Americanize Foreign-Born Who Live Here

Prominent Men and Women Form Committee to Secure Facilities for Immigrants to Become Assimilated Into Our Life and Imbued with Patriotism

ANNOUNCEMENT last week of the work that has been done and is to be done among immigrants by the National Americanization Committee, a group of men and women from all over the country who have been distinguished in various fields of activity, called forth much inquiry as to the nature of the campaign which the committee is beginning and the particular reasons which led to the movement.

The movement is a continuation and a great extension of the work of the National Americanization Day Committee, composed of the same people, but organized for a limited and temporary purpose; and just what the committee is trying to do, why it is doing some things and not others, and why it is employing the methods selected was told to a TIMES reporter by Frank Trumbull, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and of the National Americanization Committee.

"The Amer ization movement, as represented by our national committee," said Mr. Trumbull, "is quite as much for the American-born as for the foreign-born. Above all, it is not a mere capitalizing of one or more of the many forms of popular fear which the European war has bequeathed to this country. The reactions of the war on this country, the conditions here that have been intensified (I do not say created) have been grave, and with some of them it is highly probable we must continue to deal.

"But those of us who have for some years been watching the currents of our national life, watching thousands of immigrants from Southern Europe daily coursing through Ellis Island and passing over the country to various communities to man American factories and to make foreign villages in the midst of our cities and on the edges of our towns—those of us that have seen these streams yearly settling more and more deeply into their own narrow channels unregarded by the broad navigable streams of American life, see in the present situation only a sudden clarifying of a condition that has long prevailed and has long contained all the possibilities of denationalization.

"I do not follow those philosophers who see in the European war a gigantic expression of that kind of suffering from which newer and purer forces of humanity are to be wrought. I am quite unable to read these hopeful symbols in that terrible battlefield. But with America it is different. In America the war also has produced suffering—an upheaval of our social solidarity—which we find a much frailer, much more tenuous substance than we had supposed.

"But out of this upheaval America is to reap only good—a true understanding of our national values, a chastened realization that a nation built up of many peoples of widely different traditions will not of itself fall together into a unified nation, and finally an agreement upon domestic policies that will really conserve and translate from age to age, to all citizens of America in every locality, the spirit and the safeguards as well of those fundamental principles of Americanism formulated by our first statesmen and standing today in our Constitution.

"This is simply a very opportune time to realize a long-neglected policy. We are not taking stock of our American citizenship merely to see who are not in place and where there are inequalities in the line—a kind of patriotic policing. On the other hand, there is no chosen band of American patriots sufficiently like-minded to perform this immediate task.

"We have been a patriotic people, yes—by tradition and reputation and habit. But in the course of years we have left the expression of our patriotism, along with a good deal of the sentiment itself, to those whom we have been inclined to consider unsophisticated. We have left it to them to attend Fourth of July celebrations and sing the Star-Spangled Banner. Our patriotism we have turned into philosophy—into meditations on the destinies of nations, the values of democracy, the theories of government and society.

"I believe we must return to something simpler and more vigorous. And I believe that the insight we are now getting into the disruption and uneven growth that has resulted from a lack of national consciousness in this country will work unendingly to our good.

"It has come home to us that we are a country full of unassimilated groups within—groups with varying social ideals, varying languages, varying ideas of American citizenship and loyalty to America. But the situation before us is in all essentials the same which has confronted us for years and which we have refused to face.

"This is a very complex matter. But certain aspects of it and certain methods by which it can be attained are very definite and simple, and it is these with which we must first of all be concerned. There are really three groups of the foreign-born in this country. There are a very few educated in our language and institutions, often possessing double loyalties and sometimes dual citizenship. There are many who, though born abroad are naturalized citizens, speaking our language, knowing our institutions, whose Americanism is as intense as ours. They belong shoulder to shoulder with us, and it is an insult to group them separately.

"But there are hundreds of thousands of others without knowledge of our language, with no understanding of our social or industrial standards, and no approach to citizenship. Some of them have been here for years. They operate American machines and receive American pay envelopes. But they are not American nor are they on the road to becoming so. In many cases they have not even by this time acquired an interest in becoming so.

"There are two things that they need to be shown. First, that it is to their advantage to become American citizens, maintaining American standards of living, able to understand the English language; and, secondly, that America has a right to expect them to become Americanized, and—granted the facilities for it are provided—the right to require it.

"Now, this is the crux of the whole matter—the facilities have not been provided. And this is a fundamental reason for the existence of our National Americanization Committee. The immigrant living and working in this country owes something to this Government. But if he owes us Americanization, we owe him the means to attain it. In the process of Americanization let us not forget the burden of proof is on us—our public schools, our industries, our communities.

"Even in the States with the heaviest immigration there are not night school facilities for more than one immigrant in ten. How many industries require or are interested in having American standards or the English language prevail among their workmen? How many communities make sure that American standards of living prevail at the immigrant end of town, make sure that it has the same water supply, the same system of garbage disposal, the same enforcement of housing laws? In how many courts is the immigrant assured by proper impartial interpreters of that equality before the law due all residents of this country?

"Americanization is a complex matter and there are many approaches to it. It must be a slow and thorough process if it is to be complete. But there can be no doubt about the first steps—the English language and the principles of American citizenship.

"Our committee is therefore waging a nation-wide campaign to carry these two things through every community with foreign-born population. Last Fourth of July, through the activities of this committee, was made an Americanization Day in one hundred and six cities and citizenship receptions were held to emphasize the common interests of loyalty of native and foreign-born citizens alike. The reactions of these celebrations have been wide-reaching. They made many a community conscious for the first time of its foreign-born population as an integral part of its social fabric. Cities and towns awakened to the fact that instead of being the American centres which they had for years complacently taken for granted that they were, their population had been doubled or trebled, and that perhaps twenty nationalities and twenty tongues were dwelling among them—sometimes even outnumbering the native population.

"Detroit is one of these American cities that has had in recent years to readjust its opinion of itself and that has not even yet quite succeeded in so doing. Not very many years ago Detroit was a conservative town, of front yards and moderate pursuits, of quiet French-American traditions. But the automobile industry and immigration had by 1910 made the town a bustling business centre of over 400,000 inhabitants. And now, in 1915, Detroit is a city of over 700,000 population, with all that that implies in factory extension. And 75 per cent. of that population is either foreign-born or of foreign-born parentage.

"In Detroit and hundreds of other American towns with approximately the same history will the institutions and facilities that were adapted to, let us say, 100,000 American-born residents, meet the needs of a population of 400,000 or 700,000, half of which is foreign-born? Can we have American cities and towns until they do? In hundreds of places cities that are now cosmopolitan industrial centres have practically the same school facilities, the same lack of night schools, the same housing provisions, the same popular attitude they had ten or fifteen years ago when these facilities met their needs.

"Up the Hudson there is a typically aristocratic little town that prides itself upon two things—its dignified tradition and its practical progressiveness in town management.

"A year or two ago the town secured a new water supply system. But the new system stopped short where the immigrant end of town began—though it was in the city limits. When the town expanded industrially the immigrants came, settled in the section that was pointed out to them as theirs, and stayed there—let alone by the Americans, quite unaffected by any progressive civic and sanitary measures, left to do their worst in that game in which they are supposed to excel, 'lowering the standard of American living.'

"Our committee does not blink the fact that there are many immigrants here that need to be stirred to some realization of their duties and obligations to America, and to the standards required by American residence, to say nothing of American citizenship. But, after all, checking up the offenders must always remain the least constructive effort of Government and society.

"The National Americanization Committee is making its first object, therefore, an extension of the facilities for adult immigrant education in night schools. As a nation we tell every immigrant that he can be a citizen of this country if he so desires, and if he can use the English language and prove to us that he is 'attached to the principles of the Constitution.' Very well. Then we must give him the means of learning English and forming this attachment. Until we do we shall have dual loyalties and dual citizenship and a train of social and industrial evils.

"Neither night schools nor the agitation for them is new. They have long been a respectable side line in public school extension work. They have never been a general, necessary, and inevitable part of a city system, a legitimate and important division in public policy.

"That is the new thing. And that represents the spirit and intention of the National Americanization Committee—to show communities everywhere the broad civic scope of this matter of educating its adult immigrants, make it the task of statesmanship and civic endeavor and lift it from the region of 'welfare' and philanthropy, where it has been side-tracked, into its rightful place as a fundamental part of our domestic policy.

"In working out this program in various communities the National Americanization Committee has, therefore, appealed with conviction to every force in the city life—to Government, Boards of Education, Chambers of Commerce, separate industries. The Detroit Board of Commerce, with the co-operation of the committee, conducted this Fall a four weeks' campaign to flood the night schools with the non-English-speaking workmen.

"The results were (1) an increase of 153 per cent. in the registration of former years; (2) a deepened understanding of the meaning of Americanism and American citizenship among foreign-born and native alike throughout Detroit.

"These are the methods Detroit industries used to get their men to the night schools:

"1. A Preferential Policy.—Men were assembled and told that from this time on men that were going to night school and trying to learn English would be preferred—the first to be promoted the last to be laid off, the first to be taken back.

"2. Compulsion.—Several companies made night school attendance for the non-English-speaking a condition of employment. The Northway Company established a factory school also and then put up to its men a threefold proposition: (1) To attend night school; (2) to attend the factory school; (3) to be laid off.

"3. Popularizing the Idea.—The Cadillac Company, for instance, worked out a definite program to interest the leaders of the men, and let them do the rest.

"4. A Bonus System.—The Solvay Company, for instance, proposed a 2-cent-an-hour increase for all non-English-speaking men that would attend night school.

"All industries were requested to follow up the night school attendance and progress of their men, and the Board of Education and the Board of Commerce have worked out a schedule system to make this possible and uniform.

"Detroit industries have been quick to see that 'the English language first' among their workmen means 'Safety First' in their plants—and that it means 'America First' in their city.

"Every social agency, city department, &c., that had any approach to immigrants had an active part in the campaign. Through posters and handbills, personal visits, courts, churches, clinics, settlements, Boy Scouts, women's clubs, and many other forces the night school message was carried broadcast throughout the city.

"It is too soon to make any final statement of results, but these are among them:

"2. Increased interest on the part of the Board of Education in co-operating with employers and other social agencies.

"3. Increased interest in parochial night schools throughout the parishes of the city, especially in the teaching of citizenship in the parochial citizenship classes.

"4. The opening of more private classes for immigrants in settlements and social agencies.

"5. Greatly increased attention to methods of teaching English and civics to foreigners. The Board of Education is now using a citizenship manual prepared by the Board of Commerce with the immediate Detroit situation directly in view.

"6. Increased understanding of the social value of assimilating the foreign population.

"8. Increase in registration for the night high schools among young mechanics.

"9. A movement toward the establishment of a public night school policy in other immigrant towns and communities in Michigan.

"10. Reinforcement of industrial peace, due to increased self-respect among immigrant workmen and a better understanding between employers and employes.

"11. An invigorated understanding of the whole question of American citizenship throughout the city and State.

"It was a wide-reaching civic experiment. Not only will the sign language vanish from Detroit factories, but the civic consciousness of Detroit is beginning to correspond to the facts of its recent history. A similar campaign is now being conducted in Syracuse by the committee with the support of the Chamber of Commerce, the Sons of the American Revolution, the public school system, and other agencies and private individuals.

"In this systematized co-operation between business and public educational systems, supported by local governments and local public opinion, I see the real answer to the immigration problem of this country. It means a recognition of the fact that if the immigrant is an industrial asset to America, he is and must be a social factor to be reckoned with—and made a contributing factor in American life and American citizenship.

"No local educational system can alone within a short time put through an Americanization program; nor should it. The National Americanization Committee is therefore eager to stand behind the movement in any community in which it has been begun. Returns from a number of cities this Fall already show increased enrollment in night schools, greater attention to civics, more definitely planned and supervised instruction of adult immigrants in every way.

"Portland has an Americanization school; Pittsburgh has definitely made preparation for citizenship a part of its public night school curriculum; New York State has a permanent teachers' training course in immigrant methods and has made immigrant education a special division of the State's work; California has authorized the preparation of a standard textbook to be used throughout the State and has requested our committee to supervise the preparation.

"In Boston classes for immigrant women have been established by the public school system, for instruction in practical housekeeping or 'domestic education.' The importance of such classes is not generally realized; the home will always be the real setting for Americanization—and only when the immigrant woman knows the English language and American standards of sanitation and hygiene can it become an American rather than a Southern European home.

"In nationalizing the night school movement the committee has been of service to the Federal Bureau of Education, and Dr. P. P. Claxton, the Commissioner, is sending out at intervals letters containing definite suggestions as to how best to attain efficiency in the night schools and to secure interest in them among the foreign born. The result of his efforts will be to increase interest in them among local taxpayers as well.

"We think of the immigrant in terms of cities—and always congested cities. And we have talked of Americanization in terms of city night schools. But our problem of rural immigrant education is quite as great, and more difficult to deal with. The States will have to take this up separately. New York State is already very conscious of this problem, and it is likely that, through Dr. Finley, some plan will be reached by which the aliens working on our farms and in lonely and remote construction camps will also be able to have facilities for learning English and becoming citizens.

"In connection with this matter of rural immigrants President Hadley of Yale writes to me of the foreigners who have settled in the region around his Summer home:

> "If they have any property, no matter how small a truck garden, they become good Americans very quickly. They get on the side of the law. If they have no property they are very much harder to deal with, even though they know a great deal of English and a good deal of American politics.
> "We are trying to do a little in New Haven, through the bank of which I am a Director, to encourage the immigrants to become property owners. There are certain Italians who make a point of knowing which of their own countrymen are trustworthy and encouraging them to go into business on their own account. We give Italians credit to start them in business under conditions which would have seemed hazardous and indefensible ten years ago, because we have learned that after proper inquiry those men can be trusted to pay their debts a great deal better than many more plausible applicants.

Something was said in your detailed program about educating them up to the American standard of living. I am inclined to think that it may be even more important to educate them up to the old-fashioned American habit of saving.

"The National Americanization Committee has devised a plan for reaching some of these remote immigrants in at least a provisional way. A series of twenty-five lesson leaflets has been prepared which covers the requirements for citizenship, superficially, it must be admitted, but at least it is a beginning. These leaflets will be issued through pay envelopes by industries in remote places and in labor construction camps.

"The Federal Bureau of Naturalization shows this year an increased interest not only in the naturalization of immigrants but in the ways in which they are to prepare for it. In short, we have what we have never had before—a mutual recognition by the two departments most concerned, that preparation for naturalization must be quite as much a part of Governmental policy as naturalization itself. With this recognition, and an awakened public sentiment behind it, the initial steps in a sound Americanisation policy have been taken.

"The policy will need support at every turn—from every agency that can give it. It is not enough, for instance, to put posters in the public schools. It is far more important to put them in the railroad freight yards and in the factory. And this is why industries all over the country have been asked by our committee to do this. They have responded generously and already orders for posters have been filled for the following railroads: New York, New Haven & Hartford, Chesapeake & Ohio, Philadelphia & Reading, Boston & Maine, Central Railroad of New Jersey, Chicago Great Western, Chicago & Western, Delaware & Lackawanna, and others.

"All this is practical work. And the results will be practical advantages—English-speaking men in factories, increased efficiency and safety, a raising of the standards of living in communities.

"We shall need to conserve our labor supply. The departure of many aliens, including many skilled workmen, within the past year, and the uncertainty of our future immigration have already shown us this. Business men will be called upon to forward an 'efficiency' movement among American workmen and particularly among the foreign-born, which will extend far beyond their individual plants. Such a conservation movement will include, for instance, proper safeguards for the immigrants' savings and investments, the source and guarantee of their prosperity in this country.

"This is the real road to efficiency, the surest way of making it not merely a slogan in this or that industry, but a national industrial characteristic. By neglecting such measures we are without a doubt contributing to the deterioration of our workmen and an increase in class antagonisms. The new Committee on Immigration in the United States Chamber of Commerce with its plans to secure a national outlook and national action on just such points as these is a hopeful measure.

"In saying that the work of Americanization is the business of every possible agency I do not mean to imply that the task is easy and can be done effectively simply as a matter of social good intention. It needs statesmanship and expert civic judgment; in short, it needs leaders. I believe that these must be produced, and our committee has therefore asked 150 colleges to train and produce them. We have supplied these colleges with what we believe to be an adequate training course. The University of Chicago and the International College at Springfield will put this course into operation, and President Hadley of Yale has interested himself in seeing whether it can be put into practice at that institution.

"Aside from practical advantages, this citizenship movement will soon have a marked effect on questions of national statesmanship. At present we interpret American citizenship very differently in different States. In seven States we allow the immigrant to vote on his first papers at all elections. In many States he may not be employed on public works; in some States he may not fish; in one he may not be a barber; in another he may not be a teacher; in some he may not be a saloon keeper.

"We may feel that the lack of American citizenship should mean certain disabilities, but we can hardly be willing to have American citizenship mean forty-eight different kinds of status in forty-eight different places. And if we do, we cannot wonder that the immigrant does not understand us, and that his respect for our law and our citizenship is a good deal modified by the contradictions he finds in both. American citizenship—for the immigrant's good and for ours—needs to be nationally defined, and I believe a practical Americanization movement is the swiftest means to this end.

"We have treated immigration as an economic problem. So it is, and of the first magnitude. But we shall never solve it as an economic problem until we solve it as a social problem. And that can be done not in Congress, but only by the American people, by and large, in a definite mastery of their local situation. We have all been, nationally, partisans on a question which we failed to understand in its practical manifestations even within the limits of our own well-known individual communities. Let us find out what we mean by American citizenship, find out who deserves it, where we are willing to confer it, and what we must do to confer it adequately and preserve its traditions. The process will raise the standard of American citizenship for native and foreign born citizens alike and will result, for us, in a rebirth of patriotism.

"The soil has been turned up in many sections of the country. And it is the plan of the committee to keep throughout its work a unified consciousness among its representatives from coast to coast. The Pacific Coast, for instance, is now a fertile field for Americanization, and the California Commission of Immigration and Housing is co-operating with the committee in attaining it. President Wheeler of the University of California is the committee's direct representative on the Coast.

"The Americanization dinner at Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor's on Oct. 15 was the first of a series of meetings at which the members of the committee will rally to report progress. The next dinner will be given by Mrs. E. T. Stotesbury in Philadelphia in January. A meeting is planned for Detroit, one for Chicago, and one for New Orleans. The committee feels the immediate importance of nationalizing its spirit and program, while conducting its work definitely and practically in this or that individual community. The committee hopes to be a clearing house for all committees and organizations, in any part of the country, that are working upon any aspect of Americanization. The nation is aroused to the need of Americanization, and there will be many to aid."

I.

LIKE some Ulysses wandering afar,
He found this vale of hope—an avatar.

He sought some surcease in these ice-born hills,
Their pine-wrapped sides, their mystic fairy thrills.

What though his body, long and lean and frail,
Lay scourged beneath his enemy's constant flail?

Seemed fain to fall, so slender was the thread?

Despised, forgotten—these could not restrain
The spirit that poured out a golden rain.

The secret-holding woods, the stars o' nights,
The pines that danced beneath the Northern lights;

With purple sheep's wool flecking every crest;

From these came fuel for his Viking dreams.

Such dreams! that burned new meanings into life,
And dulled the edge of Atropos' sharp knife.

We who have shared his bitter herbs, we know,

That from the weary heart a song may rise
That makes a world to smile, and stills its cries;

To scatter sweetness ere they find their doom,
From frailest stem the fairest flowers may bloom.

II.

But not alone from nature came the force
That loosed his wondrous sermons in their course;

As through the days he toiled—whate'er betide—
He found that great physician by his side,

Who, striving in the workshop of the hills,
Had felt the grace the mountain god distills.

Demons from out the dreamer of the North—

He gave him more—a lantern 'light with Hope
To pass to those who still in darkness grope.

III.

We cannot make immortal that which lives,
Nor lend a title which a title gives;

We cannot honor them all honors bear,
Nor laurel grant to those who laurel wear.

This, this the meaning of these exiled lives:
The futile limits of mere earthly gyves.

Harry B. Lachman, American Artist Who Has Long Resided in France, Tells of the Disappearance of Post-Impressionism, Cubism, and Futurism

YOU remember Picasso's paintings? They have been exhibited over here from time to time, to the delight of a very few long-haired ultra-moderns, and the mystification and amusement of everyone else. Picasso is a most advanced of advanced painters; compared with his canvases, those of most Post-Impressionists, Cubists, and Futurists are painfully obvious.

These things might have been said of Picasso a little over a year ago. But they are no longer true. For Picasso is a different man—the war has changed him. The "incomprehensibilist," who used to cover his canvases with wild conglomerations of squares and circles, and pile pigment upon pigment, with no apparent pictorial purpose, now makes paintings that the merest layman in artistic matters may understand.

It was Mr. Harry B. Lachman who brought back this news from Paris the other day, with other information equally interesting—as well as some important canvases. Mr. Lachman went to Paris four years ago, and (unlike many other American artists) he did not leave when the war broke out. Born in La Salle, Ill., he soon found, after years of illustrating and designing, that his art required a period of European experience, so he made a leisurely tour of the Continent, having for his masters and school rooms the little villages of Brittany, Spain, and Switzerland. His canvases have elicited favorable criticism at the Exposition Internationale de Peintres de Neige, and in the expositions held in the salon of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts, and the Salon d'Automne. And he has been in Paris during all the historic days that have followed the outbreak of the war.

"Picasso's change of heart is only one instance of the amazing phenomenon now evident in French art, as in all phases of French life," Mr. Lachman said to a TIMES reporter the other day. "All the wild movements, the Cubist movement, the Vorticist movement, and the rest have been swept away. Of course, most of the young men, the leaders of the artistic revolution have gone to the front. But the artists who remain, even those who were ultra-modern in their tendencies before the war, have become conservatives; they are painting in accordance with the rules and traditions which they used to flout.

"There are several reasons for this return to sanity. One reason, as I have already said, is that the young men were the revolutionists, and they have been mobilized. But there is another reason which is not so obvious, but seems to me particularly important. You see, it is true that many of these ultra-modern movements had their origin in Paris, and people generally thought of Paris when Post-Impressionism, Cubism, and Futurism were mentioned.

"But Paris was never hospitable to these mad movements long. The French connoisseurs wanted on their walls paintings that they could understand, just as sensible people do the world over. The young artists would start some revolutionary movement, synchronism, or something of the sort, and the people of Paris would be interested for a time and would buy a few canvases. But their interest would last for only a short time.

"No, there was no market in France for the revolutionary paintings made in Paris. But there was a market for them, otherwise they would not have continued to be produced. And that market was in Germany. In the galleries of Berlin and Munich you could find the craziest canvases in the world. There the paintings which consisted merely of jumbles of lines, or of solid masses of color, were exhibited and sold. They were painted in Paris, but they were in demand only in Germany. And many a young artistic revolutionist paid for his studio in the Quartier Latin, his absinthe and his red wine with money that came to him from his nation's hereditary enemy.

"Naturally, when the war broke out this market was closed. Most of the young radicals were under arms at once, and no longer worried about any traditions except the traditions of patriotism. They had rejected the discipline of art, but they yielded joyous obedience to the discipline of their nation's need.

"And the men who remained found that the ambitions and ideals which had seemed so important to them a few days before had lost their force. It is charitable, and reasonable, to suppose that in the face of a thing so tremendous and real as the war these Post-Impressionists and Cubists felt the need of honesty in expression; that the insanity of the war brought them back to sanity.

"But whether or not there was this change of heart, there was at any rate a change immediately noticeable in the work of the painters who remained at Paris. Men whose chief desire had been to 'astonish the burgesses' and to outdo in today's pictures the mystifications and sensations of yesterday, now showed almost pathetic eagerness to make pictures that could be readily understood. And from a purely materialistic and cynical point of view, the explanation for this course that first comes to mind is that they painted sane pictures because the great German market for insane pictures had abruptly closed."

Mr. Lachman will never forget those August days when peaceful and frivolous Paris became a city of serious and determined men, prepared at any moment to stand behind the barricades and repel the invading Germans. Here are some of his recollections of that memorable time.

"It was in the early Autumn," he said. "The landscape painters and the portrait painters were away in the country, busily at work on the canvases to be shown during the Fall and Winter in Paris. On the day that war was declared, there were not many artists in Paris.

"The thought that was in the minds of every painter was one of wonderment as to what the Salon d'Automne would show. The Salon d'Automne, you know, is the most revolutionary of all Paris salons; it is the salon most hospitable to all the fantastic ultra-modern movements.

"The Salon d'Automne of the previous year had held an exhibition which turned out to be a conservative victory. There had been a marked reaction against the famous—or notorious—Cubist exhibition of 1912. And now the pendulum, it was expected, would swing towards radicalism again.

"There were rumors of the amazing canvases which the Cubists and Futurists were preparing. They would be, it was said, madder than ever before. Marinetti and the Italian Futurists would hide their diminished heads when they saw what the young artists of Paris had to show in the Salon d'Automne of 1914.

"Picasso, Picabia, Bruce, and the other wild men of Paris, some of them native Parisians, and others adopted sons of the city of artists, were planning, it was said, to outdo all their previous exploits. And there would be, it was expected, canvases representative of entirely new schools of painting, of movements so bizarre as to make Cubism and Futurism seems as stale and dull as pre-Raphaelitism.

"There was Synchronism, for example. Morgan Russel and Delaunay were the chief exponents of this new style of painting. Their theory was (if any of these people may really be said to have had an actual intelligible theory) that the beauty of a canvas—or its value, they would not use so old-fashioned a word as beauty—depended upon simultaneousness of color vibrations. The effect of their canvases is best described by saying that the person who looked at them got practically the same impression that he would receive if he looked into a kaleidoscope.

"And then—there was no Salon d'Automne. One August day, bulletins bringing news that shook the world, appeared on the Grand Boulevarde des Italien, in front of the Matin office. At first there was no great outburst of excitement; there was a sort of electric calm, and every one was in a state of high tension.

"The artists who had already returned to Paris tried to go on with their work. The general impression was that there would be no war; that the ominous cloud would blow away.

"But soon all the artists who were out in the country, the portrait painters and landscape men found that they must go back to Paris at once unless they were willing to stay just where they were for an indefinitely long time. The troops were mobilized, we were told, and the railroads would be given over to their exclusive use after three hours had elapsed.

"Some of the artists who did not at once entrain for Paris had extraordinary experiences. One of them reached his studio in the Quartier only after many days of travel in a freight boat. Then there was one case I know of in which an American artist was for a time in real danger for the most ridiculous reason.

"This artist was painting in Brittany when the war broke out, and he decided that he would stay there and finish the canvases upon which he was engaged. One morning he noticed, as he stood at his easel at the corner of a village street making a sketch of some picturesque old thatched cottages, that some of the peasants who had been very friendly to him were passing him with averted head, while others were taking an uncomfortably eager interest in his work. And, what was most surprising, they seemed especially curious about his colors—not those on his canvas or palette, but those in the tubes that filled the little box at his side.

"After a few moments had passed, a gendarme approached and, to his utter consternation, arrested him.

"'What have I done?' he asked.

"'War has been declared between Germany and France,' was the answer. 'You me a German, so I am obliged to detain you as an enemy of the Republic.'

"'But I am not a German!' said the artist. 'I can't speak German and I have never been in Germany. I am an American citizen, and I have lived in France for years.'

"'Then why,' asked the gendarme, holding up one of the artist's little tubes of paint, 'do you use German colors?'

"You see," said Mr. Lachman, "the artist was using colors that had been made in Germany, and that was enough to stamp him as a German in the opinion of the simple French rustics. However, he was able to prove his American nationality, and in time he arrived back at his studio in Paris, none the worse for his experience.

"When war was declared all the French artists under 45 were at once mobilized. The older artists, and the artists of other nationalities, now found it impossible to work. All the schools closed at once, the pupils and some of the masters joining their regiments.

"Then the Americans and other foreigners who belonged to the art colony in Paris held a tremendous meeting in the Café de Dome. There were speeches in every language except German, and enthusiasm for France was at the highest pitch. A famous beauty of the Quartier, a model known as the Venus de Milo, was draped in a tricolor and placed on a table. The artists marched around her, singing the national airs of nearly every non-Teutonic country, and winding up with the 'Marseillaise.'

"As you probably know, a great many of the artists from America and other countries, who were in Paris when the war broke out, enlisted in the French Foreign Legion. And of the French artists, hardly one of the young men now remains in Paris.

"And, of course, it was the radical party, the ultra-moderns, who lost the largest numbers. There was Kissling, who was one of the leading young artistic revolutionists. He enlisted at once, and has been wounded three times, I hear, receiving a bayonet thrust in his ribs.

"The men who remained were the older men. There were Lucian Seymour, Coté, Jacques, Blanche, Claude Monet, Renoir—these are men of the sort now remaining in Paris. And they, of course, are traditionally with no sympathy for the wild vagaries of Cubism and Futurism.

"And so the art of Paris began to take on a different aspect. Whereas the art which previously had been most conspicuous was that of the young men who made a specialty of outraging all known traditions, the only art now in evidence was that of men who venerated these traditions and painted with sanity and dignity.

"At first there were articles in the newspapers saying that now the Germans and Austrians had gone from Paris, the invasion of Cubism and other foreign novelties was at an end, and French art had come back to its native wholesomeness and reason. But some of the devotees of modern art wrote letters to the papers, objecting strongly to these statements, saying that the French artists had originated Post-Impressionism,

This Painting of Notre Dame Was Made While Zeppelins Were Dropping Bombs Nearby.

Cubism, and all the other famous new movements, and that the Germans had merely continued and developed their ideas.

"France, they said, was the home of genius, and there every new movement in art made its first appearance. But the French artists, they said, got tired of a movement in a short time and passed on to new discoveries and inventions, while the slow-witted Germans accepted their novelties second-hand, and received with enthusiasm the movements for which the French no longer had any use. They pointed out that Cézanne, Picasso, Matisse, Rousseau, and other painters, who were French either by birth or by training, had originated all the new artistic movements of any importance.

"But soon there was no more interest in the question as to who originated Cubism and Post-Impressionism. No Salon d'Automne was held. The Grand Salon was turned into a hospital.

"There was a transformation! The Grand Salon, where so many utterly artificial works of art had been shown, now received the broken bodies of wounded men. Pain and charity and courage filled up the place that had been the scene of the most fantastic and sophisticated exhibition, and the walls that had echoed the idle chatter of frivolous connoisseurs standing before a Matisse canvas, now reverberated with the groans of dying men.

"And Picasso—there was a revolution indeed! Picasso has been striving for something more modern and sensational than he had ever done before. He was eagerly seeking for some tradition which he had not already violated, in order that he might tear it to ribbons before the eyes of an amazed world.

"He had hit upon a plan of indicating the different metiers by pasting little bits of wood and cloth and paper on his canvas. When he painted something that was intended to be the face of a man, he would cut a little hole for the mouth and insert a real cigarette.

"But the war brought him to his senses, or else it showed him that he must no longer expect a market for 'freak stuff.' He gave up all his wild ideas, and the pictures that he is now painting are so conventional, it is said, as to satisfy the simplest taste.

"This return to sane art has been accompanied by a marked change in the atmosphere of Paris. Of course it would not do to condemn all these fantastic art movements on moral grounds, but it is a fact that when one was able to discover a meaning in a Futurist or Cubist painting, it was, in many instances, a meaning better hidden. About much of the most advanced work there was a sort of general air of wrongness.

"The same thing was true in the ultra-modern literature. When you could find an idea in the insane writings of the disciples of Marinetti and Gertrude Stein, it generally was an obscene idea.

"Now all this is done away with. The air is clear. There is no more Imagisme, no more Futurism, no more Synchronism. There are no more crazy little reviews, and no more crazy little exhibitions. French art and literature are sane once more, and when peace comes there will be no more desire for the old abnormalities."

Mr. Lachman showed his enthusiasm in many ways during his residence in Paris in the months that are past, doing much valuable work for the Appui aux Artistes. And performing the important service of photographing, free of charge, every enlisted man who asked him to do so. He was an expert photographer before painting claimed him. But he also found time to make many paintings. While he was at work on his study of Notre Dame, three German shells fell near him. But he finished the canvas.

From Here and There

The Good Angel of the Aviators.

THERE is a French woman who hides her identity, who for months has been sending generous contributions of money through Le Figaro of Paris to the French army, and most particularly to the Aviation Corps.

For some time no more money was forthcoming, but a few days ago the Figaro received this letter from her:

"My savings are all gone, and I am grieved to the heart at not being able to help our beloved soldiers any more, especially our aviators. I wish above all things that the airmen should be warmly and comfortably clothed. But, in spite of everything, I have managed to do a little more for them. Please excuse me—it is such a little bit."

Inclosed with the letter was the French woman's check for $5,000.

Naming the Crocodiles.

THE French, as is well known, have been anything but complimentary since the outbreak of the war to Kaiser Wilhelm, the members of his family, and the monarchs allied with him against the Entente powers, and have lost no chance to produce gibes and pleasantries lampooning these personages. An instance of this now comes from the Botanical Gardens of Paris. Three crocodiles lay in a pool, in somnolent ease. Leaning against the railing were a number of spectators, trying to arouse them. Presently one wag called out to the largest crocodile:

"Hey, there, get a move on, Wilhelm!"

That produced an outburst of laughter, and the wag, encouraged, addressed the second dozing monster with:

"And you, too, over there, you old rascal, Francis Joseph."

Then, to cap his witticisms, he turned to the third, a particularly ugly specimen, and shouted:

"Oh, you Crown Prince!"

The usual Japanese breakfast consists of rice, miso soup, pickles, and occasionally fish. Tea is always served with meals, and is drunk clear, without sugar or cream. Miso soup consists of strips of radishes, seaweed, eggplant, or other vegetables cooked with bean curd and water. The cooking is not continued for a long period, and so few vegetables are used that the soup partakes only slightly of the flavor of the ingredients.

A Kindly Help for Failing Strength

TOMORROW and tomorrow . . . the tide of years sets in and the autumn of life has come. Energy has become enfeebled, the blood thins, resistance is shaken and the digestive processes weaken—weary days give way to sleepless nights.

Then will Sanatogen help! Not to replace the common articles of diet but to make them give maximum nutriment. Not as a substitute for medical treatment, or to give temporary stimulation, but to aid the nervous system in its direct control over the digestive processes, to enrich the blood, and to promote restful slumber.

For Sanatogen is the natural way. It is a chemical union of purest albumen of milk and an organic phosphorous preparation, thus supplying in most easily digestive form the best upbuilding elements and giving the starved cells organic phosphorus, that most vital food, "in such a form," as Dr. Saleeby says, "that the nervous system can actually take hold of it."

John Burroughs, venerable naturalist and author — 78 years young—has written:

"I think Sanatogen did me much good—it gave me strength, steadied my nerves and greatly improved my sleep. It comes the nearest to being a remedy for old age that I have yet struck."

And as over 21,000 physicians have themselves written in praise of what they have seen Sanatogen do in daily practice, you may indeed be sure that the reputation of Sanatogen is founded on truth and tangible results.

Is India Really Loyal to England in the War?

The Presence of Her Troops at the Front Not Really Indicative of the Actual Sentiments of the People, Says Educator Just Returned from That Country

The writer of the following article on Indian conditions has been in charge of the Department of Philosophy of Ewing Christian College, Allahabad, India, for about a year. He reached India in July, 1914, and returned to this country late last August. He is a Princeton graduate and a nephew of Secretary of State Lansing.

By Allen Welsh Dulles

SO much has been written about the loyalty of India to the British Empire and so little has been advanced that would tend to show any disaffection on the part of the Indian people, that the conclusion must inevitably have been reached by the majority of persons that that country is supporting the British cause in much the same spirit as Canada or Australia.

All the outward evidences of loyalty seem to be present—Indian troops are fighting with the other British troops in France; the rajahs, native rulers, have been vying with each other in presents of money and war materials for England; and, finally, India has suffered no internal disorders or attempted revolts against British power. Is India as loyal as these circumstances would tend to show?

The present organization of the Indian army examples the wisdom of the English Government. Profiting from the bitter experience of the sepoy (soldier) mutiny of 1857, when fear for their religions gave the orthodox Hindus and Mohammedans, who then composed the larger part of the Indian army, some basis for a common attack against the British Government, the English have, in recent years, recruited the majority of their troops from the mountains of Nepal, outside of British India, the home of the famous Gurkas, who have little in common with the plainsmen of India proper, and from the Sikh community of North India, which has separated itself from both Hindus and Mohammedans by its adherence to the Sikh religion.

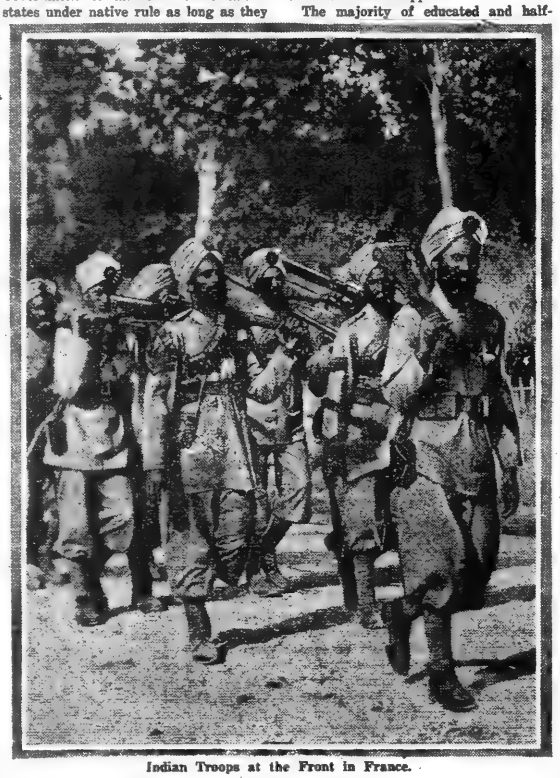
This choice of men has the double advantage of securing the bravest and physically most fit for the army, and also those who are least typically Indian and fanatically religious in sentiment. There is little danger that these soldiers could ever be induced to join with the Indian people in any attempt which they might make to achieve the end of their nationalistic aspirations, or to protect themselves against what they might imagine to be an infringement of their religious freedom. As mercenaries many would be as willing to fight against, as they would be to aid, any Indian insurrection.

Since the outbreak of war in Europe there has been no attempt made to enlist any large number of India's three hundred millions for service. What recruiting there has been has had for its object the keeping of the Indian army up to its normal strength, 150,000, while at the same time England has always kept a large English army in India. The places of the first line troops, which were removed shortly after the war broke out, were immediately taken by territorials, who are using India as their training ground and at the same time are kept ready to meet any anti-English movement.

The presence of these Indian troops on the western battle-front of Europe could hardly be considered an expression of the state of Indian opinion even if they went to the war of their own free will. It need hardly be said that they had no choice in the matter. In going they obeyed the order of their English officers, who deal promptly and finally with any suspicion of insubordination on the part of their Indian soldiers; nor was it probably distasteful to them to go, as action is seldom unwelcome to the trained soldier after a long period of inactivity. In action they have shown themselves to be brave and useful soldiers.

Much of the support for the British cause from India has come from the native Princes, the rajahs, who have nominal control over one-third of the territory of India, though only one-sixth of its people and none of the important seaports being comprised in the large territory they govern. At the time of the British conquest of India it was found advisable to keep in power some of the Indian chiefs, who, along with the British, had seized what they could of the disintegrating Mogul Empire. The overwhelming supremacy of the British position left these Princes, whether single or combined, too weak to dream of being successful rivals of the British power.

It has been the policy of the English Government to maintain these native states under native rule as long as they have shown a friendly attitude toward the British Government and an enlightened treatment of their own people. In the case of the failure of a possible heir, too often an occurrence among Oriental Kings, especially in Indian history, the English Government would select some suitable Indian, of the royal line, if possible, to succeed to the control of the state. Every native state has an English official resident, who sees to it that the native ruler neither mismanages the internal affairs of his state nor aspires to excessive power. All the foreign relations of the states are controlled by the English Viceroy of India.



Indian Troops at the Front in France.

It will thus be clearly seen that the power of these native Princes depends absolutely upon the good will of the English. Further, the overthrow of that Government in India would shortly be followed by the downfall of the rulers of these native states in the anarchy which would inevitably follow the withdrawal of the English, since the power of these Princes does not come from the support they receive from their subjects. The peculiar diversity of the peoples of India makes it possible for an Indian ruler to be just as foreign to the Indians whom he may be ruling as an English Governor would be. As an example of this, the case of Hyderabad, the largest native state of India, might be cited. Of the ten million people in this state, over nine millions are Hindus, yet the ruler is himself a Mohammedan.

It does not seem strange that these Indian Princes should vie with each other in their presents to the English Government and should have a vital interest in seeing it bring the war to a successful conclusion. Their loyalty is more often the loyalty of self-interest than that of affection. When we read that Sindhia of Gwalior has given a hundred ambulance cars to the King of England, that the Nizam of Hyderabad has contributed so many lakhs of rupees to the Prince of Wales Fund, you may be sure that these men expect a return on their investment in the form of renewed favors from the English Government and the assurance of its continued support.

The majority of educated and half-educated Hindus and Mohammedans are not loyal to the British Government. A few, and here we find the true patriots and statesmen of the Indian community, appreciate what England has done for India and the part that country must play in India's future development, and are in the truest sense of the word, loyal. Luckily for India there are enough of these men, few though they be, to act as a restraining influence on the reactionary element.

The reason for the strain of disloyalty which runs through the mass of the Indian people is not hard to find. No subject race is ever perfectly satisfied with its position as such when it possesses enough intelligence to do any thinking of its own. Almost every Hindu or Mohammedan, especially if superficially educated, has a tendency to protest at the position of servility in which he thinks he finds his fellow-countrymen. He overlooks the benefits which his country may be receiving from the ruling power and also the impossibility of organizing any Indian government which would receive the support of a united India.

The educated Indian cannot see why he should not have a responsible share in the Government of his own country, and we, enjoying a democratic form of Government, would have to admit that theoretically he is right. Practically, the application of such principles in India might at present have dire consequences. The East is not yet ready for a representative form of Government. China, turning back to a monarchy, in fact, if not in name, is only an example of this.

But what has more effect upon the ordinary Indian than the loss of political liberty, which is a theoretical rather than an actual loss, as India passed from the autocratic Mogul to the less despotic English, is the social inequality which exists between the two peoples through the habit of the ruling class of holding itself aloof from any social intercourse with the native. All the English clubs debar Indians, and exclusive English society seldom finds a place for the Indian gentlemen. It is a bitter experience for the returned Oxford or Cambridge student to find that he will not be accorded the same treatment from English society in India that he has been accustomed to in England.

The Indian has to put up with many instances of incivility from the English with whom he deals, discourtesy from the railway officials, and some times rough treatment from the English soldier. If he is an uneducated man he takes all this as a matter of course, but the Indian student resents such treatment bitterly. He can hardly be blamed for not loving his English master, or for overlooking what his wonderful administrative ability has accomplished for the country. Until there is some show of treating the educated Indian as a social equal that ever-growing class of Indian society will never quietly acquiesce in English rule.

The loyalty of the lower class of Indian, the laborers, has been alienated to some extent by events which have occurred recently. The Indian workmen in South Africa were so evilly treated by the white element of that country that the condition to which they were reduced became a disgrace to the Empire.

The refusal on the part of the Canadian immigration authorities to receive Indian labor has had grave consequences in India. The question is quite a different one than the United States has had to face in the case of China and Japan.

The incident in question has to do with the voyage of the Komaragut Maru, a Japanese ship, chartered by a company of about 300 Indians from the Punjab. On their arrival at Vancouver they were refused admission by the immigration authorities and sent back on their long journey to Calcutta. It is to be presumed that on their return voyage they were not filled with appreciation of the benefits which they derived from their position as British subjects.

To what extent England will satisfy India's desire for a place equal in dignity and responsibility to that of Canada and Australia is a problem for the future. Most observers would deny the ability of the Indian at the present time to deal with the difficulties of such a responsibility. Indian self-government, with its millions of people in utter ignorance, and with the multiplicity of its types, languages and religions, presents quite a different and far more difficult problem than is found in either Canada or Australia.

Then there are these two additional problems for England to face: First, the demand of the educated Indian to be treated as a social equal; and, second, the demand of the laboring classes for the right of immigration into the other countries of the Empire.

Until these issues involved in the present political and social inequality are met and some step taken to change present conditions in these regards, England will not find India a loyal country. Yet it is not at all unlikely that England will find the interests of good government will make necessary keeping a strong control over the Central Government. It does not seem probable that the Indian will ever get the social recognition he desires, or be welcomed as an immigrant. Thus it is very possible that India will never be wholly loyal to England. Yet it is unlikely that that country will ever be able to unite against England in such force as actually to menace her sovereignty, backed as it is by an English army.

James Huneker Writes of the Exaltation of "Riding the Whirlwind" in an Aeroplane and of the Moral Victory of Flying Over One's Fears

By James Huneker.

ONCE Swinburne, in a Baudelaire mood, sang: "Shall no new sin be born for men's troubles?" And it was an Asian potentate who offered a prize for the discovery of a new pleasure. Or was it a sauce?

Mankind soon wearies. The miracles of yesteryear are the commonplaces of today. Steam, telegraphy, wireless, and now wireless telephony are accepted as a matter of course by the man in the street. How stale will seem woman suffrage and prohibition after they have conquered! In the world of art conditions are analogous. The cubist nail drove out the impressionist, and the cubist will soon vanish if the futurist hammer is sufficiently heavy.

Nevertheless, there is a novel sensation in store for those who make a first flight through the air. I don't mean in a balloon, whether captive or free; in the case of the former, a trip to the top of the Washington Monument or the Eiffel Tower will suffice; and while I rode in a Zeppelin at Berlin in 1912, (100 marks, or about $25, was the tariff,) and saw Potsdam at my feet, yet I was unsatisfied. The passengers sat in a comfortable salon, ate, drank, even smoked. The traveling was so smooth as to suggest an inland lake on a Summer day. No danger was to be apprehended. The monster airship left its hangar and returned to it on schedule time. The entire trip lacked the flavor of adventure. And that leads me to a personal confession.

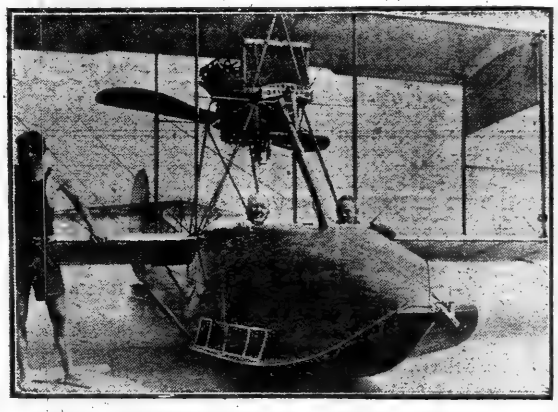
I am not a sport. In my veins flows sporting blood, but only in the Darwinian sense am I a "sport," a deviation from the normal history of my family, which has always been devoted to athletic pleasures. A baseball match in which carnage ensues is a mild diversion for me. I can't understand the fury of the contest. I yawn, though the frenzied enthusiasm of the spectators interests me. I have fallen asleep over a cricket match at Lord's in London, and the biggest bore of all was a Sunday afternoon bull fight in Madrid. It was such a waste of potential beefsteaks. Prize fights disgust, shell races are puerile, football matches smack of obituaries. As for golf—that is a prelude to senility, or the ante-chamber to an undertaker's establishment.

The swiftness of film pictures has set a new metronomic standard for modern sports. I suppose playing Bach fugues on the keyboard is as exciting a game as any; that is, for those that like it. A four-voiced polyphony at a good gait is positively hair-raising. It beats poker. (It was the amiable Huysmans who advocated the erection of a statue to the memory of the man that invented cards. A public benefactor! Didn't he thus check the conversation of imbeciles? But any one who has observed a bridge party composed of women may doubt the efficacy of the Huysmans suggestion.) All this is a preliminary to my little tale.

Conceive me as an elderly person of generous waist measurement, slightly reckless like most near-sighted humans; but this recklessness is psychical. Safety first, and I always watch my step; painful experience taught me years ago the perils that lurk in ambush for a Johnny-look-in-the-air.

Flying in heavier-than-air machines fascinated me. The fantastic stories of H. G. Wells—so immeasurably superior to his realistic fiction—were ever a joy. When the "Argonauts of the Air" appeared, flying was practically assured, although a Paris mathematician had demonstrated with ineluctable logic that it was impossible; as proved a member of the Institute a century earlier that birds couldn't fly. It was an illusion. Well, the Wrights flew, even if Langley did not—Langley, the father of the aeroplane.

Living so long in France and Belgium I had grown accustomed to the whirring of aerial motors, a sound not unlike that of a motorboat and the buzzing of a sawmill. I became accustomed to this drone above the housetops, and since my return to America I have often wondered why in the land where the aeroplane first flew so little public interest was manifested. To be sure, there are aero clubs, but they never fly where the interest of the greater public can be intrigued. Either there is a hectic excitement over some record broken or else the aviator sulks in his tent. Is the money devil at the bottom of the trouble? Sport for sport's sake, like art for art's sake, is rarely encountered. The Government has taken up flying, but that is for pragmatic purposes. By the way, the United States Department of Commerce recently fined Beryl H. Kendrick of Atlantic City because he didn't carry safety rafts, as if a hydro-aeroplane isn't more aeroplane than motor boat. The aeroplane as a weapon of defense, not the aeroplane as a new and agreeable pleasure! We are not a disinterested nation; even symphony concerts and opera and the salvation of souls are commercial propositions. Else would our skies be darkened by flying machines instead of smoke, and our churches thronged with aviators.



Mr. Huneker About to Ascend at Atlantic City.

Walking on the famous and fatiguing Boardwalk of Atlantic City last month I suddenly heard a familiar buzzing in the air and looked up. There it was, a big flying boat like a prehistoric dragon fly, speeding from the Inlet down to the million-dollar pier. Presently there were two of them flying, and I felt as if I were in a civilized land.

On the trolleys were signs, "See the Flying Boats at the Inlet!" I did, the very next morning. I had no notion of being a passenger. I was not tempted by the thought. But as Satan finds work for idle hands, I lounged down the beach to the Kendrick biplane, and stared my full at its very slender proportions.

A young man in a bathing suit explained to me the technique of flying, and insinuated that hundreds and hundreds had flown during the season without accident. Afternoon saw me again on the sands, an excited witness of a flight; excited because I stood behind the motor when it was started for a preliminary tryout—"tuning up" is the slang phrase of the profession—and the cyclonic gale blew my hat away, loosened my collar, and made my teeth chatter.

Such a tornadic roar! I firmly resolved that never would I trust myself in such a devil's contrivance. Why, it was actually riding the whirlwind—and, perhaps, reaping a watery grave. What else but that? On a blast of air you sail aloft and along. When the air ceases you drop (less than forty-five miles an hour). And this in a flimsy boxkite. Never for me! Not today, baker, call tomorrow with a crusty cottage, as we used to say in dear old "Lunnon" years ago.

Nevertheless, the poison was in my veins; cunningly it began to work. I saw a passenger, a fat man, weighing 204 pounds—I asked for the figures—trussed up like a calf in the arms of a slight, muscular youth, who carried him a limp burden and deposited him on a seat in the prow of the boat. I turned my head away. I am not easily stirred—having reported musical and theatrical happenings for a quarter of a century—but the sight of that stout male, a man and a brother, (I don't know him from Adam,) evoked a chord of pity in my breast. I felt that I would never set eyes again on this prospective food for fishes.

I quickly left the spot and returned to my hotel, determined to say, "Retro me, Sathanas!" if "Auld Reekie" should happen to show me his hoofs, horns and hide.

But he did not. The devil is a subtle beast. He had simply set jangling the wires of suggestion, and my nerves accomplished the rest. One morning, a few days later, I awoke parched with desire. I drank much strong tea to steady me and smoked unremittingly. Again, during the early afternoon, I found myself up the beach. "My feet take hold on hell," I said to myself, but it was only hot sand.

I teased myself with speculations as to whether the game was worth the candle—yes, I had got that far, traversing a vast mental territory between the No-Sayer and the Yes-Sayer. (Any man who thinks of Nietzsche in connection with an aeroplane is lost. He is already "up in the air.") I was doomed, and I knew it when I began to circle about the machine.

Courteously the bonny youth explained matters. It was a Glenn H. Curtiss hydro-aeroplane, furnished with one of the new Curtiss engines of ninety horsepower, capable of flying seventy to ninety miles an hour, of lifting 400 pounds, and weighing in all about a ton. Was it safe? Were the taut, skinny piano wires that manipulated the steering gear and the plane durable? Didn't they ever snap? Of course, they were durable, and, of course, they occasionally snapped. What then? Why, you drop, in spiral fashion—volplane—charming vocable!

But if the engine?—same thing. You would come to earth, rather water, as naturally as a child takes the breast. Nothing to fear.

Young Kendrick is an Atlantic City product—he was a professional swimmer and lifeguard—and will look after you. The price is $15; formerly $25, but competition, which is said to be the life of trade, has operated in favor of the public.

Rather emotionally I bade my man good day, promising to return for a flight the next morning, a promise I certainly did not mean to keep. This stupendous announcement he received coolly. Flying for him was a quotidian banality.

And then I noticed that the blazing sun had become darkened. Was it an eclipse, or were some horrid, monstrous shapes like the suppositious spindles spoken of by Langley devouring the light of our parent planet? No, it was the chamber of my skull that was full of shadows. The obsession was complete. I would go up, but I must suffer terribly in the interim.

Why should I fly and pay fifteen good shekels for the unwelcome privilege? I computed the cost of various beverages, and as a consoling thought recalled Mark Twain's story of the Western editor who, missing from his accustomed haunts, was later found serenely drunk, passionately reading to a group of miners from a table his lantern-illuminated speech, in which he denounced the cruel raw waste of grain in the making of bread when so many honest men were starving for whisky.

Yet did I feel that I would not begrudge my hard-earned cash, (I'm not a best seller), and thus tormented between the devil of cowardice and the deep sea of curiosity I retired and dreamed all night of fighting strange birds that attacked me in an aeroplane.

I shan't weary you with the further analysis of my soul states during this tempestuous period. I ate a light breakfast, swallowed much tea. Then I resolutely went in company with a friend, and we boarded an Inlet car. I had the day previous resorted to a major expedient of cowards. I had said, so as to bolster up my fluttering resolution, that I was going to fly; an expedient that seldom misses, for I should never have been able to face the chief clerk, the head waiter or the proprietor at the hotel if I failed to keep my promise.

"Boaster! Swaggerer!" I muttered to myself en route. "Now are you satisfied? Thou tremblest, carcass! Thou wouldst tremble much more if thou knewest whither I shall soon lead thee!" I quoted Turenne, and I was beginning to babble something about Icarus—or was it Phaeton, or Simon Magus?—brought to earth in the Colosseum by a prayer from the lips of St. Peter when we arrived. How I hated the corner where we alighted. It seemed mean and dingy and sinister in the dazzling sunlight—a redhot day if you may remember Saturday, Sept. 11, and the hour was 10:30 A. M.

A condemned criminal could not have noted more clearly every detail of the life he was about to quit. We plowed through the sand. We reached the scaffold—at least it looked like one to me. "Hello, here's a church. Let's go in," I felt like exclaiming in sheer desperation, remembering Dickens and Mr. Wemmick. I would have, such was my blue funk, quoted Holy Scripture to the sandlopers, but I hadn't the chance.

I asked my friend, and my voice sounded steady enough, whether the wind and weather seemed propitious for flying. Never better was the reply, and my heart went down to my boots. I really think I should have escaped if a stout man with a piratical mustache hadn't approached me and asked: "Going up today?" I marveled at his calmness, and wished for his instant dissolution, but I gave an affirmative shake of the head. Cornered at last.

Handing my watch, hat and wallet to my friend, I coldly awaited the final preparations. I had forgotten my ear protector, but cotton wool would answer the purpose of making me partially deaf to the hideous, clangorous vibration of the propeller blades—which resemble in a magnified shape the innocent air fans of offices and cafés. I essayed one more joke—true gallows humor—before I was led like a lamb (a tough one) to the slaughter. I asked an attendant to whom I had paid the official fee if my widows would be refunded the money in case of accident; but this antique and tasteless witticism was indifferently received, as it deserved. Finally the young man gave me a raincoat, grabbed me around the waist, and bidding me clasp his neck he carried me out into shallow water and sat me beside the air pilot, who looked like a mere lad in his bathing clothes.

My hand must have been trembling; (Ah, that old piano hand!) for he inquiringly eyed me. The motor was screaming as we flew through the water toward the Inlet. I hadn't courage of mind to make a farewell signal to my companion. Too late, we're off, I thought, and at once my trepidation vanished.

I had for some unknown reason, possibly because of absolute despair, suffered a rich sea change. We churned the waves. I saw tiny sails studding the deep blue. Men fished from the shore. As we neared the Inlet, where a shambling wooden hotel stands on the sandy point, the sound of the motor grew intenser. We began to lift, not all at once, but gradually. Suddenly her nose was pointed skyward, and the boat climbed the air with an ease that was astonishing. No shock. No jerking. We simply glided aloft as if the sky were our native heath—if you will pardon the hibernicism—and as if determined to pay a visit to the round blazing sun bathing naked in the brilliant blue.

And with the mounting ascent I became unconscious of my corporeal vesture. I had become pure spirit. I feared nothing. The legend of angels became a certainty. Man is destined to wings. Was I not proving it? Flying is the sport of gods, and should be of humans now that the motor car is become slightly "promiscuous."

The Inlet and thoroughfare at my feet were now a network of silvery ribbons. The heat was terrific, the glare almost unbearable. But I no longer sneezed. Aviation solves the hay fever problem. The wind forced me to clinch my teeth. We were hurled along at 70 miles an hour, and up several thousand feet, yet below the land seemed near enough to touch. As we swung across the masts of yachts I wondered that we didn't graze them—so elusive was the crystal clearness of the atmosphere, a magic mirror that made the remote contiguous. The mast of the sunken schooner hard by the sand bar looked like a lead pencil one could grasp and write a message to Mars.

Hello! I was lyrical. It is inescapable up in the air. The blood seethes. Ecstasy sets in—the kinetic ecstasy of a spinning top. I gazed at the pilot. He twisted his wheel nonchalantly as if we were in an earthly automobile. I looked over the sides of the cedar boat and was not giddy, for I had lived years at the top of a Madison Avenue apartment house, ten stories high, from which I daily viewed policemen killing time on the sidewalks; besides, I have strong eyes and the stomach of a drover. Therefore, no giddiness, no nausea. Only exaltation as we swooped down to lower levels.

Atlantic City, bizarre, yet meaningless, outrageously planned and executed stretched its ugly shape beneath us; the most striking objects were the exotic hyphenated hotel, with its Asiatic monoliths and dome, and its vast, grandiose neighbor, a mound of concrete, the biggest hotel in the world. The piers were salient silhouettes. A checkerboard seemed the city, which modulated into a tremendous arabesque of ocean and sky. I preferred to stare seaward. The absorbent cotton in my ears was transformed into gun cotton, so explosive the insistent drumming of the motor engine. Otherwise, we flew on even keel, only an occasional dip and a sidewise swing reminding me that I wasn't footing the ordinary highway. The initial intoxication began to wear off, but not the sense of freedom, a glorious freedom; truly mankind will not be free till all fly. Alas!

Though we become winged we remain mortal, human—all too human. We may shed our cumbersome pedestrian habits, but we take up in the air with us our petty souls.

I found myself indulging in very trite thoughts. What a pity that war should be the first to degrade this delightful and stimulating sport! Worse followed. Why can't I, like Vincent Astor, own a machine? Base envy, you see. Or, why doesn't young Mr. Astor, knowing my fervid desire, present me with a Curtiss hydro-aeroplane, model 1916? The socialistic leaven had begun to work. No use, we shall remain human even in heaven or hell—that hell in which it is not considered good form to harp on the heat.

I have been asked to describe the sensation of flying. I can't. It seems so easy, so natural (Mr. Kendrick says that any one can learn to guide a machine in midair; the difficulty is to master the descent). If you have ever dreamed of flying I can only say that your dream will be realized in an aeroplane. Dreams do come true sometimes. (Curiously enough I've not dreamed of flying since.) But as there is an end even to the most tedious story, so mine must finish.

Suddenly the sound of the engine ceased. The silence was thrilling, almost painful. And then in huge circles, as if we were descending the curves of an invisible corkscrew, we came down, the bow of the flying boat pointing at an angle of forty-five degrees. Still no dizziness, only a sense of regret that the trip was so soon over. It had endured an eternity, but occupied precisely twenty-one minutes.

We reached the water and settled on the foam like a feather. Then we churned toward the beach; again I was carried, this time on to solid land, where I had ridiculous trouble in getting the cotton from my harassed eardrums. Perhaps my hands were unsteady, but if they were, my feet were not.

I reached the Inlet via the Boardwalk, making record time, and drew the first happy sigh in a week as I sat down, lighted a cigar and twiddled my fingers at a waiter. Even if I had enjoyed a new pleasure I didn't propose to give up the old ones. Then my nerves! And when I meet Gabriele d'Annunzio I can look him in the eye. He flew over Trieste, but I flew over my fears—a moral as well as a physical victory for a timid conservative.

Diary Sheds New Light on Napoleon's End

Interesting Account, Written Ninety-Four Years Ago by Man Who Made Arrangements for the ex-Emperor's Interment, Just Discovered at St. Helena

The valuable historical document printed below has just been discovered on the island of St. Helena, where Napoleon Bonaparte spent his last days. It is the diary of Andrew Darling, the upholsterer who made the arrangements for Napoleon's funeral. Darling was sent to St. Helena, when the former Emperor of the French was first a prisoner there, by a London upholsterer who had contracted to furnish the illustrious prisoner's residence at Longwood, on the island. He went frequently to Longwood, had access to Napoleon's private apartments and was in a position to give minute details regarding the ex-Emperor's last days.

The diary was discovered by Major M. F. Foulds, the medical officer in charge of the troops now quartered at St. Helena, among the records of the island deposited in the castle at Jamestown, and sent by him to The London Times.

In Darling's diary some of the names of persons in Napoleon's entourage are misspelled. Those to whom he alludes are the following, the correct spelling of their names being given:

Count de Montholon, Lord Chamberlain at Longwood; Count Bertrand, Grand Marshal; Pierron, butler; Marchand, first valet; Noverraz, third valet; Antommarchi, Napoleon's physician; Arnott, the surgeon who attended Napoleon during his last illness; Crokat, orderly officer at Longwood; Rutledge, assistant surgeon; Shortt, principal medical officer in St. Helena; Mitchell, surgeon of H. M. S. Vigo; Sir Thomas Reade, Deputy Adjutant General; Montchenu, French Commissioner; Gorrequer, military secretary to the Governor; Burton, an army surgeon.

Darling's diary covers the period from May 2 to 7, 1821. In it he wrote as follows:

Tuesday, May 2.

SENT up some articles to the old house at Longwood, which had been requested for the establishment's use, and went up in the afternoon, as usual, having been in attendance for some time before at Longwood for some part of the day, in case Gen. Bonaparte should think proper to go into the New House that was built for him, as his Excellency the Governor had given me orders to that effect, and General Montholon had said that he was not aware what General B. meant to do, but that he would most likely take it into his head and come down to the New House suddenly without giving much notice, and I had better be in the way. Mr. Pieron signed the receipt for the articles, the servants seemed all in an uproar, and General Montholon said that B. was very ill. Went up as usual, went over to Mr. H. Barker in the evening, had been told by General Montholon that Bonaparte was all the same as dead. In the evening saw Dr. Rutledge and one or two of the officers at Longwood Farm House.

Wednesday, 3d.

Went up to the Wood as usual, having sent up several articles for the New House, and was told by Novares, one of the servants of the New House, that General Bonaparte could not live long as he was then throwing up something from his stomach which was quite black, and said that at times he was delirious, having asked for people that were not on the Island, and asking after others who were not alive.

Friday, 4th.

Learnt on my way up that B. was much better. Sent up today some skins for General Montholon to cover some cases that held his books, and some green baise for ditto; and articles of furniture for Doctors Shortt and Mitchell, to the officers' quarters in the New House. Saw them both in the evening in Captain Crokat's quarters and heard Doctor Arnott come from General Bonaparte's room, describing to Messrs. Shortt and Mitchell how he thought he was, and the position in the room, and room in the House in which he lay. Was then taking orders from Captain Crokat, had been asked by General Montholon to get cloth to hang the room in black as he thought General Bonaparte could not live much longer.

Saturday, 5th May.

Went up about twelve o'clock in the day, met Mr. Dutton with a letter from Sir Thomas Reade to send up some plaister of Paris; but as I knew there was none to be purchased and none in store, having been on the look out for the same articles that same morning, and the day before, and found that the only thing that I could find was to grind down some images, and use the material; but as the expense of them was considerable, and not certain of the material answering, I declined doing so until I had orders; therefore proceeded to Longwood, where I knew Sir Thomas Reade was, and then found him and the Governor in front of the New House.

Told the circumstances to the Governor, when he recommended the plan as it had been requested by Madame Bertrand. I then mounted my horse, came to Town, purchased the figures to the number of 150, all small, got the men that I had at work, and set about pounding them, which having completed, I had two Chinese in waiting and started them off with the powder, and then left Town myself for the Wood. This was between five and six in the evening: on my way up I passed the Admiral (Lambert), Marquis de Montchenu, and Major Gorrequer, having then met them with the account of General Bonaparte's death; this was a short distance from Longwood Gate; I then went on to the Old House, when I found that a Dragoon was just starting with a note for me to prepare articles for the funeral, and likewise to hang the room in which he then lay with black cloth. I then saw the Governor and Sir Thomas Reade, and having taken my instructions proceeded to Town as quick as possible.

Having got the proper articles and the men collected, and some refreshment for them, I proceeded to Longwood, where we arrived about 12 o'clock, (this having been the third time that I had been from Town to the Wood that day.) I then saw General Montholon, took the things from the cart into the dining room; General Montholon told me then he wished his bed-room to be hung with cloth as they wished him to lay in state in that room.

I then ordered the men to work, and moved the furniture out of that into the outer room, (General Bonaparte's sitting-room, but sometimes his bed-room.) Took down the muslin from the walls and furniture, being assisted by General Montholon and the French domestics. I kept the men at work until about half-past three; Sergt. Morley of the 20th then being unwell from the fatigue, and all the other men not good for much work, I asked them to rest till daylight; I then laid down myself but could not sleep during the evening.

I wanted to see him during some part of the morning, but was refused, as the Governor had not seen him. Having occasion to go out of the room into the garden by the glass door, I then saw him on the small iron bed-stead between the drawing room windows, one of which (I saw in at both windows,) at that time being open. About daylight I then got the men to work again, and shortly after I saw the Governor, Sir Thomas Reade and other officers of the Staff, outside the house; and about a quarter of an hour afterwards the Governor and a Staff Officer passed by the room in which I was to the drawing-room, and remained for some time. I hurried the workmen on as much as possible, and got them some breakfast about nine o'clock; we had near finished.

About eight I went with General Montholon to the room where he was and saw him, and was much astonished to see him so much wasted in the body, but at the same time look so well, so young, and with such a pleasing countenance.

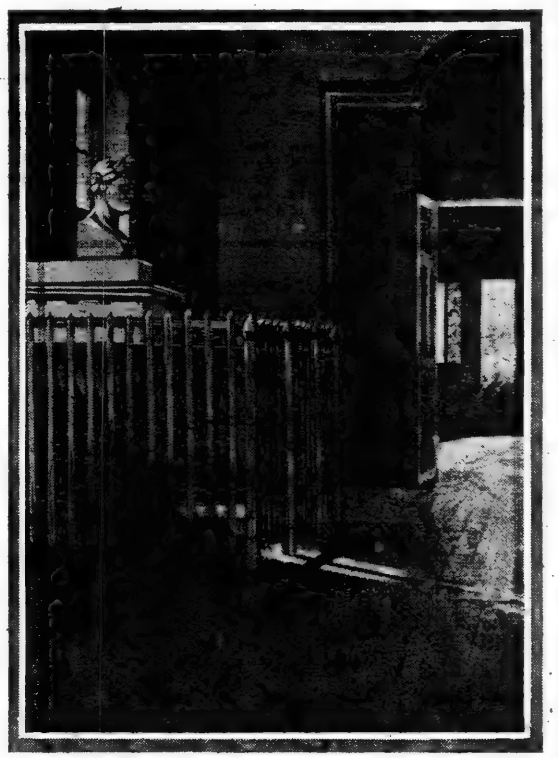
I then went to the workmen and sometime afterwards General Montholon requested me to take his size for the coffin. Madame Bertrand and Counts Montholon and Bertrand were then speaking together (and I believe Mr. Marchand); the description of the coffins were to be, first tin, lined with satin, which was to be stuffed with cotton, a small mattress and pillow of the same materials on the bottom of ditto; and then second a wood coffin, then third a lead coffin, and then one of mahogany covered with crimson velvet, if it could be procured; but I told them there was not any on the Island that I could get, as I had been in search of some a few days before: it was then settled that outer coffin should be the best mahogany that was on the Island, which was accordingly done so.

I then came out and told the Governor; he was anxious to have the coffins made as soon as possible. I went back a little afterwards, got a description of the coffins in writing from General Montholon, went with him into the room again to be more particular to his exact size; assisted by General Montholon, the net size was as follows:—Length, 5 feet 7 inches, only 18 inches barely across the shoulders, and scarcely 10 inches deep; the size of the coffin I made as follows: —Length, 5 feet 11 inches, depth 12 inches, width at the head 10½ inches, shoulders 21 inches, foot 8 inches; at that time I understood that he was to lay in state, and to be opened about 2 o'clock, but was not aware that he was to be put into the coffin with his hat and clothes on, in the way that he used to dress when in full uniform.

About 10 o'clock I left Longwood for Town; I had then received the Governor's orders to make all the haste possible, and as on the evening before make use of his name for men or materials that might be required. I came to Town, had some breakfast, and in the meantime applied to Town-Major Cole to get some of the men out of the church that I knew were the most handy and useful, had others sent from the country, and with the assistance of Mrs. Borman, Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Berman, and others had the tin coffin, the lead and wood coffins, finished about one in the morning, with the made linings as described.

Monday, May 7th.

Sent up the coffins by the Chinese and left Town about 11 o'clock for Longwood with the proper people to secure the different coffins, then saw him laying in state. As I left Longwood the morning before for the purpose of getting the coffins made, I left some men to do anything that was required in the house, such as finish the altar, and put up a chandelier that was taken down from the drawing-room and put into the room that he then lay in, and cover the carriage that General Bonaparte used to ride in. I found that they had nearly completed it all. The curiosity of the people being so great, that great crowds of people of all descriptions came to see him lay in state, which was nearly in the following manner.



Room Where Napoleon Died.

The room in which he lay was by him generally used as a bed-room (the size small), with one door leading from the dining-room, by which means the people were admitted, another door opposite this went into the sitting-room, used by him but little of late, and likewise had a bed in it, and a sofa which he used to sit on much; two windows being in the south side next the garden, one of which some time since was made into a glass door, the other window small, but was made into a French window; at the same time his head being towards the dining-room, throwing his right side towards the window.

The iron bed-stead on which he lay was about 5 feet 10 inches by 3 feet, about 9 inches from the main corner nearest the sitting-room, and about 20 inches from the back wall, leaving bare room for a passage into the sitting-room. The altar was at his head next to the wall of the dining-room; above the bed-stead hung a chandelier frame with 12 burners, in front of the bed-stead stood two stands with marble tops, on each of which stood one four-branch chandelier of solid silver; on the altar stood two of the same with four large candlesticks and four pieces of wood made white in each, at the top of which was a candle to appear large. The altar was about 2ft. 4in. wide and 4ft. 6in. long, covered with black cloth and the letter "N" on the front, with a binding of yellow (taken from the drawing-room window curtains round the front). On the top stood a "jassupe" adorned with column, a dome and cupola, where the figure of our Saviour on the Cross used to be deposited, but at that time was on General Bonaparte's breast with the sword and scabbard on his right side, his heart and stomach on the left.

On the top of the altar there was a covering richly wrought in silver with embroidered devices, and a bookstand on which lay a Bible; in front of the altar there was a platform one step high, on which the Priest Mr. Vignali used to stand at times with his robes on and repeat a paternoster, when a person of the Catholic persuasion used to come in and take the sacrament. The bed-stead on which General Bonaparte lay was about 6 feet long and 3 feet wide and 3 mattresses on it, the top one of which is left behind, and is now in my possession amongst the stores, being much marred by the stains of blood &ct. from him when he was turned round to shave the back part of his head for the bust which was taken on the 7th of May by Doctors Burton and Antromarchi and afterwards a bust taken from the same which was very fair, considering the time he had been dead, and the roughness of the material, which was packed up and taken by Antromarchi for the intention, as I was told by Madame Bertrand, to be sent to Canova for a model in marble.

Much time having been lost in waiting for the crowd of spectators of all classes which were admitted, and a delay in taking the bust, I felt anxious to have him put into the coffin, having the people all ready for the purpose. The bust having been taken, the Governor and Sir Thomas Reade having asked me what the delay was, I told them the French people did not seem much inclined at that time to have him put into the coffin. I afterwards mentioned that it was proper he should be soldered up to-night, to Countess and Count Bertrand with General Montholon and Mr. Marchand, who sat preparing various articles for the purpose.

I having then brought in Abraham Millington and Samuel Ley, the men who made the tin coffin, Dr. Rutledge, of the 20th Regiment, being then in attendance (he having relieved Doctor Arnott), had orders not to let his heart be taken out of the room, I having received the same orders, the reason of this, as I was informed, was owing to Dr. Antromarchi wishing to have his stomach in his own possession to take to Europe with him, but the other French people did not wish that to be the case. I believe they wished his heart to be taken home with them, but did not get permission; therefore they wished to preserve it, which was accordingly done in the following manner:

His heart and stomach, as I have already mentioned, was in a silver vase or tureen, having been part of his plate, with a cover to it, on which was his coat of arms with an eagle on the top, which unscrewed with a nut; this having been soldered on fast, and then the heart having been put into the tureen by Dr. Rutledge in presence of Count Montholon, &ct., &ct., the top having been soldered on and a hole having been made in the bottom of the vessel, the spirits was then poured in by Dr. Rutledge, and an old shilling soldered on the hole; a considerable delay having taken place owing to the construction of the vessel, it was past 8 o'clock before the two men finished, and during the time the different things were preparing, or, I may say, lay on the table in the library room ready, a silver spoon, fork, and knife, with silver handles, one silver ewer or cream jug with rich workmanship on it, one of his silver plates, one of the same as now in my possession, a silver canister or mug with a top to it, in which was the stomach, the silver dish with his heart, two double Napoleons coined during the Republic, two ditto during Bonaparte's first Consulship, two ditto during his Emperorship, and two ditto during his Imperial reign, with four single and three silver coins; I having had time to look at all the various articles while the men were soldering the rim of the top of the dish where the heart was, and likewise having put the coins and plate in to the coffin myself.

O Dreamer of Dreams

By Glenn Ward Dresbach

O DREAMER OF DREAMS, have you heard men say,
"The glory of dreams must fade away?"
Then I know that you smiled, and I know that you said,
"Not until dreamers of dreams are dead."

O Dreamer of Dreams, have you heard men sigh,
"The palace of dreams must fall from on high?"
Then I know that you smiled and said as you thrilled,
"Not while a dreamer of dreams may build."

O Dreamer of Dreams, have you heard men say,
"The battle is lost ere it starts today?"
Then I know that you shouted out in your might,
"Not while a dreamer of dreams may fight."

O Dreamer of Dreams, have you heard men say,
"Even love turns from his own today?"
Then I know your heart crooned, as winds crooned above,
"Not while a dreamer of dreams may love."

Thirty Years of Gridiron Club Dinners

Since 1885 It Has Been Making Fun of Public Men to Their Faces, but Some, Such as Harrison and Reed, Turned the Laugh on the Club

By Charles Willis Thompson.

IT is thirty years since the Gridiron Club was founded; and Arthur Wallace Dunn, one of its members, is not boasting when he calls it "the most famous dining organization in the world." In this, the beginning of its thirty-first year, Mr. Dunn has published a history of the club, entitled "Gridiron Nights" and published by the Frederick A. Stokes Company. No, it is not a history of the club so much as a history of its skits and jokes, the high spots of its dinners.

Its beginnings were small and its early dinners very unlike those which now attract the leading men of the nation from all over the land. It began by copying the Clover Club, and guying the speakers. That practice was abandoned long ago, and the policy adopted of having the club furnish the fun instead of getting it out of the guests. The guests are lampooned unmercifully, but when one of them rises to speak he is listened to with respectful attention. He can speak freely, for his speech will not be reported. At the beginning of the dinner the President announces, "The Gridiron Club has two rules: Ladies are always present, and reporters are never present."

"After some training, both as Secretary of War and as President," wrote ex-President Taft, "I was able to smile broadly at a caustic joke at my expense and seem to enjoy it, with the consolatory thought that every other guest of any prominence had to suffer the same penalty for an evening's pleasure. The surprise and embarrassment of foreign Ambassadors at their first Gridiron dinner, and their subsequent whole-hearted appreciation of the spirit of these occasions, showed how unique a feature they were of Washington political life."

"I had the time of my life last night," said J. Pierpont Morgan to Mark Hanna, after his first Gridiron dinner.

All the Presidents of the United States from Harrison's time, with the exception of Cleveland, have been guests of the Gridiron, most of them regular guests. Harrison had the reputation of being a cold and reserved man, and he astonished the club by making a scintillating speech. "This is the second time this week," he began, "that I have been called upon to open a congress of American inventors."

When the President concluded his witty and genial speech, Frank Hosford, one of the intense Democrats of the club, went over to Perry S. Heath of The Indianapolis Journal, who was in the President's confidence and his mouthpiece in the press.

"Perry," said Hosford, "your man Harrison is a wonder. I didn't think it was in him."

"Oh, he's all right on his feet," replied Heath. "It's only when he sits down that he falls down."

And that was so true, (says Mr. Dunn.) Sitting at his desk in the White House, he could do and say more things to make him unpopular than any man that ever occupied that exalted station. When he became tired of a visitor, or did not want to continue a conversation further, he would stare vacantly across the room and drum with the fingers of both hands on his desk. Many a prominent man, accompanied perhaps by a friend upon whom he wanted to make an impression, was actually drummed out of Harrison's presence.

At the beginning of Cleveland's second Administration the club gave a dinner to the new Cabinet. The President of the Club was Frank Hatton, who had succeeded Postmaster General Gresham when that statesman became Secretary of the Treasury. Gresham had now become the new Secretary of State, and sat at Hatton's right. Hatton made a speech instructing the new Cabinet in its duties. He warned them, from his own experience as Postmaster General, not to take themselves too seriously.

"I have been there myself, boys," he said; "the old colored messenger will show you where to sign your names, and the clerks will do the rest. I recall my first day as a Cabinet man, and it is no doubt very much like your own experience. I was signing papers where the messenger indicated, but finally I thought I ought to assert myself when I came to a particularly imposing and bulky document with many papers attached. Leaning back in my chair, I said:

"I don't exactly understand this."

"'Neither do I, boss,' replied the messenger, 'but yo' signs yo' name right there.'

"After that I got along without any difficulty."

At a dinner in 1896 David B. Hill was asked to talk about his Presidential chances. Hill, who was a bachelor, replied by telling of a census-taker who came to him when he was Governor of New York, and among other questions asked, "How many children?" "None—to speak of," replied the Governor.

"That answers the Gridiron query," said Hill, and went on with his speech.

Just before McKinley was inaugurated the club held a dinner, at which one of the skits was a conversation over a telephone, McKinley being supposed to be at the other end, in Canton. William E. Annin, one of the members of the club, did the talking. "Yes," he said, "Boutelle is here." (Congressman Boutelle of Maine, who would have liked to be Secretary of the Navy.) "What's he doing, did you say? Oh, just waiting."

This raised a laugh at Boutelle's expense. "Yes," went on Annin, "Speaker Reed is here." Before he could go on, Reed, who was no friend of McKinley's, drawled out in his high-pitched voice:

"But not waiting."

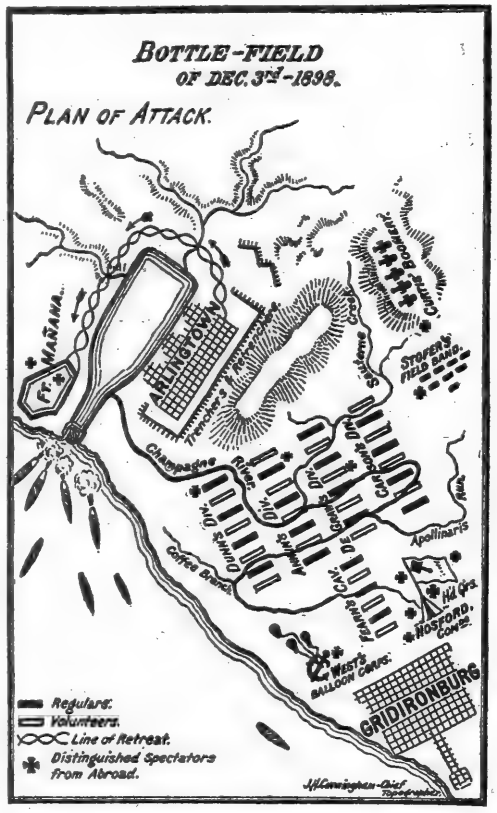
Reed, at another dinner, sat beside Minister Wu Ting-fang, and in his speech poked a little fun at the Chinese Minister. When Dr. Wu was called on to speak, he said:

"I am told that your great Speaker is a Republican. In our country he would be a pronounced monarchist and a supporter of the Manchu dynasty."

Mark Hanna was a favorite at Gridiron dinners, and was always ready to stand for anything. The Gridironers were fond of rapping him for his mastery of the McKinley Administration, and at a dinner held just before the war with Spain, the President of the club, Frank Hosford, in the course of a speech about it, turned to him and said:

"Senator Hanna, can we have this war?"

Hanna was opposed to the war, as was McKinley. When Hanna had spoken, Hosford said caustically: "At least we have one man connected with this Administration who is not afraid to fight," and introduced Assistant Secretary Theodore Roosevelt.



On the Program at the First Dinner Held After the Spanish War.

"We will have this war for the freedom of Cuba, Senator Hanna, in spite of the timidity of the commercial interests," was one of the sentences ground out through the teeth of the Assistant Secretary. "It was," records Mr. Dunn, "a very dramatic moment, and there was no one present at that dinner who did not thoroughly understand that war was inevitable."

The Gridiron Club always made use of Chauncey M. Depew for any purpose whatsoever. At a dinner in 1899 General H. V. Boynton, the President of the club, made an introductory speech about Senator Depew, indicating that he was to be called upon. Just as everybody was expecting the Senator to arise, and while he was getting his preparatory smile ready, there stalked into the room a very large-sized book labeled "Depew's Jokes." On the other side was a picture of Depew laughing vociferously. When the uproar subsided Boynton went on with his speech and introduced somebody else.

A little later, however, he made a speech in which he really introduced Depew, and the Senator arose. But before he could say a word a phonograph began grinding out some of Depew's old stories, and the Senator was obliged to sit down. Later in the evening, however, he had an opportunity to speak, but he began gingerly, expecting some new trap.

Richard Croker, who was present at this same dinner, would not attend until assured that he would not be called on for a speech. "I'm nothing on the gab," he said, "and I'd be a mark for these guys." The club has kept for years a large book in its reception room, and in this book each guest inscribes his name. When Croker reached the book, Mark Hanna had just written his name and was rising from the table. The two leaders had never met. Each looked at the other for an instant. Croker spoke first.

"Your face seems very familiar," and there was a twinkle in his eye.

"I ought to know you from your pictures," said Hanna, smiling broadly.

A little later they found themselves seated opposite each other at the dinner table and had a good time together. "I knew your face," said Croker, "but I missed that suit with the dollar marks."

"I'd have been sure it was you if you'd worn that striped suit," retorted Hanna.

"How did you like it, Chief?" asked Croker's host, John Corwin, after the dinner was over.

"Fine," replied Croker. "Say, do you know who made the best speech? The Chink. The Chink was better'n all of 'em."

Senator Beveridge came to Washington heralded as the "Young Man Eloquent." He attended his first Gridiron dinner in 1899, handicapped by his boy-orator reputation. Mr. Dunn thus describes his adventures:

When Senator Beveridge was called upon he was escorted to the area in front of the President, given a brief lecture, and told how to deport himself as a United States Senator. First, his youth was criticised and he was told to overcome this defect by wearing whiskers, and a disguise of whiskers was put over his face. Then he was informed that one trouble in the Senate was due to an inclination to talk too long, and he was given an alarm clock and told that when the alarm sounded it was time to quit. Having received these instructions, he was allowed to proceed.

Holding the alarm clock in one hand and waving the other with oratorical gestures, the young Senator began to speak, but he had not been going more than three minutes when the alarm, which had been previously set for the occasion, went off, and as it rang loud and long everybody shouted and laughed, and Beveridge had to wait for another occasion before he was able to make a speech to the Gridiron Club.

When Senator Tillman made his Gridiron début he had the reputation of being a wild man. Gorman, the conservative Democratic leader, was another guest. Tillman was presented with a black flag, informed that he was "partially civilized," and allowed to speak. Mr. Dunn says:

I wonder how many people recollect the striking figure which Tillman made as he stood there in all the strength and vigor of those days waving that black flag back and forth and saying that it would "wave over my grave before it would find me in the same camp with Arthur Pue Gorman." In later years, when Tillman became one of the conservative Senators on the Democratic side, this remark could hardly have been made, for I fancy that he and Gorman would not have been very far apart.

At a dinner early in 1900 Senator Thomas C. Platt surprised the club by reading a poem he had written many years before. This was a dinner given by the Lotos Club to the Gridiron. The poem was an amusing production, and made the greater hit because Mr. Platt's gift of humor was not generally known.

General Miles's once famous call at the White House, in which he had an altercation with President Roosevelt, has probably been forgotten now, but at the time it was widely celebrated and some of the stories about it were very lurid. At the next Gridiron dinner Miles was present, and so was the President. At one stage of the dinner General Boynton came limping in with his arm in a sling, patches on his face, and a bandage over his head.

"Why, General, where have you been?" asked Louis A. Coolidge.

"I have been to call on the President—"

Whatever else may have been in the reply was never heard, for there was a shriek and a roar from the head of the table showing that Mr. Roosevelt thoroughly enjoyed the situation. The same could not be said for General Miles.

In January, 1904, Mirza Ali Asgar Khan, former Grand Vizier of Persia, was making a trip around the world, and was sailing to Europe from New York. His attendance at the Gridiron dinner was announced in the newspapers. What happened is thus described:

He came in late, after the dinner had been in progress for a time, and was accompanied by Scott C. Bone of The Washington Post, his host of the evening. Before taking his seat, directly in front of the President of the United States, he bowed low to that official, and then made a sweeping salaam to the assembled company. Senator Beveridge was introduced and shook hands. William H. Taft, then Governor General of the Philippines, who had crossed the Pacific Ocean on the same ship with the Grand Vizier, walked across the dining room and shook hands, expressing his pleasure at seeing him again. Senators Aldrich, Gorman, and Hanna and Speaker Cannon, sitting near by, were introduced.

After the dinner had progressed for a time President Louis A. Coolidge introduced the Oriental guest as one who had journeyed far and who came that night with views he had gathered in his travels. Mirza Ali Asgar Khan, with more profund bows, said that his message to the Gridiron Club and its guests had been written, as he was somewhat imperfect in our language, and then he began to read from large sheets of paper.

"The people of the United States," he began, "are watching every day to see whether there is to be a war in the Old World. In the East we also watch for that war. It is to observe preparations for that war that I travel.

"I was in Japan before I came to this country. In Persia we take great interest in Japan, because the next war will be the great struggle between the civilisations of the East and the West. We believe that the Eastern civilization will overcome the Western civilisation.

"This will mark the downfall of Russia, that treacherous power that has plotted against the peace of mankind from the days of Peter the Great, and has been the hypocrite, the false friend of every weaker power it has aimed to destroy."

He was interrupted by a member of the club who suggested that as the Russian Ambassador was our guest no such discussion should be permitted. Mirza Ali looked puzzled and continued:

"The barbarous rule of Germany will be brought to an end and a higher morality will supplant the vicious rule of the vandals who have kept the intelligence of Europe under a reign of terror—"

Again he was interrupted and attention called to the presence of the German Ambassador. The situation was explained to the Grand Vizier, and he turned over two or three pages of his manuscript and continued:

"And then Great Britain, the traditional enemy of the free American people—perfidious Albion, as she is called by one of your poets. She has been the trader of the world—buyer and seller of men—pretending to love liberty, but hypocritically sheltering slavery when it could be to her interest—"

President Coolidge stopped him by sharp raps of the gavel. The faces of the diplomats were drawn into frowns of disapproval. Guests and members were aghast, while President Roosevelt looked as if he thought it was the makings of a bully row.

"We are very much obliged," said Mr. Coolidge, "to his Excellency the Grand Vizier, but as some members of the British Embassy are with us—"

"You will not let me speak," said the Vizier angrily; "then I bid you good night! You invite me here—you ask me to speak—I prepare my speech—you are as bad as the rest. You have no free press—you have no free speech! I go."

And as he was making sweeping gestures he tore away his fez, wig and beard, and there stood Francis E. Leupp of The New York Evening Post. He had put over the greatest hoax ever perpetrated by the Gridiron Club. The real Mirza Ali Asgar Khan had sailed for Europe that very day.

Senator Allison never committed himself on any subject, and there were many stories of his excessive caution in expressing opinions. The most famous is the story of some one's calling his attention to the fact that some sheep passing by had been sheared, and of Allison's reply, "It would appear that they have been sheared—on this side." Mr. Dunn contributes another:

One time Allison called a newspaper man into his committee room and read him a long letter addressed to a constituent at home, and asked the correspondent what he thought of it.

"Well, Senator," replied the correspondent, with some hesitation, "I don't think he will be able to make anything out of it."

"That was the intention," replied Allison, fairly beaming.

When Ethan Allen Hitchcock resigned as Secretary of the Interior, and was succeeded by James R. Garfield, the West was much pleased, for Hitchcock was unpopular there. A few days later there was a Gridiron dinner at which the late Francis W. Cushman, the brilliant Congressman from Washington, was called on for a speech. Cushman began by complimenting President Roosevelt, who was present, on the change in his Cabinet.

"When Hitchcock resigned," said Cushman, "there wasn't a dry throat west of the Mississippi."

At a dinner in 1911, at which William J. Bryan was present, the Gridiron Club held a mock session of the Supreme Court. One of the members applied for a writ to prevent Mr. Bryan from running for President.

"Oh, let him run," said the court. "What difference does it make!"

Just before President Wilson's inauguration the club held a session of the incoming Cabinet. One of the mock Cabinet was made up to represent Mr. Bryan, and when he entered he was asked:

"You have never attended a Cabinet meeting before, Mr. Bryan?"

"No," was the reply, "but I have made three attempts."

At another dinner in 1913 Thomas F. Logan of The Philadelphia Inquirer was initiated as a member, and part of his hazing was to go about as a young reporter and interview the guests. Then he was questioned concerning the results.

"Did you interview the Secretary of War?" he was asked.

"Yes."

"What did he say?"

"He denies it."

"What does he deny?"

"That's what I asked him, and he said it didn't make any difference what; it was the immemorial custom of the War Department to deny everything."

One feature of Gridiron dinners is the tribute to members who have died during the year, if there have been such. The lights suddenly go out, and in the darkness the voice of Louis A. Coolidge is heard. On one such occasion he said:

"The Gridiron Club goes on forever; though in the course of time its membership must change, till in due season those now mingling here become but memories to the later born. We cannot alter everlasting laws or stop the timepiece of eternity which strikes for each his hour to fall asleep. Our comrades come; they go; and as they pass they lay their offerings on the Gridiron shrine, contented if the gifts they bear blend in the glory of the club they love and fix their memory in a place among the crowding recollections of receding years. And as they melt into the shadows of the past it is most fitting that those lingering here speak each name fondly for remembrance sake."

There is a hush where a moment before merriment prevailed and jest went ringing. Upon a screen appear the faces of men who are no more. From out the darkness comes a voice calling their names, briefly reciting their deeds, and pronouncing a final tribute and farewell. There is a distant strain of music; the pictures begin to fade among clouds; the music grows stronger and the words of the song are heard:

Don't you hear them bells;
Don't you hear them bells;
They are ringing out the glory of the day.

The lights flash and the whole room joins in the chorus; and mirth, wit, and merrymaking again hold sway. "This," says Mr. Dunn, "is as it should be. It is as those gone before would wish. Every Gridiron man wants to be thus remembered by his fellow-members, but only for a moment would he have the enjoyment of a Gridiron dinner interrupted while the brief tribute is paid and he is enshrined in memories before forever passing into the shadows. Sentiment, of course; and as I have reviewed the past thirty years of Gridiron life I have found sentiment lingering at every milestone. It founded the organization, kept it alive, placed it upon a plane of success and achievement. Without such true and lasting sentiment there would be no Gridiron Club."

Art Thrives in Spite of Our Prosperity Worship

Men of Genius Must Express Themselves, Declares Booth Tarkington, Although We of This Country Don't Give a Nickel for Things of the Soul

By Joyce Kilmer.

MR. BOOTH TARKINGTON never will be called the George M. Cohan of fiction. His novel "The Turmoil" is surely an indictment of modern American urban civilization; of its materialism, its braggadocio, its contempt for the things of the soul.

It was with the purpose of making this indictment a little clearer than it could be when it is surrounded by a story, that I recently asked Mr. Tarkington a few questions. And his answers are not likely to increase our national complacencies.

In the first place I asked Mr. Tarkington if the atmosphere of a young and energetic nation might not reasonably be expected to be favorable to literary and artistic expression.

"Yes, it might," said Mr. Tarkington. "There may be spiritual progress in America as phenomenal as her material progress.

"There is and has been extraordinary progress in the arts. But the people as a whole are naturally preoccupied with their material progress. They are much more interested in Mr. Rockefeller than in Mr. Sargent."

The last two sentences of Mr. Tarkington's reply made me eager for something a little more specific on that subject.

"What are the forces in America today," I asked, "that hinder the development of art and letters?"

Mr. Tarkington replied: "There are no forces in America today that hinder and development of individuals in art and letters, save in unimportant cases here and there. But there is a spirit that hinders general personal decency, knows and cares nothing for beauty, and is glad to have its body dirty for the sake of what it calls 'prosperity.'

"It 'wouldn't give a nickel' for any kind of art. But it can't and doesn't hinder artists from producing works of art, though it makes them swear."

"But do not these conditions in many instances seriously hinder individual artists?"

Mr. Tarkington smiled. "Nothing stops an artist if he is one," he said. "But many things may prevent a people or a community from knowing or caring for art.

"The climate may be unfavorable; we need not expect the Eskimos to be interested in architecture. In the United States politicians have usually controlled the public purchase of works of art and the erection of public buildings. This is bad for the public, naturally."

"I suppose," I said, "that the conditions you describe are distinctively modern, are they not? At what time in the history of America have conditions been most favorable to literary expression?"

Mr. Tarkington's reply was not what I expected. "At all times," he said. "Literary expression does not depend on the times, though the appreciation of it does, somewhat."

I asked Mr. Tarkington if he agreed with Mr. Gouverneur Morris in considering the short story a modern development. He did not.

"There are short stories in the Bible," he said, "and in every mythology; 'folk stories' of all races and tribes. Probably Mr. Morris's definition of the short story would exclude these. I agree with him that short stories are better written nowadays."

"But you do not believe," I said, "that American literature in general is better than it used to be, do you? Why is it that there is now no group of American writers like the New England group which included Longfellow, Whittier, Lowell, Emerson, and Thoreau?"

"Why is there," Mr. Tarkington asked in turn, "no group like Homer (wasn't he a group?) in Greece? There may be, but if there is just such a modern group it would tend only to repeat the work of the Homeric group, which wouldn't be interesting to the rest of us.

"The important thing is to find a group unlike Longfellow, Whittier, Lowell, Emerson, and Thoreau. That is, if one accepts the idea that it is important to find a group."

Mr. Tarkington's criticisms of the modern American city have been so severe that I expected him to tell me that all writers should live in the country. But again he surprised me. In reply to my question as to which environment was more favorable to the production of literature, the city or the country, he said:

"It depends upon the nerves of the writer. A writer can be born anywhere, and he can grow up anywhere."

There has recently been considerable discussion — Professor Edward Garnet and Gertrude Atherton have taken a considerable share in it—on the relative merits of contemporary English and American fiction. I asked Mr. Tarkington if in his opinion the United States had at the present time novelists equal to those of England.

"That is unanswerable!" he answered. "Writers aren't like baseball teams. What's the value of my opinion that 'The Undiscovered Country' is a 'greater' novel than 'A Pair of Blue Eyes'? These questions remind me of school debating societies. Nothing is demonstrated, but everybody has his own verdict."

Until I asked Mr. Tarkington about it I had heard only two opinions as to the probable effect on literature of the war. One was that which William Dean Howells tersely expressed by saying: "War stops literature," and the other was that the war is purifying and strengthening all forms of literary expression.

But Mr. Tarkington had something new to say about it. "What effect," I asked, "is the war likely to have on American literature?"

"None of consequence," he answered. "The poet will find the subject, war or no war. The sculptor doesn't depend upon epaulets."

Mr. Tarkington is so inveterate a writer of serials and his work is so familiar to the readers of the American magazines that I desired to get his expert opinion as to whether or not the American magazines, with their remarkably high prices, had harmed or benefited fiction. His reply was somewhat noncommittal.

"They have induced many people to look upon the production of fiction as a profitable business," he said. "But those people would merely not have 'tried fiction' at all otherwise. Prices have nothing to do with art."

Mr. Tarkington had some interesting things to say about that venerable mirage, the Great American Novel. I asked him if that longed-for work would ever be written; if, for example, there would ever be a work of fiction reflecting American life as "Vanity Fair" reflects English life. He replied:

"If Thackeray had been an American he would not have written a novel reflecting American life as 'Vanity Fair' reflected the English life of its time. He would have written of New York; his young men would have come there after Harvard. The only safe thing to say of the Great American Novel is that the author will never know he wrote it."

Mr. Charles Belmont Davis had told me that a writer who had some means of making a living other than writing would do better work than one who devoted himself exclusively to literature. I asked Mr. Tarkington what he thought about this.

"I think," he said, "that it would be very well for a writer to have some means of making a living other than writing. There are likely to be times in his career when it would give him a sense of security concerning food. But I doubt if it would much affect his writing, unless he considered writing to be a business."

Mr. Tarkington's answer to my next question is hereby commended to the attention of all those feminine revolutionists who believe that they are engaged in the pleasant task of changing the whole current of modern thought.

"How has literature been affected," I asked, "by the suffrage movement and feminism?"

Mr. Tarkington looked up in some surprise. "I haven't heard of any change," he said.

The author of "The Turmoil" could never be accused of jingoism. But he is far from agreeing with those critics who believe that American literature is merely "a phase of English literature." I asked him if he believed that there was such a thing as a distinctively American literature.

"Certainly," he replied. "Is 'Huckleberry Finn' a phase? It's a monument; not an English one. English happens to be the language largely used."

The allusion in Mr. Tarkington's last reply suggested—what every reader of "Penrod" must know—that this novelist is an enthusiastic admirer of Mark Twain. So I told him that Mr. T. A. Daly had classed Mark Twain with Artemus Ward and Philander K. Doesticks, and had said that these men wrote nothing of real merit and were "the Charlie Chaplins of their time."

Mr. Tarkington smiled. "Get Mr. T. A. Daly to talk some more," he said. "We'd like to hear something about Voltaire and Flo Ziegfeld. Second thoughts indicate that 'T. A. Daly' is the pen name of Mr. Charlie Chaplin. Of course! And that makes it all right and natural. I thought at first that it was a joke."

Facts from Many Lands

THE co-operative system is growing in Scotland, despite the war. The report of the Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Society for the first half of 1915, recently made public, shows that the volume of business transacted was greater than in any corresponding period in the past. To some extent this was due to the higher market prices of goods, but in nearly every department the quantities of goods sold showed large increases. The net sales for the six months amounted to $26,3[illegible]7, an increase of $4,377,061

In order to regulate the supply and price of bread, the Government of Portugal has taken over the entire wheat crop of the country and has authorized the importation of 7,348,667 bushels of foreign wheat through the War Department. All flour mills in the country are required to furnish to the public and bakers three types of flour at prices not exceeding 16, 9.6, and 8.3 centavos (70 centavos equals $1 at present exchange) per kilo, (2.2 pounds.) The exportation of wheat is forbidden and all supplies of the cereal on hand must be reported to the Government under penalty of confiscation or fine for failure to do so.

The foreign-born depositors in the postal savings bank of the New York Post Office outnumber the native born by about three to one. There are 32,616 Russian-born depositors, who have saved $4,506,984. Italians have saved $2,568,670, and depositors born in America have $1,996,564 on deposit.

Real estate transactions in New York City for the first half of the present year amounted to $775,000,000, an increase of $25,000,000 over the corresponding period of 1914. The building outlays reached a total of $93,000,000.

Marie Corelli Discovers a 17 Year Old Genius

Famous Novelist Is Enthusiastic Over Drawings by Winifred Barker, Who Lives in a Little Village and Has Had Few Advantages for Development

From The Sphere, London, Oct. 2, 1915.

By Marie Corelli.

THROUGH the courtesy and sympathetic interest of the editor of The Sphere I am enabled to call the attention of the art-loving public to the work of Winifred Barker, a girl of 17, whose imaginative picture of "The Flower Fairies" is reproduced above. The idea of the drawing was suggested to her by two lines from the poems of Keats:

Here are sweet peas a'tiptoe for a flight,

And she has represented with considerable delicacy and grace the attitude of the fairies, or embodied flowers, as ready to depart from their ambush of blossom. One of their friends is offering them a farewell posy, and another, resting rather despondently on the sun dial, is evidently regretting that the moment of parting has come. The gorgeous peacock, sweeping his glittering train through the grass, suggests the vanity of earthly possession —"I shall be here when you are flown!"

The whole conception is dainty and poetic in form and color, and especially remarkable considering the young artist has had no instruction or training whatever, save such as could be afforded at a small private school at the little village of Wotton-under-Edge, in Gloucestershire, where she learned a few first principles of drawing and "elementary" brushwork.

Her father is a school attendance officer, and his income is just about sufficient to maintain the family in average comfort. Her mother can give no idea as to where and how her young daughter derived her instincts of form, grouping, or color. She began when a mere child of 10 to write fairy stories and illustrate them according to her own ideas of "fairyland"; and she had filled four or five ordinary copybooks with such efforts when her mother called upon me at Stratford-on-Avon and brought several of these books, with the request that I would look at them and see if there was any talent in her work.

I found not only talent, but genius; the child was then 15, and the pictures she had drawn on the very unsatisfactory surface of cheap copybook paper displayed an imagination and skill far beyond her years. Faults there were, of course, and faults can still easily be found, but few can deny the opulence of imagination and grace of conception with which she is endowed.

At the present time she is writing an original and fantastic "fairy romance," illustrating it as she goes on, and I have arranged for its publication when completed.

Her gift is all the more remarkable in that she has never visited any of the great picture galleries, except the one in Bristol, and her knowledge of literature is limited to the circulating books and magazines of the village reading club. She has never drawn from the living model, and her grouping of figures is evolved entirely from her own imagination.

Her personality is agreeable; she is a small, bright creature with sparkling dark eyes and a vivacious manner, and no "art" affectations. She has a happy disposition, though possibly she will never be quite so happy as she is now, far away from the world's clamor, in the quiet little Gloucestershire village, thirty miles from anywhere, possessing an Aladdin's palace of imagination, wherein as yet no sour pessimist or carping critic has entered to cast a discouraging shadow on the youthful brightness of her fairy fancies. She works without effort, in the sheer joy of the creative faculty, and though she has still much to learn, I believe I am not wrong in prophesying for her a brilliant and successful future.

French Prisoner's Thrilling Escape from Germany

AN exciting tale of escape from prison in Germany is told in Le Figaro by a Frenchman who has since joined the French Army, in which his father and three of his brothers are also serving.

He was imprisoned a year ago while on a trip through Germany and taken to Donaueschingen, a town on the upper part of the Rhine, about 15 miles from the Swiss frontier. While the Frenchman was revolving plans of escape he was suddenly transferred far to the north and placed in a big concentration camp in the Duchy of Brunswick, with about 10,000 other civilian prisoners. To get away from there was out of the question, but the tenacious prisoner never gave up hope, and last May managed to get permission to be sent back to Donaueschingen. He was allowed a fair degree of liberty, but being obliged to report twice a day to the military authorities escape was still a matter of great difficulty.

Finally, however, on a moonlight night last August he left his shoes, as was his custom, at the door of his bedroom, and having attached pieces of rubber from pencils to another pair of shoes as a precaution against noise, he silently descended the stairway of his lodgings.

Armed with a map, a compass and an electric pocket light, he headed for the Swiss frontier, through forests and across streams. After a few miles his feet were sore and he found it almost impossible to move further. Then fog made him blunder into a village which he was aiming to avoid. A farmer's dog barked and hurled itself at the stranger. "I silenced him with my knife," remarks the Frenchman.

Then he came to a river, with no bridge in sight, and there was nothing to do but swim. "When I got to the other side," says the doughty ex-prisoner, "there was no part of me dry but my hair." But on he pressed, sore and dripping, until he reached a railroad and saw, close at hand, a customs post. The real dangers were beginning.

There were still five miles between him and Switzerland, his haven of safety. He crawled across the railroad tracks with the greatest precaution and without arousing the near-by customs officials. Then came a strip of woods, where thorns pierced his flesh and tore his clothes, and at last he arrived, dead beat, at a clearing and saw ahead of him the frontier separating Germany and Switzerland.

It was guarded by three files of soldiers, posted along three high roads running parallel to each other. He got past the first line without giving the alarm, and also the second. But while creeping past the third he stumbled and fell. That roused the nearest sentinel.

"Halt!" he shouted.

Off ran the Frenchman, followed by a bullet and another. Both missed, but the canny fugitive gave a cry as if he had been hit and then scrambled into a hiding place near the third high road.

Several soldiers ran up and couldn't find him, but he heard one say in a satisfied voice: "I hit him anyhow."

When the soldiers had gone a few yards away, the Frenchman, with a last supreme effort, ran as hard as he could to the frontier, crossed it, and then, catching sight of his pursuers, called out to them in German:

"Don't chase me any more. I'm in Switzerland!"

Expert Suggests a New Model Sunday Law

Powell Crichton, Attorney for the Sabbath Committee, Outlines a Plan Which He Thinks Will Solve Some of the Many Problems Presented

THE Sabbath law is losing by degrees, while the Day of Rest law is growing by leaps and bounds." This is the personal—not official—conclusion drawn from his experience by Powell Crichton of 14 Wall Street, attorney for the New York Sabbath Committee, whose recent protest prevented the Sunday performance by a company under David Bispham of the musical playlet, "Adelaide," which was at first scheduled for a theatre and later transferred to the Church of the Messiah.

The objection of the Sabbath Committee, which pointed out that dramatic performance anywhere on Sunday was a violation of the law, caused the abandonment of the plan, and brought down considerable criticism based on the fact that vaudeville theatres are open constantly on Sunday with little successful interference.

Mr. Crichton met this criticism by explaining that the present law in New York specifically prohibits certain acts, and that a vaudeville performance may be made up of numbers entirely outside the prohibition. He pointed out, too, the difficulty of getting convictions against vaudeville houses under a law which in many cases leaves the determination of the exact nature of the performance to the judgment of the Magistrate or the Assistant District Attorney in charge of the case.

"Very few people know what the Sabbath law really is," said Mr. Crichton, "while many have ideas of what it ought to be. The present New York law was made a good many years ago, and many parts of it are not in accord with present conditions. The enforcement of a penal provision cannot be optional with the administrative official, nor can we agree to the judiciary's legislating by interpretation. The modern man is accustomed to many comforts never dreamed of by our Puritan forefathers. What is a necessity of life today must be accepted by the logical thinker in the enactment of laws.

"The deterrent spirit that clings to the growth of the Day of Rest Law and constantly gains exceptions is the commercial mollusc; and it is against the commercial side that I have based my work in regard to Sunday theatrical performances.

"We prevented the performance of a play for charity on Sunday, and thus drew down on ourselves a great deal of criticism. But once allow the beginning of such things, and it would not be long before everywhere plays would be given seven days in the week with a thin pretence of charity masking the absorption of most of the profits by the managers.

"The practice of giving dress rehearsals of new plays on Sunday nights, if allowed, would result in practically moving Monday openings up one night and thus allowing the managers to use up on this night the passes given out for the première. Thus they would get one more night to sell all the seats in the house.

"A few years ago I was instrumental in prohibiting Olga Nethersole from giving an act from 'Sapho' at a New York theatre on Sunday night because the Sunday law prohibited the performance of a tragedy or comedy or any part thereof. The Legislature had prohibited this because the actors did not want to work on Sunday. The theatrical manager desired to make more money and ordered Miss Nethersole to appear on Sunday. The actual result was that she did appear and recited two poems, omitting the first act from 'Sapho,' and doing instead something that was not malum prohibitum.

"I hope to get such changes in the Sunday law that the actors will no longer have to rehearse on Sunday.

"All this, of course, is looking at the matter from the point of view of justice to the workingman rather than from the religious attitude. In earlier days the influence of the church was supreme; the main purpose of Sunday laws was apparently to force people into church and hold them there till the service was over.

"I have drafted a model Sunday law,

which I presented to the International Lord's Day Congress of the World at Oakland, California, on July 30, last. Now I want it understood that this suggested law is not in any way an official suggestion of the New York Sabbath Committee, and does not necessarily represent the opinions of any member of that committee. Indeed, at the Oakland conference there were many who disagreed with my specific suggestions, particularly in regard to the permission of Sunday baseball and to my general attitude, which was to consider in every case the possible enforcement. This law embodies ideas based on the experience of an attorney who has been engaged for three years in the enforcement of Sunday laws in New York. I merely ask any one who may disagree with me to attempt the enforcement of such a law.

"The general principles which I should observe are four in number:

"1. There must be a day of rest for the workingman.

"2. This day of rest should not contain exceptions for the commercial slaves of the almighty dollar.

"3. Reasonable exceptions should be made for modern necessities and conveniences that add to the comfort of life.

"4. A Sunday law should contain no unenforceable provisions.

"I have become convinced that legislation and the enforcement thereof may be prohibitive rather than punitive, and that the officer of the law very often needs real punishment for not stepping forward and stopping a violation at its inception, rather than to allow him to add to his record of arrests and convictions. It would seem better to warn an overzealous merchant to lock his door rather than for an officer to sneak in on him in plain clothes and surprise him in the making of a forbidden sale, even to the officer.

"And if it is thought that this attitude indicates a lack of success in getting convictions for violation of the Sunday law, as it stands at present, I would say that during my first year as attorney for the Sabbath Committee, twice as many people were convicted for violating Sunday laws as in any year before. As a Christmas reward, one of my best friends addressed a letter to me as 'Attorney for the Society for the Prevention of Good Times.'"

The law, as suggested by Mr. Crichton, follows:

Section 1. The first day of the week being by general consent set apart for rest and religious uses, the law prohibits the doing on that day of certain acts hereinafter specified, which are serious interruptions of the repose and religious liberty of the community.

Section 2. A violation of any prohibition of this chapter is Sabbath breaking.

Section 3. Punishment for Sabbath Breaking.—Sabbath breaking is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not less than $10 and not more than $50; but for a second or other offense, where the party shall have been previously convicted it shall be punishable by a fine of not less than $25 and not more than $500 or by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding five days, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Section 4. Labor Prohibited on Sunday.—All labor on Sunday is prohibited except that which is incidental to any business hereinafter excepted, or not prohibited, and excepting labor in works of necessity or charity, which the public comfort, good order or health of a community demand and need the continuation thereof; but every person employed in any excepted business is prohibited from working on Sunday unless an affidavit is in the possession of the employer specifying the day in each week that the employe refrains from labor.

Section 5. Persons Observing Another Day as a Sabbath.—It is a sufficient defense to a prosecution for labor on the first day of the week, that the defendant uniformly keeps another day of the week as holy time, and does not labor on that day, and that the labor complained of was done in such manner as not to interrupt or disturb other persons in observing the first day of the week as holy time.

Section 6. Public Sports on Sunday.—All public sports, exercises or shows, whether indoors or out-of-doors, upon Sunday, are prohibited.

Section 7. Business.—All business, professions, arts, crafts, sciences, trades, manufactures and agricultural or mechanical employments upon Sunday are prohibited, except—

1. Works of public utility, necessity and charity needful to the good order, health or comfort of a community.

2. Works that by their technical peculiarities require continuous operation.

3. Work to save property in and of any business in cases of emergency, or where such property is in imminent danger of destruction or serious injury.

4. The following:

(b) Polishing and blacking shoes before 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and

(c) Taking of photographs between the hours of 3 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, but not the developing and printing thereof.

Except in cases of emergency it shall not be lawful for any person to require any employe to work on Sunday unless such employe is allowed during the next six days of such week twenty-four consecutive hours without labor in or about the business of his employer.

Section 8. Public Traffic on Sunday.—All manner of public selling or offering for sale or purchase, any goods, chattels, or other personal property or any real estate, upon Sunday is prohibited, except as follows:

1. Articles of food may be sold, served, supplied, and delivered at any time before 10 o'clock in the morning;

2. Meals may be sold to be eaten on the premises where sold at any time of the day;

3. Caterers may serve meals to their patrons at any time of the day;

4. Prepared tobacco, milk, eggs, ice, soda-water, fruit, flowers, confectionery, newspapers, gasoline, oil, tires, drugs, medicines, and surgical instruments may be sold in places other than a room where spirituous or malt liquors or wines are kept or offered for sale and may be delivered at any time of the day;

5. Delicatessen dealers may sell, supply, serve, and deliver cooked and prepared foods between the hours of 4 o'clock in the afternoon and 7:30 o'clock in the evening, in addition to the time provided for in subdivision 1 hereof.

The provisions of this section, however, shall not be construed to allow or permit the public sale or exposing for sale or delivery of uncooked flesh foods or meats, fresh or salt, at any hour or time of the day. Delicatessen dealers shall not be considered as caterers within subdivision 3 hereof.

Section 9. Serving Process.—All service of any civil process on Sunday is prohibited and shall be void, except where such service is specially authorized by statute, and to the same effect Saturday shall be construed as Sunday in favor of any person who keeps that day as holy time and does not labor on that day.

Section. 10. Processions and Parades.—All processions and parades on Sunday are prohibited, except processions to and from any church or a place where memorial services are held, or any cemetery.

Section. 11. Noise.—All disturbing noises, within sight or hearing of any place of religious worship, or affecting the quiet and peace of any owner or tenant of land, are prohibited on Sunday.

For the purpose of this act no band of music shall play within three blocks or closer than two hundred yards to any place of religious worship.

Crying aloud of newspapers shall be construed as disturbing noise.

Section 12. Public Amusements Other Than Sports, Exercises, or Shows.—Every performance or rehearsal of any amusement or entertainment in which any artist, acrobat, actor or other performer of the vaudeville, operatic or dramatic stage takes part is prohibited on Sunday, irrespective of whether an admission fee is charged, or whether an audience is present, or whether the performance or rehearsal is given on a stage, at a private home, out-of-doors or at any other place whatever.

For the purpose of this section any participant to any degree whatever shall be a principal in the misdemeanor.

This section shall not be construed to prohibit moving pictures, symphony, instrumental or band concerts, chamber concerts, lectures, addresses, or vocal singing in which the singer does not render any opera or musical comedy or any part thereof.

Section 13. Enforcement of the Sunday Law.—Any neglect or omission in the prohibition or prevention of the continuation of any violation of any section of this Sunday law Statute on the part of any officer of the law whose post or duty includes the place of the alleged violation is prohibited, and any two residents of the State may make complaint therefor before any police magistrate or justice of the peace, who must on the same day summons the officer complained against to appear before him for a hearing within the next three succeeding days.

ART AT HOME AND ABROAD

Anne Goldthwaite's Vigorous Art Seen in a Variety of Forms and Recalling Diverse Influences Without Displaying Imitative Tendencies

Illustrations New and Old—Portraits of Contemporary Dancers—The Modern School of Painters Represented by Artists of Ability and Skill

THE work of Anne Goldthwaite would inspire a French critic to enthusiasm. It has those qualities in which the French delight, moderation and discretion, personal feeling held in close obedience to the law. The exhibition of her paintings and drawings, selected examples from the product of sixteen industrious years, at the Berlin Photographic Company's Galleries, reveals a substantial and sincere talent which has developed normally under influences as various as those of Walter Shirlaw and Paul Cézanne, assimilating thoroughly the impressions acquired and strengthening from year to year.

Perhaps Miss Goldthwaite shows her originality most in her color, yet it is color that seems always to have been familiar. Extremely grave, the simplest greens and browns of the old earth's wardrobe, she manages in it to convey a sense of immutability that would have recommended her to the old man who wanted to make of Impressionism an affair for the museums. Occasionally her forms show too much of this immovable quality, but as she advances in skill of handling she permits her brush to afford the imagination a gateway of escape. She ceases to crowd her pigment up to her outline; she leaves spacious cracks and crevices through which you slip to a world beyond the pasty bounds of pigment; she becomes swifter in line and less anxious in the patting of her planes.

The portrait she recently has painted of herself very fairly readers her competent present style. An artist in his self portraits is apt to be both bound and free. As the model, he feels a constraint which he would not feel before another artist. He is eager to pose properly for himself and takes the task most seriously. As an artist, however, he is independent and unconcerned as to what his model may think of him; he works vigorously, with the happy sense that his model is completely at his disposal and under his control, with time unlimited and no regulation of rests and respites imposed. The result usually reflects these cross-currents of feeling, and Miss Goldthwaite's portrait is no exception to the rule. Her feeling for style is so strong that she has imparted a certain impressive nobility to a head that she has approached obviously in the spirit of implacable realism. She has placed it rather awkwardly on the canvas, but she has worked even its awkwardness into a large and solemn design. The division of the masses is boldly schemed, and a Japanese printmaker would take pleasure in the harsh, clangorous blacks. In spite of the general effect of solidity, she has kept her brush flexible and has avoided a too heavy loading of the canvas. The portraiture is not, in the old sense of the word, "truthful," but the painting is alive with truth.

Quite at the opposite point of a rather wide range is the head of a pretty child in a green hat with cherry trimmings and a cherry-red mouth, a charming picture, the eyes softly adream and the spirit of youth in the face, but the spontaneity and vivacity of the style fail wholly to conceal the excessive interest taken in the picturesque qualities of the model. The observer finds it easy to translate the head into another idiom, into another rhythm, to make of it a bit of rhymed singsong as less distinguished painters in an older-fashioned style would have made it. The character is not clothed in the one vesture suitable to it; it is shoved casually into a little ready-made garment that becomes its youth and loveliness, as almost anything would.

Quite otherwise are the heads of "The Vicar" and "Monsignor Benson." Here the research into character is so earnest that the manner of rendering it becomes unnoticeable. A great variety of textures and planes are carefully handled, yet the result is simple and gives the impression of a sure and keen vision grasping instantly the essentials of an effect and holding them until they can be adequately translated. The head of Mgr. Benson in particular, with eyes blue and shrewd, the bony structure of the cranium compact and apparent through its coverings, the skin slightly yellowed, and the background a daring, vivid yellow, sends the mind roaming from Lenbach to Van Gogh. The hateful habit of reference is difficult to avoid in the presence of Miss Goldthwaite's work, personal though it is. Reminiscences of other painters crowd the mind, painters who have found the same zest in seeking and have met the same problems in similar ways. These reminders, however, are not unworthy, nor do they imply imitation. They imply rather a community of aims such as one discovers and ignores in artists of lower intelligence, whose works look alike because an objective representation was the common ideal. As one moves toward subjectivity in art the product naturally becomes more diversified, yet even so there is a curious likeness obtaining among the greatest works of any period in painting as in literature. Miss Goldthwaite reaches toward the same star as the masters. That she comes less near to it than many of them is important only because the extent of her ambition makes her degree of achievement a matter of concern. Those who are content to watch the artists of the world forever on their way without expecting any of them to arrive at that goal which exists only in the imagination get much pleasure from this striving temper that looks beyond gates and fences, above valleys and foothills, and, if there is enough strength, occasionally climbs with such stalwart spirits as Cézanne past the level of vegetation to gaunt heights. One hardly expects from the painter of these portraits so much of stern adventure, yet now and then her work discloses characteristics that point toward it. One little head so rich in character as to become caricature for the multitude is thrust into the background of the exhibition because of its saliency.

It is interesting to know the history of a painter at once so conservative and so aggressive, a painter so steeped in modernity and so respectful of classic ideals. Mr. Birnbaum, as usual, is ready with facts and adroit inspiriting comment. Miss Goldthwaite, he says in the introduction to the catalogue, is a descendant of the old slave-owning cavaliers of Alabama, who came to New York more than fifteen years ago and became a pupil of Walter Shirlaw. In 1907 she went abroad, and presently became one of the organizers of the Académie Moderne, together with other young artists whose minds were disturbed by the conflict of opinions raging then as always in the French capital, and who sought to work out their own convictions. Charles Guerin, President of the Painters' Section of the Autumn Salon, was asked to come at regular intervals and criticise their work. On these occasions he preached Cézanne's principles to the receptive little band. Each Summer the Académie Moderne would leave Paris and "repair to the Ile-aux-Moines, Cassis in the Midi, or to Fontenay-Aux-Roses, to work and strive without interruption. They held an exhibition each Spring, and practically all their work would later be shown as a group at the Autumn Salon, where they would be showing now had not the great war scattered them to the corners of the earth." Guerin went to the trenches and Miss Goldthwaite is in America.

The etchings and water-color drawings in the present exhibition are not less interesting than the oils. They have, indeed, a greater charm of spontaneity and vivacity. In using the slighter mediums the artist shows a certain gayety and nonchalance of temper which contrasts agreeably with the graver and sometimes more anxious mood of the oils.

The water colors in particular show extraordinary variety and a certain sustained intensity of enjoyment, as though the painter had held her impression at the top notch of force and clearness until her record of it was complete before her. Although swiftly done, each of these sketches shows completeness and roundness of statement—there is nothing more to say than each of them says about the incident or character involved. And the temperature runs from Summer heat almost to the boiling point. Observe the old Alabama negress in her bright gown with her enormous bulk and the thermometer a hundred and one in the shade, and then the little cool house in a green shade. The parrot turning his head to preen a ruffled plumage is the one outside the dining-room at Ascain, where the artist spent her Summers, and "The Bouquet" is the one presented to the guests at Ascain—such notes are made currently in the casual atmosphere of a dinner hour, but how sincere they are, and beautiful and rich.

The etchings range from the careful version of a glass blower, of early date and not altogether certain in its anatomy, to the child seated, which would be interesting to compare with similar subjects by Miss Cassatt, and the series of dancers in which the sense of movement is conveyed unhesitatingly yet with a certain reticence.

The fifth special exhibition of the Society of Illustrators, now open at the galleries of the National Arts Club, shows a variety of moods, a variety of methods, and degrees of skill, but only a few things moving or compelling. The illustrators in the main are a modest group who seek less to draw attention to their work than to help the story out a little, add something to its vividness, emphasize a special character or scene, repeat in different accents what the author has said. This, at least, is true of the older illustrators. The newer men, and decidedly the newer women, are moving along quite opposite lines, making the illustration a thing by itself, almost completely divorced from the text, a fantasy, an improvisation forced into schematic relations of colors and shapes; arresting, impersonal, often witty, always vivacious. Such illustrations are offshoots from the type of poster and cover design which derives from Poiret and Bakst and Hoffmann and others who have modernized Oriental motifs.

Such a cover design as that by Edward A. Wilson, for example, gives a shrill, hilarious cry among the muffled murmurs of neighboring designs. One recalls the moment when Charles Dana Gibson was the last word in modernity and all our young people held their chins high and squared their shoulders under the inspiration of his admirable type, whereas they are only just now getting over the serpentine pose of the Bakst imitator. Here at the National Arts Club galleries are both times and both manners, together with the honest domesticity of Orson Lowell, with his kittens and kiddies and grandpas, and the social adroitness of Arthur T. Keller, the industrial interests of Thornton Oakley, the eighteenth century reminiscences of E. Stetson Crawford, and the engaging individuality of Rose O'Neill.

There are several exhibitors whose work in illustration has been dedicated to the portraiture of places, atmospheres and climates. No one better than Ernest Peixotto has reproduced the dazzling brilliancy of a Southern sun. No one more confidently than Joseph Pennell has stated the atmospheric differences between Broadway and Trafalgar Square, or either of these and Italian Assisi. Walter Hale has noted precisely the compact picturesqueness of Antwerp seen from the Scheldt, with red sails flaunting themselves like flags along the peaceful foreground, and with a more pointed timeliness, the bombardment of St. Jean des Vignes, Soissons, of last July.

A vivid personal charm is combined with technical dexterity in the drawings of Maud Tousey Fangel, and Peter Newell's work for "Alice in Wonderland" is, of course, already classic. It is reserved for W. T. Benda, however, to make a strong emotion burn through an illustrative form. He has been considerate of the externalities of his theme in his "Slavonic March." The patches of snow, the driven sheep, the men bent before the wind, are there, but there also are moral and spiritual substances manifested in the gestures, the bearing, the expressive faces, and perhaps almost as much in the onrush of the abstract line which sweeps toward unseen issues.

Portraits of Dancers.

Troy Kinney has undertaken the production of a series of dry-points in which will be portrayed some of the more important contemporary dancers in characters with which they are identified. The first print issued shows Pavlowa and Volinine, and the next is dedicated to the charming Genée, and is said to be the first portrait for which she has posed, barring photographs. Mr. Kinney has special knowledge of the decorative aspects of the dance from having devoted years of study to the subject. The series is issued by a committee consisting of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, J. Thomson Willing, Johnston de Forest, Robert Hamilton Rucker, and Charles E. Merrill, Jr.

In the Pavlowa print, Mr. Kinney has laid special stress on the delicacies of the dancer's gestures, the slenderness of her form, and the lightness of her poise, neglecting somewhat the suggestions of force and precision that are conveyed by her every movement on the stage. The dry-point of Mrs. Whitney in an Oriental dance is a finer piece of work, with more vigor of movement, and with a charmingly plotted pattern in which bird, scarf, and buoyant figure play each their appropriate and well-considered part.

New Art at the Daniel Gallery.

The opening exhibition at the Daniel Gallery is the same in character as the exhibitions of last year, very modern, very generous to experimenters in untried method, and saved from wreck by the presence of a number of thoroughly good paintings by artists who would profit by any method to make known their point of view and say something worth saying. "The Bridge," by Samuel Nalpert, for example, in its sonorous notes of deep color, its clear light, its noble rhythms, would lend dignity to the most adventurous of shows. There is a certain dignity, too, in Man Ray's "Portrait" of a young girl with an Egyptian solidity of garment and a Van Dyck delicacy of hand and feature. One feels that the artist tried his best to be primitive, but broke down in the presence of the lovely little hands which he draws lovingly and daintily with knowledge brazenly displayed. Charles Demuth has sensations in Times Square and strives to describe them, but they baffle the diagnosis of an ordinary practitioner. There is something very special about Sensation No. 1, or perhaps it is No. 2. It is the one with the eye in profile, at any rate. If Henry James had not become an Englishman he could write a story about it to balance "The Turn of the Screw." Gus Mager spreads a gay rag rug under his fruit trees in blossom and makes a Spring picture that spells delight in the fresh young season. Lee Simonson has made a happy use of the big curves described by tulip stems the moment they are cut off from their natural support in the earth. In color and design his picture is vigorous and boldly conceived. Preston Dickinson has a painting in the innery gallery that seems to bear but slight relation to his superb drawing in the corridor.

In the corridor also is Bror Norfeldt's "In a Garden," not quite schematic, not quite naturalistic, yet avoiding the appearance of compromise and engagingly serious. Other works are by Zorach, a teasing approach to symbolic beauty in his "Mountain Path," a fanciful composition by Margaret Zorach, pleasant in color; two harsh and somewhat heavy-handed outdoor scenes, a coast and a landscape by Harry Berlin; a "Still Life" and "Summer" by Alfred Maurer, and a "Still Life" by Thomas H. Benton.

Velasquez and the Boston Museum

In his notes on Spanish pictures in American collections for the current number of Art in America, August L. Mayer speaks in no uncertain accents of the long and freely disputed Philip IV. in the Boston Museum. "It is a late copy," he says, "not even from the studio of the master, and not worthy to be exhibited in such a select collection." He adds concerning the portrait of the Infante D. Balthasar Carlos in the same museum that it is "not only a fine example of the art of Velasquez, but also of the greatest importance, as it gives to us—being surely painted in 1631—an excellent point for the study of the technique of the master immediately after his return from Italy." The portrait of the same Infante in London, he says, which is generally dated in the same year, "is apparently later than the Boston picture, at least half a year, so if Velasquez painted the young D. Balthasar, born 17th October, 1629, in the beginning of 1631, the London picture must have been worked on the end of 1631, or more probably in the beginning of 1632. Especially interesting in the Boston example are the ruddy half shadows in the flesh tints in reflected light. Otherwise the half shadows are somewhat greenish, as we see especially in the dwarf. Further, I wish to draw attention to Velasquez's treatment of the embroideries on the Infante's dress; always changing, none of the weary, monotonous regularity of Mazo's manner."

Of Ribera's art, the finest example, Dr. Mayer thinks, belongs to Mr. Archer Huntington, a "St. Paul" showing "all the merits of Ribera's art, careful in treatment, monumental, strong and dignified in composition, drawing, and expression." Mr. Boross of Larchmont possesses, it seems, the only authentic example of Herrera the Elder, the genre picture recently reproduced in THE TIMES, and a fine "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian" in the same collection is said to be an important Andalusian work, if not by Ruelas, at least "a brilliant creation by his excellent pupil, Pablo Legote." Mrs. Emery's "The Young Saint Thomas of Villanueva Distributing His Cloth Among Little Beggar Boys" Dr. Mayer considers the most beautiful genre picture that Murillo ever painted and one of his finest creations.

The quotation from Kenyon Cox on Winslow Homer's water color technic which appeared in an article on Winslow Homer, last Sunday, and was credited to Kenyon Cox, came from Mr. Cox's book "Winslow Homer," 1914, published by Frederic Fairchild Sherman.

A PEDDLER arrived one evening at a very small town, and went to the only hotel there. Every room had already been engaged, but the hotelkeeper offered him a room which he could share with a negro. The peddler agreed, and asked to be awakened early the next morning.

Several jokers overheard the proceedings, and while the peddler slept blackened his face.

The next morning, being in a hurry to catch a train he made straight for the station when he was awakened. While passing a mirror in the waiting room he stopped suddenly and exclaimed: "Hang it all! They've called the wrong guy!"

The Value of Deliberation.

ONE morning in a village in Scotland several of the villagers were having an amiable discussion on the matrimonial affairs of a couple who, though quite recently wed, had already begun to find the yoke of Hymen something of a burden.

"'Tis all along o' them hasty marriages," remarked a caustic old gentleman who had taken a prominent position in the discussion. "They did not understand each other. They'd noblnt knowed each other for a matter of seven year."

"Well, that seems long enough," said a visiting traveling man.

"Long me'?" said the old gentleman. "Ye're wrong. When a body's courtin' he canna be too careful. Why, my courtship wi' Jamie lasted a matter o' nineteen year."

"You were certainly careful," said the visitor. "And did you find your plan successful when you married?"

"Ye jump to conclusions too hastily," he replied. "I understood her then, so I didna marry her!"

ASSASSIN of many an afternoon,
Why do you my happiness thus distort?
Why don't you depart to the sun or moon?
What place do you fill in the realm of sport?
Oh, will not some power the giftie give
Of a prison all ringed with fences high,
Where horrible folks like you can live
And—(which is far more important)—die?

Avaunt forever, Satanic curse!
Oh, why; oh, why must you still exist?
(All those are the things I say—and worse!—
To that bane of the road, the motorist.)

If I could but brew some magic beers,
With wonderful, hidden virtues packed,
To put you to sleep for a thousand years,
I'd be right there with the brewing act!
If I owned a gun whose fatal shot
Would tumble you over—every one!—
Oh, take it from me that I would not
Transfer the ownership of that gun!

Yes, thus I revile the auto man
Whenever on foot I fare afar
And thus the accursed pedestrian
Whenever I ride in a motor car.

A BRITISH Army examiner had before him a stupid candidate. The man proving, apparently, unable to answer the most simple questions, the examiner finally grew impatient, and in a burst of sarcasm demanded:

"Now, let it be supposed, Sir, that you were a Captain in command of infantry; that in your rear was an impassable abyss; that on both sides of you there rose perpendicular rocks of tremendous height; that in front of you lay the enemy, outnumbering you ten to one. What, Sir, in such an emergency would you do?"

"Well, Sir," replied the applicant for military distinction, "I should resign, Sir."

BROKEN IDOLS.

(Not content with proving to us that Paul Revere never took his famous ride, and making myths of Washington and his Cherry Tree, of Pocahontas and Jefferson's White Horse, the Iconoclasts have now removed Eve from her Pedestal and credited Noah with the Fall of Eden.)

O DEAR, O dear! My heart is broke to find my heroes all a joke! Old Noah, the Perfect Patriarch, who built and sailed the sanctuark across the waters wild and green all fearless of the submarine, was but the Sinner after all who brought about our human fall!

Revere, the famous riding Paul, it doth appear ne'er rode at all to warn the folks at Lexington that British foes were on the run, and soon would come a-sweeping down on all as far as Concord-town, with sword and gun and battle-axe, to make 'em pay their income-tax!

T. Jefferson, my hero great, ne'er tied his white nag to a gate that day aforetime when he went to be sworn in as President, and all our glad and joyous glee about old Tom's simplicity in modern light doth merely seem a drear and opalescent dream!

And Pocahontas never took, as hath been written in a book, the head of J. Smith on her lap to save it from the fearful rap her savage father full of strife designed to end the Captain's life, and all that tale so wondrous sweet was based on Masher Smith's conceit!

And Washington—alas, alack—he never gave that tree a whack, or told his father looming high he really couldn't tell a lie! And countless other anecdotes employed by Orators and Poets are just a lot of foolish squibs to tickle patriotic ribs!

It makes me weep, and fills my soul with clouds of overwhelming dole. If these dear stories of my youth are all untrue where then is truth? Did Jonah ever really ride in a Leviathan's inside? Had Ananias ne'er a fault? Was Mrs. Lot turned into salt?

Is there in truth no Bernard Pshaw? Did Samson wield no Ass's jaw? Did Turpin never ride the heath? Did Teddy never show his teeth? Is Mr. Hall Caine, full of gloom, no man, but just a nom-de-plume? O, valiant Heroes, pale and flat, where are ye at? Where are ye at?

Since the Hyphen, as some wiseacre has discovered, is only a minus sign, nobody should object to its abolition and the substitution for it of other more attractive symbols. A good German-American citizen might then be known as a German+American, indicating a growth, rather than a subtraction. And were he to become the father of a numerous progeny he might be indicated as a German+American, as a mark of honor. JOHN HAY AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES

Vivid Sketches of Great Americans and Sidelights on Recent History in the Letters of the Statesman Who Started as Lincoln's Secretary and Biographer

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF JOHN HAY. By William Roscoe Thayer. Illustrated. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. Two volumes. $5.

RICHARD WATSON GILDER once said that amid all his trials Lincoln had one compensation in the White House—John Hay. The truth of that remark impresses one anew in reading these delightful volumes, made up as they are so largely of Hay's own letters and journals, and sparkling at every turn with his wit and high spirits. Like Mr. Thayer's admirable life of Cavour, this life of John Hay will take its place without challenge among the foremost books of its class. It is not a formal biography, but a well edited collection of Hay's intimate letters and diary jottings, held together by a slender thread of "life." It is based on a memorial of similar nature published privately by Mrs. Hay shortly after her husband's death in 1905, but Mr. Thayer has drawn upon a much larger store of materials, both private and official, and has handled them throughout with taste and judgment of a high order. The desire for truth has led him to admit the public to some scenes of surprising intimacy.

John Hay playfully called himself a man without a State, for he had been born in Indiana, brought up in Illinois, educated in Rhode Island; had learned his law in Springfield, Ill., his politics in Washington, and his diplomacy in Europe; in short, he was "nothing but an American." Near the close of his life he wrote to his brother-in-law, Mr. Mather, that he had been blessed with more success and happiness on a smaller endowment of ability than any man in history; but no one who comes in contact with his flashing intellect in these letters will accept this modest estimate.

Fortune did favor him, however, and one of her earliest favors was the chance that sent him to study law in his Uncle Milton's office, next door to Lincoln's, and made him the assistant of Lincoln's private secretary. Thus at the age of 22 he had the rare experience of going to live in the White House for four years on intimate terms with a great President during the nation's greatest crisis.

Though he lived to be Ambassador to Great Britain and Secretary of State under both McKinley and Roosevelt, the brightest pages of his story are still those of the brimming days of youth spent with President Lincoln. Nicolay had charge of the heavy official correspondence, and Hay was general utility man, doing everything from writing informal letters and receiving callers to escorting Mrs. Lincoln or amusing the Lincoln boys on rainy days. He was too busy to keep such a diary as Gideon Welles did, but his journal, though fragmentary, is treasure trove, every bit of it.

So familiar was the companionship of Nicolay and Hay with the President that even they, the future authors of the greatest of the Lincoln biographies, were slow in realizing his greatness. They loved him, and in private dubbed him affectionately The Tycoon, but not till after the battle of Gettysburg did Hay write to Nicolay in this vein:

> The Tycoon is in fine whack. I have rarely seen him more serene and busy. He is managing this war, the draft, foreign relations, and planning a reconstruction of the Union, all at once. I never knew with what a tyrannous authority he rules the Cabinet till now. The most important things he decides, and there is no cavil. I am growing more convinced that the good of the country absolutely demands that he should be kept where he is till this thing is over. There is no man in the country so wise, so gentle, and so firm.

The intimate talks with Lincoln recorded in Hay's diary are sometimes rather startling in their frankness, and one gets many glimpses of Lincoln in homely undress. As Mr. Thayer remarks, this pithy journal furnishes some of the most vivid flashlight pictures of the man in intimate moments or on historical occasions. Hay seems to have missed the deep significance of the Gettysburg address, but he had not missed the agony in Lincoln's voice when he came upon him unawares gazing down the Potomac for the ships that were to bring the first troops, and heard him exclaim to himself: "Why don't they come! Why don't they come!" Of Lincoln's unconventional ways these two extracts tell:

> The President came in last night in his shirt and told me of the retirement of the enemy from his works at Spottsylvania, and our pursuit. I complimented him on the amount of underpinning he still has left, and he said he weighed 180 pounds. Important if true. (May 14, 1864.)
> A little after midnight the President came into the office laughing, with a volume of Hood's works in his hand, to show Nicolay and me the little caricature, "An Unfortunate Bee-ing," seemingly utterly unconscious that he, with his short shirt hanging about his long legs, and setting out behind like the tail feathers of an enormous ostrich, was infinitely funnier than anything in the book he was laughing at. What a man it is! Occupied all day with matters of vast moment, deeply anxious about the fate of the greatest army of the world, with his own plans and future hanging on the events of the passing hour, he yet has such a wealth of simple bonhomie and good fellowship that he goes out to bed and perambulates the > house in his shirt to find us, that we may share with him the fun of poor Hood's queer little conceits. (April 30, 1864.)

> I said to the President today that I thought Butler was the only man in the army in whom power would be dangerous. McClellan was too timid and vacillating to usurp; Grant was too sound and cool headed and unselfish; Banks also; Frémont would be dangerous if he had more ability and energy. "Yes," says the President; "he is like Jim Jett's brother. Jim used to say that his brother was the d—dest scoundrel that ever lived, but in the infinite mercy of Providence he was also the d—dest fool."

It is in John Hay's familiar letters that his fun bubbles forth most spontaneously. It often hits the foibles of his best friends, from Lincoln in the war days to Whitelaw Reid or Theodore Roosevelt in later times; but its bright darts are always without malice, and are as freely turned upon himself as upon others. His playful notes to Nicolay are frequently gems of light badinage. For instance:

> I am getting along pretty well. I only work about twenty hours a day. I do all your work and half of my own, now you are away. Don't hurry yourself. * * * This town is as dismal now as a defaced tombstone. Everybody is gone. I am getting apathetic and write blackguardly articles for The Chronicle, from which W. extracts the dirt and fun and publishes the dreary remains.

A year later, under similar circumstances, he writes:

> I went last night to a sacred concert of profane music at Ford's. Young Kretchmar and old Kretchmar were running it. Ha, and H. both sang: and they kin if anybody kin. The Tycoon and I occupied a private box, and both of us carried on a hefty flirtation with the M. girls in the flies. * * * I am alone in the White pest-house. The ghosts of twenty thousand drowned cats come in nights through the south windows. I shall shake my buttons off with ague before you get back.

And here is a note not wholly jocular:

> My dear Nico: Don't, in a sudden spasm of good nature, send any more people with letters to me requesting favors from Stanton. I would rather make the tour of a smallpox hospital.

The larger part of the first volume is devoted to letters and journals of the White House epoch in Hay's life, and it is still the richest in interest, in spite of all that has been written about it. Once the young secretary was sent to Niagara to help Horace Greeley in his wild goose chase after peace commissioners, and again he was sent to Florida to get Unionist signatures to the oath of allegiance. A few weeks before Lincoln's assassination he accepted an appointment to the American legation at Paris, and thus began the diplomatic and political career that filled his later life.

From Paris he was transferred to Vienna, and thence to Madrid, where a memorable year bore fruit in his "Castilian Days." Wherever he went his early literary ambition haunted him, and to it we owe the many biographical sketches that enrich the present volumes. Whether it be Carl Schurz playing the piano in the White House, or Emilio Castelar making a marvelous oration at Madrid, Mr. Hay seems to capture the very soul of the man in a few vivid sentences. His remarkable portrait of Napoleon III. includes strokes such as this:

> Eyes sleepily watchful—furtive—stealthy, rather ignoble; like servants looking out of dirty windows and saying, "Nobody home," and lying as they say it.

On his return to New York in 1870 Colonel Hay dropped unexpectedly into journalism, joined The Tribune staff, and began writing the breezy letters to Whitelaw Reid that are scattered generously through the remainder of the present volumes. Once, when suffering after the manner of Job, he sent a note to the editor explaining that he could not walk, stand, or sit, but by special grace was still able to lie on his stomach, adding, "If you can think of a subject you would like to have treated from that point of view, send it over and I will worry it."

In 1873, at the age of 35, Hay fell in love with Miss Clara Stone of Cleveland and wrote jubilantly to Reid, advising him to get into the same predicament, and remarking that he would not have died before this happened to him for a great deal of coin. His marriage was happy, bringing him children, wealth, and troops of friends. He soon retired from newspaper work to devote himself to purely literary pursuits. Mr. Thayer gives us a pleasing chapter on this phase, not omitting "Little Breeches," whose fame bored the author to humorous tears, and "The Bread-Winners," whose authorship Hay never confessed.

Patiently he and Nicolay labored for fifteen years on their monumental life of Lincoln, receiving $50,000 at last from The Century for the serial rights alone. This chapter includes many letters addressed to Mr. Gilder. But the correspondence of Hay and Nicolay themselves is most interesting in the light it throws upon their methods. One of Hay's letters, indeed, is so frank that the wisdom of its publication, even now, may be questioned. It reads in part as follows:

> As to my tone toward Porter and McClellan—that is an important matter. I have toiled and labored through ten chapters over him (McC.). I think I have left the impression of his mutinous imbecility, and I have done it in a perfectly courteous manner. Only in "Harrison's Landing" have I used a single injurious adjective. It is of the utmost moment that we should seem fair to him, while we are destroying him. The Porter business is a part of this. Porter was the most magnificent soldier in the Army of the Potomac, ruined by his devotion to McClellan. We have this to consider. We are all alone in condemning him. * * * We believe him guilty; but I don't think we need go further than say so dispassionately. A single word of invective, I think, would be injurious to us, rather than to him.
> Gilder was evidently horrified at your saying that Lee ought to be shot: a simple truth of law and equity. I find, after a careful reading of a dozen biographies and all his reports, that Stonewall Jackson was a howling crank: but it would be the greatest folly for me to say so. I am afraid I have come too near saying so in what I have written about him. * * *
> We will not fall in with the present tone of blubbering sentiment, of course. But we ought to write the history of those times like two everlasting angels who know everything, judge everything, tell the truth about everything, and don't care a twang of their harps about one side or the other. There will be one exception. We are Lincoln men all through.

In later life Henry Adams was Hay's closest friend and the many intimate letters to him are a valuable part of this collection. There are several charming letters to Mr. Howells. A lively correspondence with Colonel Roosevelt shows the most cordial relations between him and his Secretary of State. Though Secretary Hay took no part in the "dynamic solution" of the Panama impasse, Mr. Thayer scouts the rumor that he felt any regrets for the action of the Administration. No hint of the kind has been found among his papers. The biographer notes, however, that the German menace during the Spanish war gave Hay many anxious hours.

It is impossible to do justice to the State-Secretarial period in the space here available, but those chapters are by no means lacking in interest. Seldom does one find two large volumes so uniformly readable. Both as literature and as history the book contains the promise of long life.

MARY JOHNSTON'S HISTORICAL ROMANCE

"The Fortunes of Garin," a Stirring Romance of Southern France in the Twelfth Century—Latest Works of Fiction by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, Louis Joseph Vance, and Others

SEVERAL years have passed since the days when for a brief period the historical novel reigned supreme, temporarily relegating to the background nearly every other form of fiction. On the heels of the half dozen notable exponents of this especial type of story came a swarm of more or less—usually less—worthy followers, who presently succeeded in so wearying the public with their incredible heroes whose habit it was to perform at least a score of marvelous feats of derring-do each day before breakfast, that the entire section went out of favor. Now, however, there are signs which seem to indicate that the tale of bygone days is again to take a place in the ranks of popular varieties of fiction, not as ruler of them all, but as their peer. And surely if it is to be represented by many books as good as this new one of Miss Johnston's, its appearance should be warmly welcomed.

For "The Fortunes of Garin" presents an interesting, conscientiously wrought-out drama of a very fascinating period in the world's history, and its characters are not puppets, but real human beings. In place of the superlatively beautiful and entirely senseless doll who played the part of heroine in so many of those impossible romances which brought the historical tale into transient disrepute, we have the brave and noble lady, Audiart de Roche-de-Frêne, whom men called for a while, and with bated breath, "the ugly princess." This at the time the story begins, when she was a girl of 18; but it covers a period of about nine years, and before the last of these is reached, before the thrilling siege of Roche-de-Frêne and its mighty guardian castle, she had made her people forget that earlier title and name her aloud and with all sincerity Audiart the Wise. True, Garin of Castel-Noir, who became Garin de l'Isle d'Or, is more nearly akin to the conventional hero of romance than is Audiart to its conventional heroine; nevertheless, the points of difference between the two are many and great. Garin is brave, a gallant knight and noted troubadour, but he is by no means unconquerable or peerless; he takes his full share in the fighting at the siege of Roche-de-Frêne, well and courageously, but so do many others; his lays are famous, but he is far from being an unrivaled troubadour. To put it briefly, he is a credible human being.

The period chosen by the author for her story is the last quarter of the twelfth century, and most of the events occur in and about the town and castle of Roche-de-Frêne, in Southern France. Although Garin takes the cross and battles for some years in company with those who strove to save Baldwin of Jerusalem, we do not journey with him, and the time of his crusading is passed over in silence. The novel falls, indeed, into two parts. The first is that in which the poor esquire Garin, for the sake of a herd-girl, a mere serf, wins the enmity of Count Jaufre de Montmaure, is obliged to flee in disguise from his crippled brother's obscure fief of Castel-Noir, and sees the veiled lady whom he names the "Fair Goal," whose praise he sings, and whose servitor he vows himself; the second relates what befell when, some eight years later, he returned from Palestine a knight and troubadour, still faithful to the lady of whose name and face and country he was ignorant, knowing only that she was of high degree. And if such devotion to an ideal, unknown love seems strange and unreasonable to modern readers, let it be remembered that Garin lived in the days of that far famed Rudel, whose love for the Lady of Tripoli has been immortalized in play and poem.

It was a time full of contrasts, full of rich and glowing color, and much of it is admirably reflected in these pages. We see the grim, bare tower of the poor knight, the splendid grounds of the rich abbey, the magnificent castle-hall of the great lord. We feast at banquet and tourney; we are present when the embassy of one puissant prince is received at the court of another. And quite as picturesque as these, and even more interesting, is the glimpse we are vouchsafed of the first stirrings of the spirit of independence in the towns, when the burghers of Roche-de-Frêne, on bended knees and through the mouth of their spokesman, Thibaut Cartelieu, beseech their liege lord, Prince Gaucelm the Fortunate, to grant them the right to choose their own magistrates and judges. Then, sadly familiar to us of the present day, come visions of the wasted lands and harried fields, the agony and desolation which befell when the Count of Montmaure, failing in his attempt to become master of Roche-de-Frêne by threat and strategy, declared war against its lord and lady.

The story is vivid, interesting, and well written, although one cannot but believe that the interview between Audiart and Richard Coeur-de-Lion, which is its real climax, might have been more effective had it been rendered in a dramatic instead of in a descriptive form. There are tense moments in the book and plenty of incident, yet not so much as to render the novel one of plot merely. For spirited and entertaining as is its action, its greater merits are its brilliant, changeful background and the courageous, compelling yet lovable figure of its heroine, the resourceful, daring Princess Audiart. It is Garin who gives his name to the book, but it is Audiart who dominates it all, whether, seated beside her father on the dais in the great hall, she listens to the appeal of the townsmen, or riding on her war horse at the head of her troops she battles bravely for Roche-de-Frêne, or venturing life and fortune upon one supreme attempt she sews the saffron cross upon her mantle and goes forth to ask justice of the Lord of Aquitaine, Richard Coeur-de-Lion. A great lady she is, in spirit as in title, and there will be few who feel that the time spent in reading her history is time passed other than profitably and well.

SECRET HISTORY

THE Williamsons have put to good use the visit they made to this country and down across the Mexican border two years or more ago when the United States troops were doing watchful waiting in that quarter and the menace of war was in the air. For a goodly portion of the action takes place in and about El Paso and the "secret history" which furnishes the theme and the title refers to certain military events of consequence between the two nations and of very great consequence to some of the leading characters. Other scenes are staged in Arizona, at "Fort Alvarado," supposed to be near the Grand Canyon. The story begins and ends in London, and as no English novel written within the last year can avoid the war, the action carries some of its characters into Belgium during the late Summer of last year and gives them some thrilling experiences.

Lady Peggy O'Malley, who tells the whole story in her own witty Irish way, is the younger daughter of a poverty-struck Irish nobleman who has brought her and her sister, a famous beauty, to London for a few weeks in the hope that Lady Diana, in the better field thus afforded, will at last have good hunting. Lady Peggy there meets in a most unconventional way Captain Eagleston March of the United States Army and a famous aviator, who falls very much in love with her lovely sister while great good friendship develops between him and Lady Peggy. His suit with Lady Diana progresses well through various happenings until another army man of higher rank and greater wealth appears on the scene at Fort Alvarado. At El Paso exciting events move swiftly until the climax comes with the roar of guns on a still night and the effort of the army people to conceal just what had happened. But Lady Peggy finds out all about it, and presently her "Eagle," whom she loves desperately and cannot bear to see being treated shabbily by her sister, is suffering disgrace for something of which she is sure he is not guilty. Later on he flies into the story again, in the service of the Allies, doing wonderful things with a monoplane above Liége and putting a big German Zeppelin out of commission.

It wouldn't be a Williamson story if it didn't end with everybody happy, with the gilt and rose of its romance as shining and as pink as romance can possibly be, even in fiction. Moreover, it is one of the best and most readable stories its authors have written in a long time. Its complications, all handled skillfully, are sufficient to keep the reader's interest keen as to how a number of things are coming out, and Lady Peggy, although she is so much in love, holds high her Irish spirit through everything. With her telling the tale and always keeping in character there is no dropping into that oversweet and somewhat gushing style with which the Williamsons sometimes come near to spoiling an otherwise good story. Lady Peggy has wit and spirit, and, also, on occasion, plenty of temper, and she is good fun from first to last.

NOBODY

IN all the long list of American novelists there is none who can be more certainly depended on than Mr. Vance to tell a story that by the sheer interest of its complicated plot, its whirlwind action, and its breathless and amazing adventures can enthrall for an hour or so almost any kind of a novel reader. For prolific invention, imagination whose audacity takes one's breath away, craft in the construction and management of intricate plots, and the ability to make the wildest and most impossible adventures seem plausible, Mr. Vance stands among the foremost writers of this kind of fiction in either America or England. Most of them, however, are American, for English novelists seldom have the constructive talent for this kind of writing, and they rarely do it well. Mr. Vance contrives also to sandwich in not a little character portrayal with the galloping rush of his events, surprises, and adventures, and he does this better with each succeeding story from his pen. It is not character depiction after the methodical, leisurely, photographic method of English fiction, but by the American method of lightning flashes that throw out in vivid illumination first one feature and then another and keep them all standing out before the reader's view in sharp outline.

The action of "Nobody" all takes place in less than a week, but one gets to know quite well several of its characters, especially that of its heroine, Sally Manvers, a girl of much spirit and pluck. At the opening of the story she is just one of New York's beaten toilers, a salesgirl who has lost her job because of slack times. It had paid her only a dollar a day, and she has used up all her scanty savings while she has been trudg-

THE STORY OF FINLAND AND THE FINNS

Dr. Arthur Reade's Historical and Descriptive Survey of an Interesting Country About Which Very Little Is Generally Known

NOT tragically as does Poland, but with much the same keen speculative interest, Finland lays irresistible claim on our attention in these war days. The fate of Finland when the war ends forms one of the most absorbing of the "settlement" questions asked, now and then, by nearly every one of us. And our knowledge of Finland is so very slight! We could answer questions about its future, most of us, with quite the same sureness and accuracy as we could meet inquiries about its present or its past. Two things we do know—Finland has woman suffrage, and Finland has been oppressed by Russia. But even on these outstanding points most people are lamentably vague. We cannot help being interested in Finland. But we are quite pressingly ignorant.

There is, therefore, a notable timeliness in the publication of so excellent a mine of information as Arthur Reade's "Finland and the Finns." It must be pointed out that the volume contains no record of the present war. Its preface is dated "July, 1914," and although the book has just been published, it was presumably written just before the outbreak of the war in Europe. But it does not lose thereby; we make bold to say that it gains instead. It is no jerry-built structure of wartime facts, and it makes no opportunist appeal to wartime interest.

Evidently written without hurry, by a British scholar resident in the Finnish capital, it brings its history and description up to the furthest point to which, in this day of uncertainties, history and description can well go—July, 1914. "Finland and the Finns" is a sane and interesting presentation of information which has an uncommon timeliness; it is all the better reading, more valuable and more original, in that it is innocent of forecast, sentimentality, passion, or narrative of the great war. It is a better war-book because it was evidently written in time of peace.

One's first thought about Finland is apt to be a recognition of the sheer anachronism of its civilization and its place in the world. For more than a hundred years Finland has been a part of the Russian Empire, a Grand Duchy whose Grand Duke is the Czar; for the past sixteen years the "Russianization" of Finland has proceeded relentlessly. Yet during this century of Russian control, and especially during the years of growing Russian oppression, Finland has taken her place as one of the most progressive nations of Europe in a definite march toward socialization.

In the government of this part of the Russian Empire every man and woman has a voice, and this wide-sweeping democracy of the franchise has spoken for all the world to hear in the adoption of proportional representation in voting, in the passage of laws regulating the status and the support of illegitimate children, in the definite alignment of the Finnish nation on the side of the extension of constitutional and governmental reform. And yet, we are told that in this first country in Europe to adopt woman suffrage, the old custom still holds whereby men and women constitute almost completely separate groups in social entertainments! The sexes meet at the polls and in the universities and sit together in Parliament; they keep to their separate sides of the drawing room. This is one of Finland's contradictions. And of contradictions the country's life is full. Throughout Mr. Reade's absorbingly interesting book, the reader is constantly finding the past and the future meeting, in custom and in law.

Finland passed from the possession of Sweden to that of Russia after the war of 1808-1809. The Finns had received Christianity and West European culture from Sweden, and the two races had largely intermarried. Swedish was the necessary one of the two languages, necessary for education and for official or social position, and for a long time the nationalist movement which practically began in the year of the cession to Russia was concerned with the establishment of Finnish as an "equal language" with the language of the Swedes. In 1809 Alexander I. renewed the Constitution which Finland had held under Sweden, and until comparatively recent times it was more rigorously observed than it had been under the last Swedish Kings. And Finland, freed from the devastation of age-long wars to which she had to so great an extent supplied the battle-ground, began to develop as a nation.

Mr. Reade sketches, very readably indeed, the growth of the country, its literature, its long struggle over language, its controversies in education and politics over the rivalry between Finns and Swedes. During those years Russia was a background scarcely sensed, and very far away. It is only recently that the foe of Finnish nationality has been the Russians without and not the Swedes within, and that the two parties in Finland have begun to unite against a common peril. But meanwhile Finland had won the right to its language and its literature.

Now, the writer points out, "there are a growing number of clear-sighted persons of every party who realize that the time for hatred and disunion is over, and that an era of reintegration and co-operative endeavor is overdue; that to persist in carrying on internal quarrels at a time when the very existence of the country is threatened by Russia would be dangerous in the extreme." For the Finns are West Europeans. Russia's first period of denationalization in Finland began dramatically in 1899, when the present Czar decreed that the Constitution of the Grand Duchy was no longer to be observed "where Imperial interests were concerned." It ended with a very different sort of dramatic quality with the assassination of the Russian Governor General in 1904. The second period of Russianization began shortly after the Russian revolution of 1905, and was still in progress at the outbreak of war. But Finland and the Russian Constitutionalists had already begun to recognise the fact that they were natural allies, and to make beginnings of co-operation. All this is exceedingly interesting in the light of war events.

A large part of Mr. Reade's book is taken up with descriptions of the cities and the countryside of Finland—of modern, bustling Helsingfors, and of the old world farms, of the Summer beauties of the country and of its gay Winter sports. There are fascinating recountings, too, of quaint customs still quite vividly alive in this very modern land—customs that are like tales of centuries ago. The book contains interesting chapters on industrial Finland, on the country's system of education, on Finnish literature, music, and art. There is, of course, one long chapter on suffrage and the "rights of women," where the author quotes political and national leaders in acknowledging the success of the entrance of women into the field of democratic government, and there is another chapter which tells some of the workings-out of the labor movement in Finland. Altogether, the book is strikingly interesting, informative, and valuable.

or did you
love letters?

In no case, it is safe to say, as Rosamond Fayre wrote hers. For Rosamond composed, wrote, signed and mailed the love letters of another girl, at that girl's request. Upon the man who received them the effect of these written-to-order love missives was surprising, and the results were still more surprising. Well worth reading is the novel with this situation, "The Wooing of Rosamond Fayre," by Berta Ruck (Mrs. Oliver Onions). All booksellers sell it.

A FRENCH PRIEST'S SKETCHES OF THE WAR

DIARY OF A FRENCH ARMY CHAPLAIN. By Abbe Felix Klein, American Hospital, Neuilly, Paris. Translated by M. Harriet M. Capes. Second edition. London: Andrew Melrose, Ltd.

ONE of the most touching and inspiring books that the war has produced is this diary of a French priest recording his experiences in the American Ambulance at Neuilly during the first months of the conflict. The original is entitled "La Guerre Vue d'une Ambulance." The English translation has already run through two editions, a deserved tribute to the power of its tender pictures of heroism and grief.

Abbé Félix Klein is known and loved by many Americans, for he has visited this country more than once, and has written several books about American life and institutions. At the outbreak of the war he threw aside all other work and gave himself up completely to the service of the wounded and dying. In the hospital at Neuilly he moved in a noble atmosphere of heroism, and it is this above all that his diary conveys to the reader, with the added fragrance of his tender and deeply religious personality.

Among the hardest things that the good Abbé had to do was to break the news of death to bereaved mothers and wives. In no other book have we been brought so close to the pathos of the women's part in this war. One can open its pages almost at random and come upon scenes such as this:

> The poor woman, who is wandering up and down with outstretched arms, rushes toward me and declares that it can't be; it isn't possible that her son is dead—a boy like that, so healthy, so handsome, so amiable; she wants me to reassure her, to say that I agree with her. My silence and the tears that come into my eyes only increase her lamentations, and nothing can calm her.
> "But what will become of us? He was all we had."
> Nothing can appease her, neither my words of Christian hope nor anything the father endeavors to say. * * * On my return I hear that they saw their son such as death had made him, and that, hearing the cries of the mother, three other women, already upset by visiting their own wounded, and by the sight of the funeral, had fallen down in a faint. That is what one sees of the war in a hospital!

At another time it is a wife, whose husband has died in the night, and who calls to ask the chaplain whether he is better. She receives the news without tears or words, yet her dumb anguish is harder to look upon than the other kind. In the mortuary, at sight of what is left of her beloved, the wife, still silent, falls down in a faint. There are many deaths from gangrene and some from tetanus, and the wives and mothers must be forbidden even to kiss the cold lips. Again, a soldier is brought in with three bad wounds and pneumonia. His sister appeals to the chaplain:

> Why should I deceive her! She must know anyhow presently, and if she is unprepared it will be worse for her. I keep silence, but it is enough. She begins to cry; I point to the other patients and take her out into the dead-yard. Appeals to her faith at length make her a little calmer. She wants to see her brother again.—Yes, but on condition that she shall be brave.
> At 4:30, as the end does not seem imminent, I go to the chapel and, forestalling the usual hour, say the mass for the dying for him. I have rarely said a more touching one. The poor sister was the whole congregation and repeated the responses amid her tears. Afterward I took her back calmed and strengthened to the bed of the dying man, and then I was obliged to go to get a little sleep. When I came back two hours later the bed was empty.

The calm courage of the wounded is noted repeatedly by the author with admiration, and he cites many instances of it. Among the privates he found many bearded fathers whom he could sympathize with like children; but if he spoke to an officer of his wounds the latter would abruptly change the subject. Under moderate pain an officer was always calm, and if the pain became too piercing to bear in silence, he made jokes. In all his months among these men Abbé Klein says he has not seen one that was not admirable. He continues:

> I live in an atmosphere of heroism and faith. What noble examples, and so simply given! There is my patient from Finistère, perpetually tossed about between life and death, always calm and submissive to the will of God whatever it be; and his mother, who comes every morning, shares in this fine submission.
> There is the young wife, crushed but calm, of a soldier twenty-six years old, who died the day before yesterday. A fire of hope shone through her tears while she listened to my account of his Christian ending.
> There is, amongst those who live, one blind man now told of his fate and by degrees resigning himself to it, helped to submit by an ingenuously sublime consort. But what am I saying? Heroism shines forth everywhere; never can humanity have displayed so much.

There are also many stirring tales of battle told to the author by wounded men. One relates the remarkable escape of a soldier who was hit in the leg by a shell, and who lay a whole afternoon amid bursting shells that tore the bodies around him to pieces, His comrades, before leaving him, had covered his head with his knapsack and thrown three trusses of hay on top of him. Another tells of a faithful dog that helped a man back to life after a great shell had mangled him and buried him up to the neck in a shattered trench. Still another is the modest narrative of a mortally wounded mechanician who went out in his automobile with only a single companion one night and stopped two German machine guns that were trying to flank the French position. Again there are swift glimpses of the horrors of war:

> But the things we have seen! I saw an officer—his brain was hanging over his eye. And the black corpses and the bloated horses! It's the night that's the saddest; you hear cries "Help, help!" Some of them are calling for their mothers. No one answers.

But in its total effect Abbé Klein's book is inspiring rather than harrowing. By its emotional quality and its graphic simplicity it brings the war very close to the reader.

SEARCHLIGHTS

MR. VACHELL, author of "The Hill" and many other good novels, seems to be turning his attention increasingly to the drama. Two of his plays are to be presented in America this Fall, and in "Searchlights" he offers a third in book form. "Searchlights" is a drama of English home life of the present day, with the great war as one of the forces that determine the action.

In its printed form, at least, the character drawing in this play seems superior to the dramatic suspense. The author has achieved a remarkable clearness and variety of characterization in the three couples who play the chief parts. At the heart of the action stand Robert Blaine, a grim British capitalist; the Hon. Mrs. Blaine, his ambitious wife, and Harry Blaine, the gay, selfish, spendthrift son. Early in the play the audience is made aware of the fact that Harry is Mrs. Blaine's son, but not the son of his supposed father, and that the grim financier's suspicions on this point have reached the point of certainty. The main suspense lies in the relations between him and his unfaithful wife, and in the question of what he is going to do with her and her reckless son, whom she loves greatly and spoils outrageously.

The secondary theme is the lovemaking between Harry Blaine and Phoebe Schmaltz, daughter of Sir Adalbert and Lady Schmaltz, who are also wealthy. Sir Adalbert is an odd and interesting creation, a stanch Briton who talks with a broad German accent, because he was born and reared in Germany. All his money is invested in that country, and Mr. Vachell adds a touch of the heroic to his likable character when he depicts him as calmly abandoning both fortune and name for the British cause at the outbreak of the war.

It is the war that throws searchlights into the hearts of the various characters and cuts several Gordian knots. The reader must be left to discover for himself what happens when Harry, with all his debts and selfish frivolity, goes away to fight in Belgium and France. Harry is well drawn, but he will not help the popularity of the play in the United States. The British and American views of such a gilded youth are widely different. We must see that sort of young man do something overwhelmingly worth while before we can relinquish the desire to shake him. The author seems to believe that a few weeks of war entitle Harry to all the rewards that life can offer.

The main theme, however, is handled with skill and a good deal of power. One may prefer one's dramas in a footlight setting and yet be quite unable to lay down this book unfinished.

NINETEENTH CENTURY GERMANY

GERMANY IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By A. S. Peake, B. Bosanquet, and F. Bonavia. London: Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.

In 1911 a course of lectures was given at the University of Manchester, and later published, in the belief that "appreciations by British scholars of the part played by Germany in the development of modern civilization might serve to promote more friendly feelings between the two nations. The success of the volume, both in England and Germany, led the university to prepare a second series to cover in part that of the vast field of German endeavor in the nineteenth century upon which the first volume had not touched. Dr. Bosanquet contributed a study of nineteenth century philosophy, Professor Peake of the German theologians of the period, and Mr. Ferruccio Bonavia the musicians. These studies were all in type before the outbreak of the war, and apart from the fact of their immense informative and literary value they stand as an interesting historical document. They show what a group of British scholars "thought, and in essentials still think, was a just tribute to pay to the activities of the German nation." The Germany of militant aggression, of violated faith, of cynical self-seeking, and disregard of the honorable traditions of civilized warfare is new to them, as, in its extremest manifestations, it is to the world at large.

SOCIALIZED GERMANY

Dr. Howe's study of German efficiency was reviewed at length in THE NEW YORK TIMES Magazine of Sept. 12, so that a brief notice here will suffice. It is one of the significant books of the day, written with the same motive of discovering the greatest good for the greatest number as this author's earlier studies of American cities. The war is not discussed further than to condemn the evil part which the Prussian autocracy has played in this respect. Dr. Howe devotes his energies to marshaling and analyzing the social benefits that have grown out of Germany's unique system of State Socialism, and to indicating how some of these methods might be adopted in the United States without injury to our democratic ideals. His chief point is that the "German peril" for us is a peace peril, and that we may have to meet it industrially with an inferior organization when the war is over. The volume deserves the attention it will undoubtedly command among thoughtful readers.

AN eighty-page pamphlet showing paper, print, maps, lithographs, half-tone and duo-tint illustrations of the new SECOND EDITION of the New International Encyclopaedia will be mailed free to any address upon application.

LITERATURE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS LOVED

Rare Treasures of Story and Legend, Popular in the Days of the Pharaohs, Collected by Sir G. Maspero—Baron de Kusel's Recollections

POPULAR STORIES OF ANCIENT EGYPT. By Sir G. Maspero, K. C. B., D. C. L. Oxon. Translated by Mrs. C. H. W. Johns from the fourth French Edition as revised by the author. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. London: H. Grevel & Co. $3.50.

AN ENGLISHMAN'S RECOLLECTIONS OF EGYPT, 1863 to 1887. With an Epilogue Dealing with the Present Time. By Baron de Kusel, (Ber.) with thirty-two illustrations and a map. New York: John Lane Company. $3.

TALES that make the red blood stir in mummies are these "Popular Stories of Ancient Egypt." They are filled with the lays of stirring days, with the guile of the old serpent of the Nile, with the inscrutable mystery of the East.

In their content they greatly resemble the "Arabian Nights Entertainment," and yet there is a certain flavor which is all Egyptian. There could be no more violent contrast between two volumes than this assemblage of legends of the ancient land and the recollections of Baron de Kusel, also noticed here, which relate to the Egypt of this day and generation.

The only points of contact which they seem to have is in their very frank portrayal of Egyptian morals as being far from desirable. Ethical standards did not seem to have changed much along the Nile since the hieroglyphics were freshly made, and they continue to this present day to be beneath the notice of the Young Person.

But to return to our mummies—the mummies which are veritably reincarnated in these stories of the ancient land which seems ever new. The first story was discovered about 1852, and its new light on the Pharaonic period occasioned great surprise, even among those scholars who believed that they knew ancient Egypt and all her ways, which were far from those of pleasantness and peace.

Some of the material in these stories has already been employed in fanciful flights by Ebers and by Miss Marie Corelli. The stories were assembled by Sir G. Maspero, holder of various academic degrees, whose fame as an archaeologist is world wide, and the translation by Mrs. Johns is apparently faithful and accurate.

It is to be regretted that so much attention is given to the gloss that the text is almost obscured in a growth of annotative verbiage. One of these days some one with the spirit of the land of the pyramids stirring in his veins after all these centuries may rise and have his fling among the ceremants of the spiced past of the Egypt of Maspero and all the antiquarians. The translations of the Popular Stories are painfully literal in places, but occasionally they rise to the fervor of an adaptation which shows the men and women of Egypt as they were. For the general reader the sins and the passions of the sons and daughters of the Nile are perhaps too frankly stated, but in spite of its ponderous learning and its superabundant notes, this book of Egypt will hold the interest of any one. There are movement and action in the story of "The High Emprise for the Cuirass," which stirs the pulses. One can see the fighting men of the High Lord of Amon and hear the clash of arms. How at last the talisman is restored to its rightful owner is indeed a dramatic recital.

The stories of the Old Testament receive illumination from this book of stories, and after reading them one may better understand the career of Joseph and the difficulties he encountered in the loyal service of Potiphar. Here are stories of magicians and of rods and serpents which have their counterpart in the narratives of the sacred books. "The Adventure of Sarni-Khamois with Mummies" is a story of Egyptian love primitive and barbaric. In the tale of "The Doomed Prince" there is an outcropping of Oriental fatalism.

From the point of view of the staid scholar there is much to commend itself in this painstaking gathering of the corn of Egyptian lore into the granary of romance. Perhaps one day some one will make a properly expurgated volume for the general public, with the ponderous notes relegated to the back and nothing to stem the onrush of a free and untrammeled translation. The wizardry of Scheherazade has come to us through carefully filtered translations until now we have in permanent literary form a very respectable version of Aladdin and of Sindbad the Sailor. The tales of Egypt would no doubt yield well to a similar treatment, and one of these days perhaps the publishers will favor us with an edition in really popular guise which will give the requisite atmosphere.

A most valuable book on modern Egypt, especially at this time, is "An Englishman's Recollections of Egypt, 1863 to 1887." The manuscript was completed about the time the European war broke out, and the author has added an epilogue. It is rather misleading to limit the compass of the book in the title to the twenty-five years mentioned, for the additional matter brings the work absolutely to the present date. Baron de Kusel is typically English in his view of Egypt. He went to the land of the pyramids in 1863 to join a mercantile firm, but later he entered the Customs Service and by his close application to the business in hand rose to preferment. He was in charge of the British Customs at the time of the revolt of Arabi Pasha. His book is of especial interest now that England has tightened her protectorate and there have been momentous changes.

Baron de Kusel seems to have known nearly everybody of consequence in Egypt, and he speaks of them in an offhand, easy way which shows a deep familiarity with all that had transpired in Egypt. If the opportunity comes for a revision of this work, a second edition would be much improved by the amplifying of the accounts of some of the important happenings. The account of the opening of the Suez Canal, at which the author was present, hardly seems adequate, in view of his wonderful facilities for observing this event.

The book is intensely autobiographical. In one passage the Baron dwells with the fondness of a connoisseur upon the fine cigar which the Khédive gave him, by far the finest weed of the kind he had ever had. He tells again how he had the honor of being invited by "his Highness Tewfik Pasha" to his first grand ball and reception and adds that he had the honor also of having received a very friendly greeting from his Highness, whom he had known personally when his Highness was heir apparent.

The Baron dismisses his impressions of the Egyptian Sphinx with a few words, but he has much to say about Lady Meux. His account of the taking away of Cleopatra's Needle is interesting and circumstantial. One of the most illuminating chapters tells of the Baron's occupancy of the post of American Consul General at Cairo for three months during the absence of a regular incumbent, and he gives a good insight into the methods of Americans. He had to answer a prodigious number of letters, not only from the department but also from American manufacturers and merchants, for, as he says, "these latter gentry require much of their Consuls."

The book is copiously illustrated and is replete with valuable notes bearing on Egyptian history.

Human Nature in Business

A book by Sherwin Cody entitled "How to Deal with Human Nature in Business" contains practical instruction by a man of experience with respect to business correspondence, advertising, and salesmanship. Men and women engaged in business, as principals or subordinates, will be interested in this volume and will find in it a good deal of helpful information and advice. (Funk & Wagnalls Company. $2.)

A King Among Men

In a little book entitled "A King Among Men," Mary Stewart retells for the edification of young Americans some of the stories of Jesus that appear in the New Testament. These stories, as she puts it, contain "Christ's Summons to the Spirit of Youth to Found His Kingdom." (Fleming H. Revell Company. 50 cents.)

THE ANGELS OF MONS

THE publication, during the last few days, of a little volume entitled "The Bowmen, and Other Legends of the War," by ARTHUR MACHEN (G. P. Putnam's Sons) brings a new element of controversy into the curious touch of supernaturalism that has recently developed regarding the battlefield at Mons in the latter half of August, 1914. The story goes that at the crisis of the fighting, when the French and English were growing disheartened by their ineffectual efforts to overcome the enemy, certain celestial beings, in the midst of whom was St. George, suddenly appeared between the armies and by their timely aid brought victory to the Allies. For some months past varying versions of this story have been finding their way into the newspapers. It has been given as fact—if fact can be predicated of apparition—with witnesses cited to vouch for its authenticity, until now there are doubtless many who believe that the "Angels of Mons" did actually appear in the battlefield during those fateful days of August. The whole occurrence was affirmatively given in the Occult Review for last August in an article that was reviewed at length in THE NEW YORK TIMES for last Sunday. This article, entitled "The Angelic Leaders," is by Miss PHYLLIS CAMPBELL, a nurse in a French hospital at the front, and gives the details and variants of the legend together with much corroborative testimony as to its truth. Now comes Mr. MACHEN'S volume of legends, and with it an account of the origin of "The Angels of Mons," that quite robs the latter of their miraculous quality. For the whole "apparition," Mr. MACHEN tells us in a lengthy introduction, was conceived and written by him in prosaic London, on the last Sunday of August, 1914, immediately after reading of the retreat from Mons, and this story, for which he chose the title "The Bowmen," was published in The Evening News of Sept. 29, the same year. Having disposed of his story Mr. MACHEN naturally thought he had heard the end of it. But the readers of "The Bowmen"—many of them—were determined to find more than fiction in the "legend":

> In a few days from its publication the editor of The Occult Review wrote to me. He wanted to know whether the story had any foundation in fact. I told him that it had no foundation in fact of any kind or sort; I forget whether I added that it had no foundation in rumor, but I should think not, since to the best of my belief there were no rumors of heavenly interposition in existence at that time. Certainly I had heard of none. Soon after the editor of Light wrote asking a like question, and I made him a like reply. It seemed to me that I had stifled any "Bowmen" mythos in the hour of its birth.

MR. MACHEN'S entire experience with this fascinating "legend" of his, as he now tells it to us, forms a remarkable document in the psychology of belief. His readers were bound to find "fact" in his story and he was powerless to prevent them. "The Bowmen" was reprinted in various religious periodicals, attained an immense circulation, and was apparently accepted as "true," even in spite of the author's protests to the contrary. Thus, to cite one instance, Mr. MACHEN assured the editor of ore of these magazines, to whom he had accorded permission to reprint the story, that "The Bowmen" was "pure invention":

> The priest wrote again, suggesting—to my amazement—that I must be mistaken, that the main "facts" of "The Bowmen" must be true, that my share in the matter must surely have been confined to the elaboration and decoration of a veridical history. It seemed that my light fiction had been accepted by the congregation of this particular church as the soldiest of facts; and it was then that it began to dawn on me that if I had failed in the art of letters I had succeeded, unwittingly, in the art of deceit. This happened, I should think, some time in April, and the snowball of rumor that was then set rolling has been rolling ever since, growing bigger and bigger, till it is now of a monstrous size.

It was after the month of April that Mr. MACHEN noticed the variants that were being made of his story, but he finds no difficulty in tracing the genesis of all these. A postscript to his book is written after reading the advance proof sheets of Miss CAMPBELL'S article on "The Angelic Leaders," in the August number of The Occult Review. He assures us that the latter "has not shaken my incredulity," and comments humorously upon this new "evidence." Mr. MACHEN'S little volume contains in all four "legends." They are well worth reading for their own intrinsic value. As the beginning of an interesting "mythos" they will have a permanent place in the literature of the war.

THE retirement of Professor GEORGE SAINTSBURY from the Chair of English Literature in the University of Edinburgh marks a change that is not necessarily regrettable in a career that has for years been a helpful influence in the study of literature in Great Britain and America. Now that he is relieved from the routine of his professional duties he will have the more time to devote to studies intended for a wider audience than one assembled within the walls of a university. Before taking up his work at the university Professor SAINTSBURY had played a leading part in the critical literature of his day. He was active in journalism, and the daily familiarity that this gave him with the affairs of life undoubtedly helped to free his purely literary studies from the scholasticism that they easily might have acquired. Literature has been to him a vital matter, not a subject to be confined to the philologist's study. His essays in criticism have been effective for good in our own institutions of learning, where the mature works resulting from his long experience in literary controversy will be awaited with interest.

THAT the true realist is abnormally sensitive to the mere words that form the vehicle of his craft has more than once furnished the theme for literary reminiscence. FLAUBERT polished and repolished his lines with such painstaking labor that he is said to have turned out rarely more than a page of manuscript a day; BALZAC and TOLSTOY covered their pages with such spider's webs of verbal corrections that the resulting misery endured by those whose task it was to decipher their work is still matter for pleasant gossip. And now it appears that Mr. GEORGE MOORE, true to this idiosyncrasy of realism, in superintending a complete edition of his works became so disgusted with the title of one of his stories that he seriously considered omitting the volume containing it from the collection. The title was "A Drama in Muslin." This, Mr. MOORE felt, was "vulgar." It is reported that, before killing the book outright, he tried "Mousseline" and "Bal Blanc"—but this is doubtless a calumny. Finally it occurred to him to try a compromise—hence, the book has been retained under the title "Muslin." According to Mr. MOORE, the English language is no longer a fit medium for literary art.

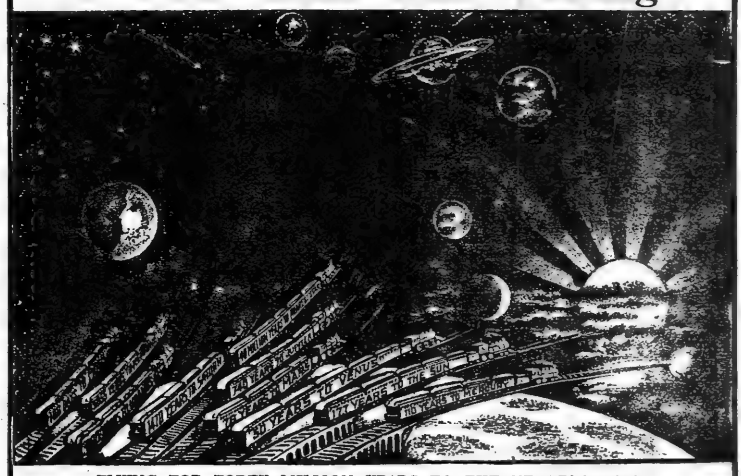
TRADE UNIONS

A SURVEY OF THE LEGAL STATUS OF THE TRADE UNION, ITS ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT. By Laurence A. Steinhardt.

In a compact pamphlet of fifty-odd pages Mr. Steinhardt endeavors to make clear the origin of statutes dealing with trade unionism, to show their purpose, how far they have been effective, and what are the limitations placed by law upon the power of the trade union to force collective bargaining upon the employer. A brief chapter describes and summarizes English legislation and decisions five hundred years ago. After another concise section which considers the legislation and decisions in this country during the latter half of the nineteenth century, the author takes up the most important phases of the labor conflict, and in a very brief summary presents the decisions of recent years in the United States upon the right to combine, upon boycotts, strikes, and picketing, considers the cases in which there has been direct conflict with the Federal Government, and in a final chapter takes up government by injunction. Following is a list of cases cited in the body of the pamphlet which fills five pages.

Mr. Steinhardt considers the present condition of the laws relating to trade unions in this country so chaotic that any attempt to set it forth in definite outline is hardly less than presumptuous. Nevertheless he has succeeded in making his survey fairly comprehensive, and at the same time clear and untechnical, while the simple, logical treatment gives it value for the average busy reader.

Is Your Child Still Waiting?



FLYING FOR FORTY MILLION YEARS TO THE NEAREST STAR.

EVERYBODY KNOWS ABOUT

The Book of Knowledge

The Children's Encyclopaedia

NEARLY EVERYBODY OWNS IT

DO YOU?

THE FIRST WORK OF REFERENCE FOR THE YOUNG

Never before has there been such a thing as a Children's Encyclopaedia! And yet there is not a half-hour in the day when the child is not asking questions. His hungry little mind is seeking to be fed with every variety of information. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is a storehouse of the important and essential information of the world, written in the plain and simple language that a child can understand. It teaches the child how to think and what to think—how to find out for himself everything he wants to know. The child who has mastered this wonderful work has laid the foundation of a practical education for life. IS YOUR CHILD STILL WAITING FOR THE GREATEST EDUCATIONAL HELP OF THE CENTURY?

ANSWERS EVERY QUESTION A CHILD CAN ASK

What is a dew-drop?
How is a coral island made?
How did men learn to talk?
Where are the flowers in Winter?
Why is India hotter than Alaska?
Will the sun ever cool down?
What is a ship's water line?
What makes our hearts beat?
What is an element?
Does light weigh anything?
What causes rust?
What gives steam its power?
What changes the direction of the wind?

NO CHILD CAN RESIST THE STRIKING PICTURES

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE has accomplished a psychological feat. The children love to read it as they do no other book. They cannot resist its thousands of striking and wonderful pictures and marvelous stories of fact. It leads the child through a hundred foreign countries, telling him the history of their peoples, their customs, art and architecture, in simple and winning language. It takes him down into the mine where the coal is being dug, and up into the air where the worlds are spinning in everlasting cycles and men are learning to fly. It lures him into the woods where the birds and beasts are making their many homes; it shows him the wonderful things in the world of waters. The child will never forget these pictures and the wonderful facts which they teach him.

A RENAISSANCE OF RUSSIAN REALISM

Recent Translations of Works of Fiction from Gogol to Artzibasheff That Indicate an Increased Interest in the Literature of Russia

DEAD SOULS. By Nikolai Gogol. Translated by Stephen Graham. Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.35.

IT ITALY by age-long tradition has been to the northern races a "woman-country, wooed, not wed," infinitely tender and beloved, Russia, for the briefer space in which she has revealed herself to us, has been our femme incomprise, with all the difficulty and the fascination inherent in the type. Now she blows hot, now cold. Here we have seen in her a pilgrim humbly journeying in the dust to holy places, again a mighty and kindly mother, then a swift angel of destruction. Who is she? What is she? These are questions which the Russians themselves, with a curiosity as great as our own and—it frequently appears—a more detached impartiality, are continually asking. And because the Russian does possess, beyond all others, this intense and gnawing curiosity concerning his own and his national whence, whither, why, and wherefore, he has produced a mass of prose fiction powerful beyond any other in the world.

Up to the present year only a few, peaks rose out of this mass into the vision of most English and American readers—Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevski, with here and there a lesser, as Gorky, whose vogue among us has been in a sense one of accident. Even Gogol, the acknowledged father of the Russian realistic novel, who did for Russia what Cervantes did for Spain, is scarcely more than a name to the man in the street. But the war has changed all that. Translators and publishers have anticipated the demand brought about by changed conditions, and this Autumn translations, old and new, of Russian authors known and (to us) previously unknown, fall from the presses as thick, if not so gay, as the leaves in Vallombrosa or along the Hudson.

In any consideration of these recent translations Gogol's name should, like the Arab's, "lead all the rest," not only because in point of time and originality he actually does lead, but because he is broader, more international in spirit, than the later writers whom we have agreed to call, with a not altogether flattering intention, typically "Russian." In fact, Prosper Merimée ranks him among English rather than Russian or other Continental humorists, and the parallel is no less just than acute. "Dead Souls" might easily have been written, given proper period and environment, by Fielding, by De Foe, or by Thackeray. The trenchant asides, in particular, in which Gogol links up the rascalities of his hero with the common weaknesses of mankind have a remarkably Thackerayan flavor.

The title "Dead Souls" has a depressing enough sound, but no such significance. The word "soul" was in the old days simply the common term for serf, and the hero, Tchitchikoff, a cheerful rogue, conceives the idea of buying up from the landowners their "dead souls"—i. e., serfs who had died since the last census was taken, but whose names would remain on the tax lists until the next census, some years thence. By this stroke of business the landowners would be relieved of paying taxes on non-existent property and Tchitchikoff would be in possession of duly registered, authentic bills of sale of serfs, running into thousands of rubles, on which it should be perfectly possible to borrow money from the Government. In other words, Tchitchikoff was the first and greatest shoestring financier in literature, compared with whom the Get-Rich-Quick Wallingfords of our own day are a feeble and degenerate race.

In pursuance of his brilliant scheme Tchitchikoff travels through Russia and foregathers with rich and poor, with landowners and peasants, inn-keepers, magistrates, local governors, a constantly changing, many-colored throng. We see them as we might see a busy, gay crowd at a fair, yet each character, no matter how slight his part in the scene, is so individualized that he could never be mistaken for anybody else. Gogol's art is so great that we forget it is art—we take it for life.

And through it all, in and out, runs the author's eternal wonder and curiosity about the Russian character. Sometimes it is expressed half-satirically, as where he points out that "it must be stated, to our hero's credit, that he had a compassionate heart, and could not refrain from giving a copper groschen to a poor man" at the same moment when he was meditating a colossal fraud. Sometimes he observed with bitterness:

> It sometimes seems to me that the Russian is a lost being. He wants to do everything, and can do nothing. He keeps thinking that he will begin a new life on the morrow, but nothing comes of it. On that very same morrow he overfeeds himself, so that he can do nothing but wink, and cannot manage his tongue.

And again he forgets the sloth, the venality, the self-delusion which he sees on every hand, and which he describes with such unsparing humor, and breaks into a lyric cry to Russia under the figure of the Troika—"the bird troika."

"Dead Souls" is not merely a picturesque romance, though it is one of the most entertaining of that class; neither is it destructive criticism of Russia, though the faults of Russian character are mercilessly laid bare. Still less is it the work of a Slavophile, though Gogol's love for the broad steppe and for the dwellers upon it, rogues and honest men alike, is little less than a passion. The book is in the highest sense constructive, and underneath the humor and the play of whim and incident runs the moral, all the more effective for not being insisted upon, that true happiness, for a Russian or for any one else, consists in creation of some sort—for the Russian preferably the creation of two blades of grass where none grew before.

Gogol is the great pioneer. He laid out the road of a realism that, instead of wandering aimlessly in a desert, is the shortest way to the land known of but by few, where the romantic is real and the real is dyed deep in romance. But lanterns have been brought to bear, and in their flickering light many branching roads have been discovered. It is always so, and it is a good thing, in the main, making against monotony. Every now and then we follow one to its end and find it is only a blind alley filled with dead cats, and we regret the broad highway and the kindly darkness that hid all from us but the stars above; but now and then, too, we strike into a byway that leads us up to heights where we cannot only see the stars but hear them sing together.

It is such a path we tread with Dostoevski. The Russian critic, Merzhkovski, has drawn an interesting comparison between Dostoevski and Tolstoy, showing how the one fulfilled, involuntarily, and by the brute force, as it were, of circumstances and his own nature, the ideals of poverty, long-suffering under despite, fortitude under pain, love and charity to all, which the other strove toward all his life, but was prevented, by the brute force of circumstances and his own nature, from ever personally attaining.

From boyhood he had been poverty-stricken, sickly and miserable. But the world profited. Dostoevski was no romanticist, who could dream himself into happiness and write of the sun while rain pelted him. The diffidence which made it impossible for him to write at all except of the things he knew from actual experience and observation made him a great realist. In "Poor Folk," for instance, we feel that the author has lived, day by day and night by night, with the vodka-cursed petty officials, the literary hacks, the shattered human fragments at the bottom of the ladder, who figure in it. It is the story of a poor, broken-down old clerk, who drinks, who aspires after literary style, who goes without food and shoes that he may buy small luxuries for a seamstress on whom he lavishes a doting love, and who at the first opportunity marries and leaves her simple-hearted slave to sink deeper and deeper into poverty, loneliness, and despair. This was the first of Dostoevski's works to meet with success. In his humility he had feared that the editor to whom he sent it would not even read it, and the visit of Grigorovich and the poet Nekrassov to the miserable room of the young man—he was only 25—at 4 o'clock in the morning, after a night spent in reading the manuscript, to awaken the unknown author and fall upon his neck with tears and congratulations, is not only one of the most dramatic incidents in literature, but also one that could not possibly have happened in any other land than Russia.

The tale harks back to Gogol markedly, and Dostoevski has shown his consciousness of the debt very cleverly by making the naïve old hero recognize his own portrait in Gogol's short story "The Cloak," and resent it.

"The Gambler," equally with "Poor Folk," is a tale of close observation and, at its best points, of experience. It will never rank with the greater novels, but contains some unforgettable portraits, as of the grandmother, the imperious, independent old lady who fell a victim to the fever of gambling while trying to reclaim others, and of the young Russian tutor, who tells the story and was himself the hopeless slave of the green tables. In this story, Dostoevski attempts, to some extent, the analysis of types alien to himself and to Russia—to write as a cosmopolitan—and he failed, where Turgenev would have succeeded. Fortunately, it was an attempt he set him made. It is in the portrayal of the passions, the vices, the misfortunes, and the aspirations of "un vrai Russe—un Kalmuk," as Blanche, the extraordinary French courtesan in "The Gambler" calls its hero, that Dostoevski finds his road among the stars.

In a recent clever essay on Michael Artzibasheff, Mr. James Huneker has characterized "Breaking Point" as "the most poignant and intolerable book I ever read." Considering the extent of the adventures of Mr. Huneker's soul among masterpieces—and others—this is a broad indictment, but it is none too broad. The mature reader of the book gets the same sort of impression from it that filled him when at 14 he sat flat on the library floor and fed upon the play of "Titus Andronicus," too glutted with horrors to know or care that the fat curled under him was asleep or that the edge of the bookcase was cutting into his oblivious back. This while reading. At the end of the book and after a pause for meditation and a mental calculation that out of the fifteen or so characters seven deliberately kill themselves, three die natural deaths of detailed ghastliness, and that every woman in the book, except one who is dying of consumption when it opens, is seduced during the course of the story, one finds it as hard to take it seriously as one does a bad dream recalled at noonday.

Yet "Breaking Point" possesses significance, both in itself and as marking a stage in its author's development. For Artzibasheff is a man of extraordinary power, and the direction which it takes is a matter of no small importance to the world.

One of the most interesting things about "Breaking Point" is the offhand fashion in which it confounds the critics, admiring and otherwise, who have read "Sanine" and made up their minds firmly about its author. In that book Artzibasheff was the Russian moralist par excellence, preaching the dogma of unmorality; a devil's advocate; a formidable opponent of Tolstoy, arguing against his doctrines of charity and non-resistance in Tolstoy's own best manner. "Sanine" brought the superman down from the realms of the abstract to everyday life; it was the bible of ruthless individualism.

But in "Breaking Point" the bubble the individualist blows is pricked; the weak point in "Sanine" is located, emphasized, one might say danced upon, if any act so gay could possibly be associated with a book so grim. Pleasure is a good, acknowledged, but it is not an endless good. There lies the trouble. As long as we could see Sanine proceeding from one conquest to another and never wearying of conquest, drinking champagne and vodka continuously en routs without acquiring cirrhosis of the liver—in brief, eating his cake and having his cake—the doctrine of ruthless individualism had charms. But alas! In "Breaking Point" we learn that this, too, is vanity. At the turn of every lane satiety lurks.

Dchenieff, the artist, whom all women love and who loves the woman in all women, is Sanine carried to a logical conclusion. He has been called a weaker Sanine, but his weakness is only the normal reaction of his environment, the return of his own deeds upon himself, which the hero of the earlier book lacked. His logical conclusion is suicide, the only resource of a soul emptied of belief in a world peopled with ghosts.

"Breaking Point," though frequently intolerable, though its heaped-up tragedy sometimes comes dangerously near producing the recoil into comedy in the mind of the reader which naturally follows an exaggerated gloom, remains a far deeper and richer work than "Sanine," and one of the most remarkable produced in any country in many years. There is no use in trying to reconcile it with any of our accepted theories. It stands as possibly the strongest exposition of pure intellectual nihilism known to modern readers. Political nihilism known to modern readers. Political nihilism is brushed aside, and the measure of the author's contempt for Socialists is found in the fact that Dchenieff, the haunted sensualist, on the last terrible night of his life, is brought so low as to envy them:

> My God, how I envy these dull Socialists who believe in their program and are firmly convinced that they only live in order to provide everybody with a fowl in their soup in the forty-second century! But there is nothing in my soul—do you understand?—nothing!

Individualism, the doctrine of the superman, breaks down not only because of intrinsic weakness, but because, in the relation of the sexes, where individualism is most useful and precious to a man, woman is not only never individualistic enough herself, but cannot understand the quality in him. Which leads to many of the embarrassments and most of the tragedies of life, a fact emphasized more strongly in "Breaking Point" than in any other book we can think of.

Many of the incidents in Artzibasheff's novel are so needlessly horrifying to our Western taste that we involuntarily cry out against him for leading us from Gogol's spacious highway into his blind alley, among the carcasses of worn-out pleasures and the shards of shattered ideals. But even at its worst the alley does not wind aimlessly, nor, wholly without purpose, clutter itself with garbage. Here and there it touches most unexpectedly Dostoevski's path among the stars. Dostoevski, like Tolstoy, preached redemption through suffering. Without pain no man progresses, only through anguish does he see God. As to the suffering, and even as to its purpose, Artzibasheff agrees with him perfectly:

> Suffering is the cause of progress. Give us happiness and we shall stand still. * * * The whole history of the world is one uninterrupted stream of sorrow, pain, hate, and all that is dark in human imagination. That is the life of man.

Then, without warning, the path dips away again:

> But why shall man go on suffering forever? It's high time people understood that they have no right to condemn the endless generations of the future to the same sufferings that millions of those who have gone before have already lived through.

In other words, though progress is the reward of pain, the game is not worth the candle.

Upon the premise of the universality of suffering, the usefulness of suffering, even a certain curious and to us morbid and inverted delight that grows out of suffering, Artzibasheff and Dostoevski stand hand in hand. But one sees a goal, the other sees none. To both, humanity is eternally martyred by fire; but to the one humanity will emerge pure gold, tried by the furnace; the other believes that its dreams and aspirations and desires will sink to crumbling ash. And since in the fullness of time the ash will cover all, why linger dying in a dying world? Suicide is the only way out; annihilation the only refuge; to Artzibasheff tradition means so little that it apparently has never occurred to him to fear that in the final sleep dreams may come. Yet his skepticism is so great that it embraces even itself. Naumoff, the exponent of the cult of the bare bodkin, is a megalomaniac, half fanatic, half fraud, who himself finds too much joy in preaching self-destruction to destroy himself, and we are left gazing into the void without the assurance that even that is safe from the touch of Artzibasheff's corroding irony.

It is a peculiarity of Russian novelists, true to nothing like the same extent of those of any other land, that no matter how remarkable their novels may be, their own lives surpass them in what, if it were not so real, we might call fictional interest. "Dead Souls" is a work rich in contrasts, but it contains no contrast so deep as that between the Gogol who could write it with such frank gayety and abandon, and the Gogol who, in the last years of his life, burned the par still unpublished and turned, like Tolstoy, to an asceticism that denied beauty and disclaimed joy; between his hero's adventurous pilgrimage through Russia and the painful pilgrimage that, in his last days, led his own unsatisfied soul to Jerusalem and back—still unsatisfied.

"Poor Folk" is a tale unparalleled in its unaffected simplicity and pathos, but neither in it nor in any other book did Dostoevski portray a character more unfortunate, more single-minded, more beat upon by fate, or who rose, spite of his misfortunes, to greater spiritual heights.

Of Artzibasheff's life we know too little to pursue the analogy. Since it is difficult to picture him out-Heroding his own Herods at the game of death, one rather enjoys imagining him a philosophic, meditative observer of the game of life, extracting pleasure from simple things—the songs of birds, children, and a family hearthstone. "Sanine" and "Breaking Point" have excited our appetite for drama—and he has left no possible thrill of drama remaining to us other than the spectacle of their author cheerfully cultivating his garden and rearing a happy brood in the precepts of conventional morality.

Spencer Fullerton Baird

The career of a great American naturalist, friend of Agassiz and Audubon, Second Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and first Commissioner of the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, is well told by Dr. William H. Dall in his biography of Spencer Fullerton Baird. Dr. Dall's work is founded largely on material placed at his disposal by the executor of the will of Miss Lucy Hunter Baird, Professor Baird's only child. It includes a great deal of interesting correspondence with eminent scientists and military leaders. (J. B. Lippincott Company. $3.50.)

ing about the city looking for work. At the end of a hot and wearisome day which leaves her penniless and in a rebellious mood that would welcome almost any means of escape she goes to the roof of the house where she lives, falls asleep and is wakened by a sudden storm of rain, thunder, and lightning. The scuttle has been closed, and she runs across the roofs seeking shelter, finds at the prosperous end of the block a scuttle that has been left open, lets herself in, and discovers that it is a home of wealth and elegance whose inmates have, by some chance, left it alone for the moment. She finds my lady's boudoir and takes possession, with keen delight clothing herself for once as she would like to be clad. Presently she discovers a handsome young man breaking open a safe in the library, and while she watches another man rushes in, throws him down, and is about to get the better of him when she jumps forward, seizes his pistol and comes to the aid of the under man. Then there follows a bewildering maze of plots and counterplots which whirl Sally Manvers off, as an outcome of her first adventure, to an island off the Maine coast as ostensible secretary to the mistress of a beautiful home, and plunges her into adventures and perils and ups and downs of fate. And through it all the reader is kept in doubt as to the motives and purposes of the man and his sister who own the house of Sally's first escapade and of eager uncertainty as to how the whole affair is going to end for her.

THE GREAT UNREST

THE hero of Miss Mills Young's story spends a year in South Africa, in close association with the labor troubles of 1913 and 1914 in Johannesburg, and a brief psychological aside concerning them gives her the title. The young man recognizes that "the struggle was the outcome of the unrest of the age—the great unrest in the blood. He felt it stirring in his own—the love of violence, of violent emotions—a sort of instinctive revolt against the established order of things." Draycott Arthur Manners—"Dam" for short, and the sobriquet seems to reflect something of the aggressive independence of his nature—gets his full length picture drawn and his story told with very considerable skill and interest. It begins, in approved English style, with his babyhood and follows him rapidly through his school years and a year or so at Oxford, where, after the manner of young men at universities in English fiction, he has no end of a good time and contracts almost no end of debts. Without any doubt, if the historian of the future looks to the present day English novels for light upon the manners and customs of the time, he will decide that the whole English educational system, public schools, universities and all, was devised and administered for the sole purpose of unfitting their students for any reasonable, useful kind of life. On this side the Atlantic one can only read these novels with amazement and wonder if they are trying to picture truly a real state of affairs. For the one thing above all others that the modern English novel aims to achieve is realism.

But "Dam" is suddenly brought up with a short turn when his father has financial reverses and he goes forth to prove whether or not he can make good, a bulldog sort of quarrel with his father having made impossible the acceptance of any help from home. He goes to South Africa and his experiences there during the labor troubles and with women with whom he thinks he is in love fill the middle third of the book. One sees upon him the liberating, developing influence of the larger, freer life, which strikes off from his mind many of the shackles imposed upon it by the training and environment of his childhood and youth. Inevitably, the freedom, and the consciousness of it go to his head and he does things of which he is presently ashamed. And, of course, the latter part of the story tells of the opening of the war and of his going to the front to plunge the ardor of his "great unrest" into the fighting line.

A SOUL ON FIRE

A SOUL ON FIRE. By Frances Fenwick Williams. New York: John Lane Company. $1.30.

"A Soul on Fire" is considerably better than its title. The name of this new novel by the author of "The Arch-Satirist" may be dismissed with the brief statement that there is no excuse for it. To be sure, it is quoted from Omar Khayyam. But even that cannot justify it. Nothing can.

The book is a really interesting story, founded on various theories as to pre-natal influence and the sub-conscious self and the curative power of psycho-analysis. It presents a beautiful young woman from England, heiress to an ancient West-Country estate and to an ancient West-Country legend, believing herself to be the inheritor of an ancient West-Country curse. The plot moves through the discovery of her "powers" and the ruin she lays about her, to the tracing of the causes for her "supernatural" qualities, and the final laying of her "ghost." Considered as a superstructure of fiction on the foundation of up-to-the-minute studies in the sub-conscious the story is entertaining and not too improbable; but the author introduces an element of fatal weakness in insisting upon reincarnating her witch, whether or no, and in bringing scientists and clergymen to attest the witch's avatar. In style Mrs. Williams alternates between the epigrammatic sentences of the "witty society novel" and the melodramatic phrasing that is better suited to her theme. Her social climbers and gossips are often funny, but their rather pointless conversations and the author's wit at their expense serve to retard the action of a story whose action remains its chief claim to the reader's attention. If Mrs. Williams laid aside her cleverness and told her story in the direct narrative that its incident demands, her novel—which may be summed up as a semi-scientific melodrama—would be more absorbing reading.

HAPPY DAYS

A number of short sketches and burlesques selected from Mr. Milne's contributions to "Punch" make up the contents of this entertaining volume. They range over a very wide variety of topics, from the difficulties of playing the pianola and being an amateur uncle, to golf, gardening, seaside literature, physical culture, and plays "intended for amateur production." There are only six possible plots for amateur plays, and Mr. Milne gives us examples of these six—with stage directions and comments. The tragedy of the lost railway ticket, the "amusements" of an informal evening in the suburbs, and the making of a Christmas short story which must have in it turkey, holly, mistletoe, and a wassail bowl, in order that it may fit the already ordered illustrations—these are some of the many topics touched upon. Dog lovers will enjoy the accounts of Chum, the black cocker spaniel, his charms, and his iniquities, and readers of popular magazines should appreciate the series of papers on "Successful Men"—a series designed, says Mr. Milne, "to assist parents in choosing a career for their sons."

Although these skits were originally intended for English readers, they should appeal to American ones as well. And lighthearted and amusing as these glimpses of "Happy Days" are, they are given a certain pathos by the fact that their author is now with the English Army in the trenches.

PRIVATE SPUD TAMSON

PRIVATE SPUD TAMSON. By Captain W. R. Campbell. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.

In this inevitable day of jerry-built war fiction, it is to be assumed that readers of "war books" are after facts. If it is literature they want—but that is another story. "Private Spud Tamson," for example, may be recommended to those readers of war books who want facts. Its author is a British soldier. He fought in the Boer War. He is at present in the British Territorial Force. He dedicates his book to his commanding officer, his brother officers, and the "noncoms and men" of his "gallant regiment." He writes about enlistments and training camps and the war. And although from any viewpoint of "literature," of journalism, of the most liberal standards of style, Captain W. R. Campbell simply cannot write at all, he does manage to put facts—out of his own personal knowledge of them—between the covers of a book. And for that reason, and that alone, the story of Spud Tamson—who came from the slums of Glasgow, enlisted when war broke out, went to a training camp and was put through his courses and finally killed some Germans under circumstances that won him the Victoria Cross—is interesting. The author's merit is that he really tells how Spud fared as a private soldier.

WRITING BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

An Editor of a Magazine for Young People Analyzes Current Juvenile Literature—Letters from Readers of The Book Review

The New York Times Review of Books:

I HAVE read the letters of Miss Grace Blanchard and of Mr. William Heyliger with reference to juvenile books written in series. It is a gratification to see that the important subject of books for boys to read is receiving deserved attention, though in this instance a less important feature is touched upon. I am prepared to admit that the series is, in the words of a certain small boy's definition of a lie, "An abomination in the sight of the Lord but a very present help in time of trouble." But, then, so is cereal breakfast food. Neither would exist but for the demand.

Book publishers believe, among a number of other things which are not so, that a boy's book will not sell unless it has companions—unless there are, in short, a whole litter of them. Inasmuch as book publishers hold the key to the door of paradise for authors, and inasmuch as it is the publishers who publish and sell and so raise authors a level—appreciable at times—above penury, the authors must write what the publishers will print. Therefore we must be resigned to the series until some literary Billy Sunday can get the tribe of publishers into his tent and convert them with a hot blast of eloquence.

To my way of thinking, as an author, as one of the editors of The American Boy, and as a reader of boys' books, the series is not malignant—it is simply one of the minor nuisances. Boys like them—and boys have a way of liking things which are nuisances. My own boys are the owners of an Airedale puppy with an unrestrained appetite for rugs. So let the boys have them, and let Miss Blanchard, Mr. Heyliger, and myself devote our time to discussing features of our modern juveniles which are worth getting into a stew about.

For instance, let us consider what the boy reads, and not how many of it.

Let us take for a basis this proposition: So long as a boy's book is bound in cloth, is illustrated, is issued by a reputable firm, and sells for a dollar or upward, neither parent nor critic gives a hoot what the book is about, how it is written, what are its ideals, or the sort of disease of the imagination that afflicts its author.

Parents and uncles and aunts buy tons of boys' books every year, without having the slightest idea what they are buying. It may by chance be such a splendid book as Hayden Carruth's "Track's Edd," or one of James Willard Schultz's classics. But the chances are it will not, for those books are on a shelf back of the picture postal card rack, while "The Zeppelin Boys in the Moon" or other books of its class, with attractive illustrations of a lad pursued by a wall-eyed hocus-pocus on the banks of a Martian canal, are displayed on the table of honor.

I used to read "Frank Merriwell" in nickel form behind the barn, because the dime novel was looked upon by my parents as little better than petty larceny; however, "Frank" was issued in a book with cloth covers, and my uncle gave it to me, and my father and mother smiled with satisfaction when I stayed at home of nights to read it—and there you are.

Parental criticism of juveniles never gets past the cover and the price mark. It would seem to me to be a more valuable work for Miss Blanchard and Heyliger and myself—and the invaluable NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW—if all of us might present this new and astounding matter to adults. To adults who are so persnickety about style and strength and literary quality in their own books—but who fail to admit that these same things can exist in a juvenile.

It is more important for a boy to develop—by reading such books—a taste for worthy books, than it is for his mother to go to the Literary Club and read a paper on the Esoteric Appeal of Hilda Lessways' Method of Turning a Door Knob.

Lastly, fifty per cent. of the books which have battled through fifty years of life to immortality have done so because of their juvenile—boy juvenile—element. It is worth while to write good juveniles—in series or out. Swift proved it in "Gulliver's Travels," which died as a satire before the ink was dry, but which will live as a juvenile till print is supplanted by cinematography. Robert Louis Stevenson never wrote anything but juveniles—in the line of fiction. "The Jungle Books" will be alive when "The Light That Failed" has ceased even to smoke. The best part of Thackeray is a juvenile—"Henry Esmond." The first eight chapters of "The Ordeal of Richard Feverel" are splendid juvenile writing, and nowhere did Meredith equal them. Mark Twain would never have worn a scarlet cloak if it had not been for a certain series of juvenile books, nor would Alexandre Dumas amount to a great deal to us if it were not for another series.

So long as the quality is there, and buyers can be made to bother their heads about its presence or absence, it doesn't matter a tinker's dam whether the book be as isolated as St. Simon Stylites or one of a series of fifty.

FIRST LADY NOVELIST

The New York Times Review of Books:

I WAS surprised to find from an article in THE BOOK REVIEW for Oct. 10 that you seem to accept as fact that Eliza Haywood, whose dates, according to the Britannica, are 1693-1756, was really the "first lady novelist" in English literature. My surprise comes from the fact that any manual on the development of the English novel or the Encyclopedia Britannica or the Dictionary of National Biography could have told you that Mrs. Haywood was merely the third in the list and perhaps not really so well known as either of the others. Mrs. Aphra Behn, who lived from 1640 to 1689, and Mrs. Mary Manley, whose dates are from 1663 to 1724, had completed their work and achieved distinction in their own times before Mrs. Haywood was known at all. Mrs. Manley's scandalous "histories" might perhaps better be ignored, except by the special student of the novel; but even the general reader, who aspires to be merely generally intelligent, need not, and should not, ignore Mrs. Behn's famous novel "Oroonoko, or the History of the Royal Slave," first published in 1688. It was here, for the first time in literature, that we find anything like a complete expression of a sympathy for slaves, of that sentimental exaltation of the life of nature which we conventionally attribute to Rousseau. It was apparently Dryden who invented the term, the "Noble Savage" in 1672. It was Mrs. Behn, however, who gave flesh and blood to this conception in what was really a remarkable novel, if we consider her lack of models and the dearth of decent fiction throughout the seventeenth century. Mrs. Behn's novels have recently been republished in a single volume, in the Library of Early Novelists, edited by E. A. Baker, (New York, 1913.) On Page 4 of this edition, you will find:

> And 'tis most evident and plain that simple Nature is the most harmless, inoffensive and virtuous mistress. It is she alone, if she were permitted, that better instructs the world than all the inventions of man.

Professor Saintsbury, in his new volume on the English novel, pokes fun at those who would attribute to Mrs. Behn any definite intention of preaching a crusade against slavery or in favor of the simple life. Yet I, for one, am convinced after a recent re-reading of "Oroonoko" that Mrs. Behn was in earnest and at least temporarily honest in her advocacy of the superiority of the state of nature and her condemnation of the evils of slavery. She deserves credit not only for writing a first-rate novel, considering her times, but also for leading the van ahead of such great ones as Rousseau, Wilberforce, and Mrs. Stowe. Mrs. Behn was the "first lady novelist." GEORGE MOREY MILLER.
Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Ind., Oct 17.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.—There is no doubt that Mrs. Behn and Mrs. Manley, both of whom wrote fiction, were prior to Mrs. Haywood. The latter, however, was by profession a writer of prose fiction, while Mrs. Behn and Mrs. Manley were better known in their day as writers for the stage. It was in this sense that Mrs. Haywood was considered the "first lady novelist." In Professor Whicher's monograph on Mrs. Haywood, to the review of which Professor Miller refers, we are told:

> Of all the amazons of prose fiction who in a long struggle with neglect and disparagement demonstrated the fitness of their sex to follow the novelist's calling, none was more persistent, more adaptable, or more closely identified with the development of the novel than Mrs. Haywood. Mrs. Behn and Mrs. Manley must be given credit as pioneers in fiction, but much of their best work was written for the stage. Eliza Haywood, on the other hand, added little to her reputation by her few dramatic performances. She achieved her success first and last as a writer of romances and novels.]

ABTZIBASHEF

The New York Times Review of Books:

I have an extract from THE TIMES BOOK REVIEW about "The Millionaire," by Artzibashef, calling attention to the latter's force and consummate artistry and admirable restraint. I am surprised that he should be regarded as the "Prophet of Pessimism," when he distinctly says that the outlook of a student of humanity is, in his viewpoint, liable to constant change; "each day, each hour even," he says, "has its message for us."

It appears so plain to me that, while he is acutely sensible of the unfortunate environment of thousands of human beings, and to the apparent injustice of fate, he is only portraying a few of the millions of humanity.

And I observe that critics are prone to mistake the sentiments that he attributes to the passing emotions of his characters for his own opinions and beliefs. And it is deplorable that this confusion is accentuated in the translation of his writings. It is gratifying, however, to see that his American critics as a unit do recognize the fact that he is essentially clean-minded. He has nothing but contempt for obscenity. The character of Sanine, for instance, instead of condoning immorality, as some have fancied, is intended to warn us that no man can be sure of himself, as, in the author's view, we are all in the toils of temptation.

There are some gifts that I have not seen commented upon, or very lightly touched. One may observe his remarkable and acute sensitiveness to sounds and odors—he so frequently alludes to the fragrance of youth, and when in the company of peasant farmers he detects an exhalation from them suggesting leather and apples, as he oddly expresses it—not the slightest sigh of the breeze or tremor of the leaves escapes him. And, above all, there is his great gift of word-painting of Nature. I speak from a wide range of reading, and in this line I find no one to equal him. READER.

Sanitation in Panama

In an illustrated volume entitled "Sanitation in Panama" General William Crawford Gorgas gives a clear and full account of what was done under his direction to make the Canal Zone a fit place for human beings to live in, and, as an introduction to the story, tells what he learned and accomplished in Havana while he was in charge of the sanitation of that city. The portion of his book that relates to Havana includes a fascinating narrative of the demonstration by the Reed Commission that only through the bite of the female stegomyia mosquito may a human being become infected with yellow fever. Beyond the Frontier
By RANDALL PARRISH

A fine new story of love and adventure by the greatest of American fiction writers.

It tells of early days in the great Middle West when the intrepid explorer La Salle, and his faithful friend Tonty, were blazing the way for civilization, and the golden lilies of France flew from the few lone blockhouses in the Indian country.

The Green Half-Moon
By JAMES FRANCIS DWYER

All the way from Aden to London, Pertab Zunel and his Moslem followers strove to steal the green half-moon from Warren. The fate of two great nations lay in that curious green jade crescent and all the craft and deviltry of the Orient was arrayed against the young American in the fierce, unequal struggle for its possession.

If you want to enjoy a real thriller of a story, as fast and full of action as a "movie," here it is.

Hermeneutic Interpretation of the Origin of the Social State of Man and of the Destiny of the Adamic Race
By Fabre d'Olivet
Done into English by Nayan Louise Redfield.
8°. $3.50 net.
The translation is of a deeply interesting philosophical history of mankind. It is difficult to believe that such a thorough, scholarly, and original work should have been allowed to exist for nearly a century without an English version.
M. d'Olivet, according to his admirable method, establishes the position of the principles in ontology and anthropology. He presents a metaphysical anatomy of individual man as ingenious as plausible. The successive scale of the instincts, passions, and faculties is then ascended in a double mode in the two primitive sexes and is continued through history from the savage state to the barbarous, from the original civilizations to our own. M. d'Olivet has given the public a philosophical study of permanent value.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS FROM TIMES READERS

COMMUNICATIONS for these columns should be addressed to the Editor of Queries and Answers, New York Times Review of Books. They should be written on only one side of the paper and must contain the name and address of the writer. If the inquirer prefers, initials only will be printed with the communication.

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

L. B. K.—Reference is made in "The Caxtons" to a book called "The Life of Robert Hall." Is this a fictitious name? If not, where can the book be obtained?

Robert Hall was a preacher. He was born in Arnesby, Leicestershire, England, on May 2, 1764, and died on Feb. 21, 1831. A "Memoir of Robert Hall," by O. G. Gregory, is printed in Volume II. of "Hall's Works." "Robert Hall as a Preacher," by J. Foster, and "Reminiscences of Robert Hall," by J. Greene, are published in Volume III. of the same work. A six-volume edition of "Hall's Works" was published in 1832. These works have been long out of print.

INQUIRER.—Will you please publish in your REVIEW OF BOOKS what A. G. Gardiner has written besides the "Pillars of Society," and who he is professionally? .

Alfred G. Gardiner has been editor of The Daily News of London, England, since 1902. He was born at Chelmsford in 1865, and was educated privately. He began his journalistic career on the staff of The Essex County Chronicle, and for fifteen years was associated with The Northern Daily Telegraph at Blackburn. He is the author of "Prophets, Priests, and Kings," and has written many pamphlets on political and social matters.

H. H.—Is there a translation of Dostoevski's "The House of the Dead," and will you kindly tell me if "Dracula," by Bram Stoker, has been published in this country?

A translation of "The House of the Dead, or, Prison Life in Siberia," by Fedor Mikhailovitch Dostoevski, was published as a volume in Everyman's Library by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York. "Dracula," by Bram Stoker, is published by Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y.

S. L. WHITLOCK.—Can you tell me where I can find the volume "Beauchampe, or, The Tragedy of Kentucky," written by W. G. Simms, once published as No. 705 of the John W. Lovell Company Library, Vesey Street, New York? I would like to get several volumes of that old library, if I could find them.

"Beauchampe" is out of print. The John W. Lovell Company is no longer in existence. Copies of the library volumes might be found in the store of some dealer in old books.

R. S. S.—Will you kindly tell me the value of a four-volume set of "National Portraits," published in 1846 by James B. Longacre, Philadelphia? The set is bound in red leather.

The set has fetched from $6 to $17 at auction.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

IDA S. FIERO.—In reply to the query of H. Walter, in your issue of Oct. 3, in relation to the inscription over the door of the hotel at the Grand Canyon of the Colorado in Arizona, would say that I asked this same question when in April, 1914, I stopped at the hotel and was told by some one, I think the young woman in charge of the art room, that it was a traveling man who thought out the beautiful lines.

LOUELLA D. EVERETT.—The verse beginning "And I, too, sing the song of all creation," quoted by Muriel Sichel in THE REVIEW of Oct. 3, is from the poem "The Teamster," by Herbert H. Bashford.

JAMES SHAND.—In answer to the query of your correspondent "E. S." in your issue of Sept. 12 regarding some lines quoted—not quite correctly—let me say that they are from Burns's "Lament for James, Earl of Glencairn," the last stanza of which reads as follows:

The bridegroom may forget the bride
He made a wedded wife yestre'en;
The monarch may forget the crown,
That on his head an hour hath been;
The mither may forget the bairn
She croons sae saftly on her knee;
But I'll remember thee, Glencairn,

APPEALS TO READERS

F. R. G.—Will some reader tell me the author of an old poem entitled "Basil Renaud," and furnish the latter part of the first verse, the first half of which runs thus:

The sun forsakes my dungeon walls,
Across the foss no shadow falls,
I hear no answer to my calls,
Basil Renaud!

M. S. S.—Can any of your readers tell me who is the author of this quotation:

God said I'm tired of kings.
I suffer them no more.

I found this quotation at the close of William Dean Howells's article, "The Archangelic Censorship," in The North American Review for October, 1914.

ESTHER TUTIN.—I would like to ask if any one can give me the name of the author and where I can find the poem in which these lines occur:

Even the snowflake lets a shadow fall
As to the earth it softly sinks to rest.
So may the sweetest, purest souls of all
Seem sometimes wrong to those who know them best.

JOHN H. COOK.—Can any of your readers tell me the name of the author of the poem, which I think relates to Alaska, in which a traveler and his dog are overcome by cold, and in which the traveler urges the dog on? Two of the lines go something like this:

Get on, you dog, get on!

J. G. H.—Can any of your readers give me the correct form of the quotation which starts as follows: "Lay ye, therefore, brick upon brick," or it may be, "Build ye, therefore, stone upon stone," and it concludes by warning against use of mortar between the stones or bricks, which would crumble?

J. J. KIERNAN.—Would like to obtain verse or poem of which the following is the title, or a line therefrom: "The saw sings the sweetest when it strikes the hardest knot." Where can I get the same?

VARIED ACTIVITIES OF AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS THIS SEASON

THE concluding novel in Arnold Bennett's "Clayhanger" trilogy, "These Twain," is promised for Nov. 6 by the George H. Doran Company. It will deal with the married life of Clayhanger and Hilda Lessways, showing the morass of little daily misunderstandings through which they had to struggle before they could reach the firm ground of mutual faith, tolerance, and understanding. There is further development in the book of other characters in the two preceding volumes, and the Five Towns region is carried through a slow rebellion against mid-Victorian ideas, manners, and customs. The story, however, is complete in itself and does not require for understanding and enjoyment knowledge of its predecessors in the trilogy.

On the same day the Dorans will have ready also "Old Judge Priest," by Irvin S. Cobb, a book of short stories scened in Kentucky, in which the chief character of Mr. Cobb's "Back Home" is again the centre of attraction, and "The Thirty-nine Steps," by John Buchan, a story of crime and mystery and the chase of a man by the London police through various parts of England and Scotland.

Frank R. Adams, whose rollicking story of "Five Fridays" was one of last Spring's novels, has written "Molly and I; or, The Silver Ring," another tale of madcap pranks, absurd situations, and comic complexities, which Small, Maynard & Co. have ready for immediate issue.

Little, Brown & Co. are publishing at once "The Stirrup Latch," by Sidney McCall, the story of an old Southern home in which a conflict is going on between early Victorian and ultra-modern ideals.

Alfred A. Knopf will publish shortly a translation by Thomas Seltzer from the Polish of a novel said to be the most important work of the greatest living Polish writer. It is "Homo Sapiens," by Stanislaw Przybyszewski—pronounced Pahee-be-sheffski—a story in which the hero is not even the most modern of the men of today, but rather the coming man, the man of day after tomorrow. Mr. Knopf has prepared a booklet on the work of this author which he will send free to any one who will write to him for it.

For early publication Henry Holt & Co. announce "Burkses Amy," by Julie M. Lippmann, in which Amy, instead of going to Europe for a Summer of diversion, stays with her father in New York and helps him in some east side work, which leads her into the paths of romance.

The Century Company has ready for immediate publication Jean Webster's "Dear Enemy," whose chief character was in "Daddy Long-Legs," although it is in no sense a sequel to that story.

Mary Johnston's "The Fortunes of Garin" is just published by Houghton Mifflin Company, who are bringing out at once also "Smugglers' Island," by Clarissa A. Kneeland, and "Two American Boys in the War Zone," by L. Worthington Green, both stories for young people.

"H. R.," by Edwin Lefevre, which the Harpers are bringing out at once, is an audacious satirical novel in which a bank clerk sets New York agog and makes his impress upon the nation. "Flashers Mead," by Compton Mackenzie, another immediate Harper publication, is the story of the love between a young English poet and a vicar's daughter and of the complications brought about by temperament.

Albert Bushnell Hart, Professor of the Science of Government in Harvard University, is the author of "The Monroe Doctrine: An Interpretation," which Little, Brown & Co. will publish at once. The aim of the author is to set forth what the Monroe Doctrine has meant at different times in our history, what it means at the present time, and what are the difficulties in the way of making it work under present world conditions. This house has ready, also "Democracy in the Making," by George W. Coleman and eighteen others, an account of what has been done during the last seven years at the Open Forum carried on in Boston at Ford Hall.

The Scribners announce for early publication "Men of the Old Stone Age," by Henry Fairfield Osborn, an account of what is known, or can be scientifically deduced from what is known, of the character and life of our earliest direct ancestors.

Early in November the Putnams will publish the initial volume of a series bearing the general title "The Conquest of Virginia." The author of the series, Conway Whittle Sams, makes the first volume, "The Forest Primeval," a sort of setting for the struggle whose story will be told in the volumes to follow. It will be based upon the writings of the explorers and early colonists of Virginia, and will describe the country as it was at that time and the lives, institutions, and customs of the Indians.

"The Letters of Washington Irving to Henry Brevoort, 1807-42," edited, with an introduction, by George S. Hellman, is ready for immediate issue by the Putnams, who are bringing out at once also "A Sketch of English Legal History," by Frederic W. Maitland and Francis C. Montague.

The Outing Publishing Company announces for publication this week "Wall Street and the Wilds," by A. W. Dimock, the life story of a man who has had many adventures in Wall Street and has also spent much time camping, hunting, and fishing.

Hamlin Garland has returned to New York for the Winter months. He is scheduled to deliver an address soon in Albany on "Farm and School Life on the Prairies."

Miss Mary Johnston has leased her home at Warm Springs, Va., and will spend the Winter in New York City.

Harry A. Franck has recently returned from four years of wandering adventure on foot in South America, and will now settle down to the arranging of his notes into a new volume of vagabond journeying.

Emile Verhaeren's "Belgium's Agony" appears frequently in public library lists of non-fiction books most in demand.

Howard V. Sutherland, for some time with Rand, McNally & Co. and author of several novels, has gone West for his health, and is in the meantime writing a boys' story of adventure in Alaska, where he spent many years.

Owen Wister's "The Pentecost of Calamity" is proving so popular that an edition a week has been necessary ever since it was published in August.

Marie C. Sadler's "Mamma's Angel Child in Toyland" is in process of being made into a comic opera. Miss Sadler is writing a second volume of similar stories.

The corrected proof sheets of Richard Pryce's new novel, "David Penstephan," of which Houghton Mifflin Company are the American publishers, were twice mailed to them by the author in England and twice went down on vessels that were submarined.

Robert Frost's volume of poems, "North of Boston," has been adopted as a text for required reading in English literature by the University of Minnesota. Its publishers, Henry Holt & Co., report the book to be selling better than any novel on their list for the last month.

While Algernon Blackwood was in New York, where he once arrived penniless after varied wanderings, he made a living for a time by posing for Gibson, Cox, and Zogbaum. He also worked on several New York newspapers and served as private secretary to James Speyer.

Kathleen Norris thinks that what is most needed for the solution of many present-day social problems is "a new race of mothers," who would "believe in simplicity and unpretentiousness and old-fashioned goodness."

The King of the Belgians recently told a Swiss journalist in the course of an interview that Emil Waxweiler's "Belgium Neutral and Loyal" is a book "such as I love, objective and frank. Its author is entitled to the most complete confidence; he has all mine."

Burton E. Stevenson's novel of the Belgian invasion, "Little Comrade," is running serially in a Copenhagen paper and is soon to appear in book form in Sweden, in Norway, and in Denmark.

The Princess Lazarovich-Hrebellanovich, by birth Eleanor Calhoun, an American, whose book of reminiscences, "Pleasures and Palaces," is a Fall publication, was responsible for securing the help of the Rockefeller Foundation for the relief work in Serbia last Summer. It was she who first laid the plight of the Serbians before the Foundation, and then, at the request of its officers, prepared a comprehensive statement of conditions and needs.

THE WEEK ON THE VARIOUS WAR FRONTS IN EUROPE

Serbs Meeting Advance of German and Austrian Invading Armies with Desperate Resistance---Bulgarians Pressing Onward Into Serbia Along Several Lines of Attack---Situation on Western and Eastern Battle Fronts Favorable to the Allies.

By a Military Expert.

THE week past has seen the Teuton-Bulgar campaign in full swing. The Teutons have followed the plan, indicated by their opening moves, of conducting a general offensive over the whole of the Northern Serbian front, but driving particularly from Belgrade and Semendria toward Velika Plana and from there to the Nish junction.

In this they have been able to advance but slowly, the Serbs fighting desperately as they retreat. The Teuton advance has reached a point not much more than ten miles inside the Serbian frontier—less than one mile a day since the Danube and the Save were crossed. The Serbs, however, are steadily yielding to the pressure and, if Bulgarian successes continue, must soon give way more rapidly until their mountain positions are reached.

The Bulgarian operations indicate a change from the plan that apparently they were going to follow. At the outset it seemed that they also were going to drive directly at Nish and, arriving there, either hold the junction, while their operations in the south were proceeding, until the Teutons were able to come down from the north and join them, or advance up the railroad in an effort to take the Serbians in the rear. The danger, however, of English and French assistance reaching the Serbians by way of the Saloniki-Nish railroad evidently made this road of the greatest immediate importance.

The Bulgarian main attack, therefore, was directed at Vranya, about sixty miles south of Nish, and at Vilandovo, twenty miles southwest of Strumitza, the two points where the railroad winds nearest to the Bulgarian border. Vranya is about twenty miles from the frontier, Vilandovo not more than five. Vilandovo was the first point at which Bulgaria struck. As if anticipating such action, the Allies struck in behind the Bulgarian troops at the fortified town of Strumitza. Thus threatened in flank and rear, the Bulgarians fell back, abandoned their move against Vilandovo, and began operations toward Vranya. In this they were more successful. The small Serbian Army, trying to defend such a long line, was stretched too thin, and the Allies were unable to get reinforcements so far up the railroad. The result was that the Bulgarians had little trouble in reaching the city and thereby cutting the railroad.

Meanwhile the originally planned move against Nish has not been entirely thrust aside, but has proceeded as scheduled, only the rate of advance has been much slower, due to the extremely mountainous nature of the country. As a part of this general operation there have been three attacks made, which are still being pushed, each of them along railroad lines running into the main Belgrade-Nish line from the east.

Beginning at the north and taking them in order, the first is against Zaiecar, a well-fortified town controling the approach of the railroad from the east that reaches the main line at Paratschin, about forty miles south of Velika Plana. As this latter is the nearest point to the German forces coming down from the north, Zaiecar may be considered the key to the junction with the Germans, which fact alone is sufficient to explain its importance to the general plan. Some twenty miles further south, about ten miles inside the Serbian frontier, is the town of Kniasyevac, which is reached from Bulgaria by a highway through the mountain pass of Kadiboga. This town is the second point of attack and is on the railroad which parallels the border and comes into Nish from the northeast. The third point is Pirot, on the Nish-Sofia road, about half way between these two cities and twelve miles inside the Serbian border. From Pirot there is also an excellent highway running west and connecting with the Nish-Saloniki road at Leskovatz, about the same distance from Nish—about thirty-five miles—as is Paratschin, the junction point of the road from Zaiecar.

From each of the three points mentioned, however, toward the railroad, is one continuous mountain belt. In many cases the line of advance is through deep gorges, in others over rocky mountain passes. Here, much more than at Vranya, where the country is almost open, the defending Serbs will have a great advantage and will cause the Bulgars no end of trouble. Their advance so far has been almost negligible and is sure to be slow unless the army which has taken Vranya succeeds in advancing up the railway and so flanks the Serbs out of position. In that case Nish would fall and the Serbs would have to retreat to the mountains in the vicinity of Krusevac, one of their greatest natural strongholds.

Further south, in the valley of the Briganitza River, the Bulgarians are driving against the Saloniki railroad from Ystib, just twenty-five miles west of Strumitza. This operation may prove the most serious to the Allies of any of those now in progress. The taking of Vranya, while it cuts the most direct route from Saloniki to the Serbian fronts, still leaves open a railroad which, though it branches off considerably to the west, nevertheless reaches not only Nish, but also the Nish-Belgrade road at several points north of Nish. This railroad leaves the Nish-Saloniki road at Uskub some distance north of Ystib.

If, therefore, advancing from Ystib, the Bulgarians were able to reach the railroad and cut it south of Uskub, neither the British nor the French would be able to get reinforcements to the Serbian front at all. Moreover, the character of the country in the two places is very different. At Vranya the railroad runs through a valley and is entirely controlled from the heights on either side. It is impossible, therefore, to extend a front for the purpose of a general occupation of this section. South of Uskub, nearer the Bulgarian border, the country is much more open, with only the foothills of the Balkan mountains to contend with. Here deployment of troops over a considerable front is entirely feasible and could readily result in the occupation of a considerable section of Southeastern Serbia.

As a result of this combination of movements, the situation of the Serbians seems desperate. After the long typhoid siege of the Winter, their forces are small in number and are faced by numbers several times greater. Their allies either cannot get to them at all or can reach them only by a wide detour through the western mountains, and even this route is threatened.

The Allies, in the meantime, have not as yet shown their hand, and no one can tell what they are going to do or how they are going about it. It is doubtful, indeed, if they have any hand to show. The whole Balkan situation with respect to the Allies seems for some reason shrouded in mystery. The Balkan puzzle seemed solved when Bulgaria entered the war, but, instead, this action only made it more difficult to find the solution.

Everything points to another blunder similar to the one committed in Belgium. In the case of Belgium, British reinforcements were promised to Belgium by a certain date, and the Belgians were requested to make every sacrifice in order to delay the invaders. At the last minute the promised troops were shifted south to France, and Belgium left to stem the tide alone. No reason was given; none has since been discovered why help was not sent to Belgium. But it was a stupid, inexcusable blunder, for which both British and French are now paying dearly with the lives of their soldiery.

Previous to the invasion of Serbia and the declaration of war by Bulgaria, the Allies made much of their readiness to assist the Serbs and of their ability to counteract the effect of Bulgaria's army in case Bulgaria should enter the war. They landed a number of troops at Saloniki, ostensibly for this purpose. But when the blow fell, Germany alone was prepared. It was no blunder on the part of British diplomacy that Bulgaria sided with the Teutons. The Allies could not give Bulgaria what she demanded even if the war should be decided in their favor. Germany could, and promised it. Moreover, the prestige of the German victories over Russia, empty as they were, and of the inability of the Allies in the west to do much more than hold the Germans in their trenches, naturally impressed Bulgaria with the idea that the German chance of ultimate victory was greater than that of the Allies.

Bulgaria's move, therefore, was not entirely unlooked for, and it should have been anticipated by the British home Government. With a stolidity and conceit quite characteristic, based apparently on the stupidity of German diplomacy rather than on the strength of Great Britain's own, the Home Office, if we may judge from what has not been done, has let the present situation fall on them as if it were entirely unexpected. It finds them unprepared to meet it.

Now all Britain, Government and press alike, seems to be affected with a sort of hysteria over the possible direful results that may follow. The British Cabinet is on the verge of disruption; the British Parliament is openly discussing the advisability of discontinuing the operations in the Dardanelles. It is obvious to those far away from local influence that the British judgment is warped by too great proximity to the trouble itself. To abandon the operations on Gallipoli might be a political blunder, in so far as it might affect Greece and Rumania and the sentiment in Russia. From a military standpoint, the Dardanelles movement was never anything more than a side issue, an incident entirely subsidiary to the main issue. If given up now it may mean a possible loss in prestige, but no loss in military strength.

If the Allies had forced the passage of the strait the war would have been shortened undoubtedly, but it would not have been ended. Whether successful or not, the landing of a force has accomplished a purpose which completely justifies it from a military standpoint. It has completely neutralized Turkey and has occupied her entire attention almost from the day she joined the central powers. The original plan was of course an egregious blunder. Only British conceit blinded the British Admiralty to a military fact which has been recognized by military men since navies have existed. Naval operations against land forces cannot be successfully carried on without co-operation of the military on land. Churchill's navy was not amphibious but, believing that because of its great strength and efficiency it could alone conquer the Dardanelles' defenses, force the passage of the strait and take Constantinople, it was sent on the most impossible manoeuvres which a navy had ever attempted. The result was a foregone conclusion.

The Turks were warned that Constantinople was to be an objective of the Allies weeks before a soldier was landed, they had all that time to prepare their defenses and bring up their supplies and the allied fleet lost some of its most powerful ships of war. When the chance had passed, the Allies realized the hopeless futility of the navy operating alone. This error, like the failure to send the promised help to Belgium has cost the British Army hundreds of thousands of men, and the British Army is still in front of the Achi Baba position at Krithia where it has been for months. But whether the result is success or failure, the movement has justified itself not only by offsetting Turkish combination with the Teutons but by influencing Russia in the days of Russia's adversity when the undercurrent of Russian opinion was that Britain was not doing her part, and by influencing the Balkan States.

But Great Britain is alarmed, needlessly and hysterically alarmed, over the Eastern situation, and, while in this condition, may make a still more serious blunder. The report is current in London that the Allies are going to force Greece to make a decision, either to war with the Allies or with the Teutons, just as Germany forced Belgium to decide, and this in spite of the fall of the Venizelos Cabinet, in spite not only of the personal friendship but of the family relationship which exists between the Kaiser and the King of Greece. This may prove effective in bringing the Greeks to Serbia's aid provided England is sufficiently close to the temper of the Greek people to know that they would revolt rather than take up arms against the Entente. And this England cannot know. The very fact that they are forced may change the temper of a people over night. Greece neutral is less dangerous than Greece hostile. Probably, however, before her loss of poise can result in irreparable damage British equilibrium will be restored and the Government will be able to see the situation in its true proportions. The simple fact is this: whichever way the fortunes of war may go, the decision will not be reached either on the Nile, on the Red Sea, or at the Golden Horn, but in France or in Russia.

On both the eastern and western fronts, the situation is not displeasing to the Entente's sympathizers. Particularly is this true of the east, where the Russian future was looked at in fear and trembling. But the Russians, except at Riga, are more than holding their own, giving blows somewhat harder than they are receiving, inflicting heavy punishment on the invaders and weekly capturing large numbers of prisoners. Just a month ago, the Germans, with plans carefully made and ready for excution, had the Russians apparently trapped in the triangle which has Vilna, Lida, and Moldeczno for its vertices. There seemed no escape, and yet when the trap was sprung, when the Vilna salient was crushed in, the Russians had escaped. This move having failed, the Germans then turned to Dvinsk, a point of considerable strategic importance because of the fact that it is the junction of the Vilna-Petrograd road with the road to Riga, and the Germans need the road to Riga as they need its continuation all the way south to Rovno.

Against Dvinsk were concentrated the forces that had been battling to trap the Russians in the Vilna salient, and in addition reinforcements were drawn from different parts of the line further south. From Sept. 25 to the latter part of last week the battle raged around the city. Then the Germans, after sacrificing an enormous number of men in the effort, found the task beyond their strength and admitted their defeat by turning again to the Riga sector where they had abandoned a similar offensive sometime before. It is against Riga that their efforts during this past week have been exerted. The main elements of the Riga situation were described at length several weeks ago in these columns. It will be necessary therefore only to refer to them briefly.

Riga is on the east bank and at the mouth of the Dvina River. From it three railroads radiate—one south to Mitau, paralleling a good dirt road, one southeast to Dvinsk, and one northeast to Petrograd. On the west bank of the Dvina, about sixty miles from Riga is the town of Friedrichstadt, constituting a bridgehead defending the crossing of the river. From Mitau a railroad runs due east joining the Riga-Vilna road at Jacobstadt. Between this road for a distance of forty miles there is a broad marsh belt varying in width from five to thirty miles, and between Riga and Fredrichstadt there is not a single road of any description running across this belt to the Vilna railroad. On the other side of this latter road there is also a complete absence of roads, the country being a hopeless tangle of hills, forests, and streams.

This is all there is to the position: The Germans hold Friedrichstadt—have held it for some time, and hold also a small section of the railroad, but have been able to make but little advance beyond this point. They are also advancing along the Mitau-Jacobstadt railroad and have reached the town of Gross Eckau, about twenty miles from Mitau. The object of this advance is to reach the first dirt road that runs across the marsh belt toward the Dvina River, reaching it at Sennen, another bridgehead town, thirty miles from Riga.

The Germans are reported to have an almost overwhelming force operating in this section. At least a quarter of a million men. Official reports of the movement are neither specific nor clear. Apparently, however, the Germans are advancing somewhat, but it does not seem that the situation is any nearer a solution than it was some months ago when the first threat against Riga was in process of execution.

Interesting developments seem to be under way in Galicia as well as in other parts of the front from Dvinsk south. In the present stage, however, any comment would be pure conjecture and the function of these articles is rather with things as they are than with things as they may be. A review of these sections of the front will therefore be deferred until next week when the situation has assumed a more tangible form.

Bedell Fashion Shop

In West Thirty-fourth Street
Opposite the Waldorf-Astoria

ARRIVALS are as frequent at the new Bedell Fashion Shop as they are at the Plaza, or the Ritz-Carlton, and quite as cosmopolitan. Whatever society has accepted during the past week as the proper exposition of the newest tendencies, you will find here Monday morning.

Tomorrow is no exception. It is the very height of the "suit season," and as the designers have had their preliminary skirmish, these newer productions may justly be regarded as the styles that have come to stay.

In the New Suit Salon

Lady Duff-Gordon has had her say about the correctness to be obtained and the economies secured in the Gallery of Suits and Coats, as well as in the Gown Salon.

This has been added to by the commendation of several of America's leading women of the stage, who are authorities on dress.

The very latest entries in fashion's lists will be found among the suits—with due attention to the increasing popularity of broadcloths, velvets and the English mixtures.

Many of the newer models show slightly plainer tailoring, with further development of the new silhouette—well fitted shoulders, long coats and the Russian skating skirts.

How Fashion and Opportunity Collaborate On Tomorrow's $25, $30 and $35 Suits

With ample license for surprise, in view of the values offered daily at this new Fashion Shop, to-morrow's offerings should cause a distinct sensation. If these suits were priced at $50 to $75, no apology would be necessary, for the styles are of that exclusive nature which usually demands a premium. At $25 to $35 they represent actual, intrinsic values, represented by richness of material and workmanship, on which fashion has collaborated without extra charge. Velvets, broadcloths, velours, velveteens, the smartest of smart mixtures—fur trimmed or plain—the authentic things in every respect.

The Growth of an Idea—Free Alterations

In this locality of exclusive shops, the new idea of "free alterations" has made a distinct impression. The very best class of customers, unaccustomed heretofore to this additional economy, are welcoming it. Bedell alterations are made by the highest grade fitters and tailors—the class of workmanship for which these same customers have paid top prices elsewhere.

PRICES OF PARIS CLOTHES NOW HIGHER THAN EVER

None of the New Fabrics Is Difficult to Obtain, Nor Are the Gowns Complicated, but Cost Continues to Soar—Most of the Fashions Not Yet Decided Upon.

THE dressmakers who went to Paris for the Autumn and Winter models are still complaining over the high price of all such merchandise. The French designers explained the rise in price, if not in values, by the excuse that fabrics were exceedingly difficult to get and clothes were turned out at more cost.

That does not sound plausible, but no protests on the part of our buyers had any influence on the conditions; it was pay that price or leave the gowns, and no buyer could afford to do the latter after having risked his life to cross the ocean.

Everyone knows that the sewing women of Paris have been the object of almost unlimited charity from America; their plight was brought to the attention of those who had money to give by the various papers or concerns who had intimate dealings with this class of workers in France, and it is only natural to suppose that the sewing people there reaped quite a little harvest from the wild epidemic of fashion shows that swept our continent since last October.

There were several reasons for giving these shows, not all of which was charity, unless it was the kind that begins at home; but whatever the motive of self-aggrandizement or advertisement, the fact remains that America liberally supported the class in Paris that makes the models for the States.

Money Across the Sea.

One magazine here had turned over $20,000 in a few weeks last Winter and that was only one draft resulting from two entertainments; multiply this by the hundreds and you will form some idea of what went on across the seas. Now, judging from this constant performance the last twelve months, one would think that the midinettes, the embroiderers, the cutters and fitters, would have been enchanted to get work for three months at their regular wages and that the mills which have so much material stored away, and the shops with thousands of yards of materials on their shelves since last September, would have sold the stock out at half price, if necessary.

Instead of that, everything was raised in price. The buyers paid more for a gown made during this slack time of work than they did in the height of splendor in Paris, all on the excuse that workers and materials were to be paid more.

It makes little differece to the average American that Paris saw her opportunity to reap a harvest during the one-half season in order that she might not starve for three months: every country would do the same with the same opportunity, but what will happen to us if the already exorbitant prices for first-class clothes are raised?

Will we be able to have more than one frock? Won't one hat be compelled to do duty for all occasions? Won't the expensive dressmakers defeat their own aim, for American women are not compelled to buy as were the American buyers in Paris who went there for that purpose, and that only.

The safety spot lies in the department stores and the small simply priced specialty shops which are rising up like mushrooms. They produce copies of any French costume in less expensive fabrics at one-fifth the price, sometimes less.

Interesting Situation in Clothes.

The Autumn, which promised to be quite dull in the clothes department, struck a lively tune from the opening day, and anger, irritation, hope, discouragement followed each other in rapid succession among those whose business it is to supply the nation with its seasonable wearing apparel.

Wall Street produced the first series of thrills. The overnight fortunes made there sounded like the old days to those who have luxuries to sell, such as Paris gowns and automobiles, square sapphires and Fragonards. Some one had rubbed Aladdin's lamp and the glow promised to bring the warmth of hope in the hearts of those who had been cast down for three years.

No more did people gather around and deplore the days when women ordered twelve gowns at $350 apiece, and needed furs and jewels for each costume; they rubbed their hands and said among themselves with glee that if one man made a million in a week in Wall Street, and brokers were fainting from overwork, and men who couldn't send their boys to school last Winter were now able to give them motor cars and suites in dormitories at expensive colleges, something out of this sudden affluence would come their way.

All through the dressmaking world there was an air of great expectation. A tiny bit of the old haughty manner came back, the manner that was acquired through dealing with multimillionaires, the manner that was dampened and made limp by reverses of most of the rich in the last three years.

The air of anxiety that these brows had worn was smoothed into one of mastery. The past was to return. The coffers were to be full again. As one Fifth Avenue dressmaker of Continental renown put it: "Wall Street is our barometer. When speculation is rampant and quotations soaring, when the ticker is jumping up, up, up, then our sewing machines hum, the line of motors lengthens before our doors, we buy a better car for ourselves, and the receiving teller at the bank smiles at our bookkeepers."

The epoch outlined was on the eve of returning when October dawned. Then came the tailors' strike. They, too, saw prosperity breaking in the sky, and, not waiting for it, they antedated it by making demands for an increase, and then walked out in several large and arguing bodies.

How Women's Clothes Were Held.

So it happened that, at the very first flush of pink prosperity in the gray skies of depression, the dressmakers and shops were left without workers. Orders had passed expectation. Prices were going up, of course, as the dressmakers had intended they should do with the excuse of Paris that clothes must cost more on account of the scarcity of workers and fabrics, the larger amount of materials each garment needed, and the tax on human life occasioning by going through the war zone for the Paris models.

Then everything was left cold and dead by the strike. No one remained to finish a garment that was ordered. Instead of the motor cars increasing before the doors on Fifth Avenue, there was an increasing line of policemen, keeping in line groups of strikers. Women and men who had risked lives and gambled with thousands of dollars on the chance of presenting a vast variety of apparel to the American woman were wringing their hands and wondering how they were going to placate all those irritated and angry women who had ordered warm clothes for cold weather and couldn't get them.

The gray skies returned. The chance of making "a killing," as they express it, was dwindling away. It looked as though the hand of destiny was laid at their throats.

This was the condition in New York where the American fashions are set. Women were furious, to put it strongly. The shops reaped the benefit in selling ready-to-wear clothes which were excellent copies of all the new French clothes, the wider facilities of the large organizations enabling them to copy imports in half the time that the small and exclusive houses could do it.

Even this latter fact was an added thorn in the flesh of the dressmakers, for what use was it to provide expensive copies of French gowns if the same thing could be found by their clientele at half the price in large shops. They knew full well what every one should know that it is the perfection of the fit that makes or mars a good gown, and that it is not possible to get this in a frock that was made for the majority.

Maybe the dawn of wealth is only delayed, however, and we shall yet see a new and amazing condition crystallize in American affairs; also, the season and the clothes for it coming together. Now we are so forehanded that we wear straw hats with the first snow and furs with the first heat. We evidently like this piquant contrast between the thermometer and the fashions. We must like it or it would not have been possible for women to have gone about on days of record September heat in sealskin collars and muffs.

Fashions Still Swing To and Fro.

There is no settlement of the fashion question yet. Happily, the various styles which were brought over for our selection are swinging from one silhouette to another like a pendulum. There is reason to be happy about it, because it spells a certain degree of safety for the woman who knows what she wants and can find it in the heterogeneous assortment that is offered.

Some of the best American designers are insisting on the moderately narrow skirt, but the skirt of last Autumn is definitely done for and must be shelved. The wide tunic over the skimpy underskirt belongs to a day that is done. The coats of last Autumn are not as hopeless as the skirts and bodices, but possibly it is easier to get a new suit than alter an old skirt.

However, no one can lay a finger on any one fashion and say it is the ruling one. There seems still to be uncertainty as regards the best fashion to choose for an established Winter style.

The cuirass bodice is one of the revived fashions that women greet with approval. It saves one the need of worry about the waistline. No matter what the new corsets are unable to do to flesh that has hardened into stubbornness, the mediaeval bodice, made of any cloth, hides a thick line and leaves the onlooker ignorant of the size of the waist beneath.

The metal cloth is preferred by Jenny for these bodices and she uses them over voluminous skirts tulle or lace. Sometimes the lace is of metal over a taffeta foundation, and the bodice is of heavily brocaded satin or velvet. Blue predominates as a color. Black is rarely used in this kind of a frock, although Premet has sent over a model with a white tulle skirt embroidered in rhinestones that has a bodice of black plush. This has straight lines at the side and the mediaeval décolletage, but it does not extend as low on the hips as most of these bodices do.

Doeuillet has sent over a remarkably good looking gown which has a pink velvet skirt with a train and a straight cuirass of colored crystals closely studded on net. There are no sleeves, merely shoulder straps. This bodice may have been suggested by one worn by the famous dancer, Otero, in Paris. She had asked her maid to make her a jeweled cuirass in order to display at one time all the gems that had been given her by various admirers.

This Doeuillet gown is too brilliant for the average woman and occasion; it must be worn by one who has enough personality to carry it off and to an occasion that is worthy of so much glitter.

The woman who wants to incorporate this kind of gown into her everyday wardrobe will find that black velvet and lace can be combined into an admirable afternoon frock, and broadcloth and velveteen can be used for a street frock.

TASSELS AND FUR BUTTONS.

DANCING FROCK BY PREMET.
Bodice of black plush and tulle skirt embroidered in beads and brilliants.

Variations on the High Collar.

The epidemic of coachman's collars which came into fashion with the high crown postilion hat have been so commonly worn that a large number of women have insisted that furriers and dressmakers should invent something else. The consequence is that all kinds of chin-enveloping collars have made their appearance.

Georgette has a wonderfully successful suit of king's blue velvet with a partly pleated skirt over which is a knee-length coat, owing its distinction to an exaggerated version of the high turnover collar that we have borrowed from the costumery of men during the French and the American revolutions.

Nearly all the cuffs used on these coats are large enough to serve as a muff, and it is quite the fashion now for women to slip their hands into their sleeves, Chinese fashion.

On this blue velvet model the cuffs and collar are of silver fox, but it has been copied for everyday use in rough homespun with collar and cuffs of lynx.

Bernard has projected a popular suit into the Autumn costumery which is made of black velvet with white fox collar and cuffs. The skirt is moderately narrow, the coat extravagantly full from the waist down. The collar is the chief feature of the coat. It is high enough to reach the hat in the back and deep enough to cover the shoulder at sides and back and reach to the one huge button that marks the waistline.

This collar is significant because it marks a new era in neckwear; each week the collar to a coat assumes the proportion of a cape; it stands well away from the neck and is strongly reminiscent of the end of the eighteenth century. This is a good point to watch well. It is bound to develop.

FASHION'S FADS AND FOIBLES

WHITE crêpe de chine blouse of the newest cut shows eyelet embroidery, quite like that worked on a Madeira tea napkin, worked in white silk on sleeves and front.

One of the new blouses is made of plaid taffeta, with straps and pockets of heavy blue serge, trimmed with buttons.

Plaid ribbons, in bright colors, are shown in the shops. They are used for trimming hats, and frocks as well.

A pretty belt is made of white kid with strips of colored silk drawn through slits in the kid to make a plaid.

Tiny gilt buttons are used for trimming blouses of chiffon and also of fine colored linen.

Wide stripes, even wider than awning width, in silk are made into dresses diagonally, both sleeves running diagonally in the same direction and skirt and bodice made on the same basis.

Beads play an important part in hat trimming. On one hat they are embroidered on in the shape of a lizard—beads of a bronze-green shade.

A big black velvet hat, tilted at just the right angle, trimmed with a single pink rose, is decidedly smart.

A blouse of black chiffon is made with a V-line in front, but with a band of fur fastened about the throat, and above the fur band stiffened points of bright green satin.

White chinchilla coats are worn on cold days in the mountains and they are decidedly smart. Some of them have wide fur hems, in white, and some are trimmed with wide white silk braid.

WEDDING BELLS RING FOR AUTUMNAL BRIDES

Rush of Fall Weddings to Begin This Week ---Dazzling Array of New Winter Fashions Promised---Hallowe'en Festivities for Younger Set---Debutantes Plan Gay Season

THE late Autumnal weddings will begin with a rush this week and continue well through November with a dazzling array of new Winter fashions. The few weddings in town during the last fortnight have been mildly reminiscent of Summer in garb and fashion owing to the warm weather.

The majority of weddings are being picturesquely staged this season so far, and the colors in vogue tend to lighten in contrast the sombre cathedral-like interiors of the big churches. Mauve, orchid, and yellow seem to predominate, with touches of brilliant blue and shaded pink, while the display of gold and silver slippers, with hose to match, serve to embellish the frocks, mostly old-time in design. The moonstone and the jade are entering into the scheme of bridal adornment.

Those planning for large weddings in the Fifth Avenue and churches near by are being confronted with the traffic problem. The avenue is so congested during the afternoon, when the majority of fashionable weddings take place, that it is almost impossible to start the ceremonies at the given time. The guests keep coming in droves up to the very last minute owing to slow progress in the traffic. At St. Bartholomew's Church, in Madison Avenue, the great bronze doors are closed and locked the moment the bridal procession starts up the nave, which keeps the vestibule free from confusion, and those who arrive late, be it cousin or aunt, must wait outside or gain admittance at the side door.

The advisability of setting the hour and then arranging for the ceremony fifteen minutes later is being considered by some of the future brides, who are keen on punctuality. With the ever-increasing traffic on the avenue, the main artery in the social zone, people find that to arrive any place at a given time they must allow themselves a half hour leeway during the day time, even in the radius of two miles. Fortunately, the traffic thins out before the dinner hour.

SOCIETY will pay tribute to several notable brides before the middle of November. Miss Marie Tailer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Tailer, who is to marry S. Bryce Wing on Wednesday, Nov. 3, is one of the beauties of the fashionable set, and her marriage will be of widespread interest. Miss Tailer is probably one of the "most photographed" girls in society, as she is always sought out by the camera squad at the various outdoor events, whether at Newport or on Long Island. After she emerged from the period of mourning for her grandfather, she and Mr. Wing attended most of the outdoor exhibitions and races this Summer, and they will doubtless continue to be ardent devotees of athletics and sports. Mr. Wing is a member of the Piping Rock and New York Athletic Clubs.

The wedding ceremony is to be celebrated in St. James's Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street, and will be followed by a small reception at the home of the bride's parents, 16 East Seventy-second Street. The bride will be attended by the Misses Louise Trevor and Adelaide Flint of this city and Louisa Livingston of Albany. L. Stuart Wing, Jr., is to be his brother's best man. His ushers will be Harvey S. Ladew, John D. Wing 2d, Tailer Townsend, Archibald Sterling, Arthur R. Jones, Reginald L. Whitman, James S. Nagel, and N. E. C. Rutter. Mr. Wing is to give his farewell bachelor dinner at Sherry's on Tuesday.

Another November bride will be Miss Ellen Yuille, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Yuille of Bronxville, and William J. Sturgis of New York, son of the Rev. Joseph R. Sturgis of Virginia, whose wedding will be solemnized on Wednesday, Nov. 17, in St. Mary's Church, Scarborough, N. Y.

Miss Yuille will be the third of the bridal attendants at the Duke-Biddle wedding in Philadelphia to become a bride. Miss Hope Truxton Beale, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Beale, will be the second, her marriage to Oliver Eaton Cromwell, son of Mrs. Edward, T. Stotesbury by her first husband, being fixed for Nov. 3 in St. James's Church, Philadelphia. Miss Mary Duke was the first to wed.

Miss Yuille will have Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., who was Miss Mary Duke, as her matron of honor, and Miss Melissa Yuille will be the maid of honor.

After the church ceremony a reception will be held at the Sleepy Hollow Country Club.

Miss Cecile Tesson Thayer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin B. Thayer of 46 East Seventy-ninth Street, and Douglas Gibbons, son of Mrs. John F. Gibbons of 341 Madison Avenue, are to be married on Thursday at the Thayer country home in Lawrence, L. I.

Miss Thayer, whose engagement was announced last July, has chosen as her attendants her sisters, Miss Marie R. Thayer, who was a débutante last Winter, and Miss Alice R. Thayer, who has not yet been presented to society. Lee Gibbons is to act as best man for his brother. There are to be no ushers.

About 300 guests have been invited to the reception. Mr. Gibbons gave his bachelor dinner on Monday at the Union Club. After returning from their bridal trip the couple will live at 4 West Fifty-third Street.

THE first wedding of the week will be that of Miss Helen Judson, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry I. Judson, and G. Elton Parks, which is to take place in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, the Rev. Herbert Shipman officiating.

Miss Judson, a sister of Mrs. Francis Burton Harrison, will have no attendants other than Miss Nancy Heckscher, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Maurice Heckscher, who will serve as flower girl.

W. Ledyard Mitchell is to be the best man. The ushers will include James Cox Brady, G. Maurice Heckscher, Edward W. Clucas, Arthur P. McKinstry, Gordon W. Abbott, D. Raymond Noyes, all of this city; Fayette Brown of Cleveland, Justice Wilson of Toledo, George S. Munson of Philadelphia, and David Boies of Scranton.

An important wedding on Wednesday will be celebrated in St. Bartholomew's Church, at 4.30 o'clock, when Miss Diantha Fitch, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Allan Fitch, will become the bride of Connor Lawrence, son of Frank R. Lawrence of 534 Madison Avenue. A reception is to be held after the church ceremony at the Fitch town house, 38 West Fifty-sixth Street.

The maids of honor will be the Misses Marion and Katherine Fitch, and the bridesmaids will include the Misses Dorothy E. Brown, Jean Robb Stewart, Katharine Pollard Noble, Ella Floyd-Jones Carpender, Mildred Holmes, and Harriet R. Geyelin of Philadelphia. Eva Lawrence Taylor is to be the flower girl.

Mr. Lawrence has chosen his brother, Frank Lawrence, as his best man. His ushers will include Herbert Reed Lawrence, David H. Taylor, Benjamin Harrison McKee, Henry S. Durand, Edwin B. Dickinson, Raymond J. Schweizer, Horace Dorsay Newson, and Ronald M. Ferry.

Mr. Lawrence and his bride are to reside at 114 East Eighty-fourth Street on returning from their bridal journey.

On Thursday, besides the Gibbons-Thayer nuptials, will be celebrated the wedding of Miss Dorothy Whiteside Hurry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Hurry of 242 Lexington Avenue, and Robert Beaver Smith of Brooklyn in the Church of the Epiphany. A reception will follow at the home of the bride. The couple will make their home at 118 East Fifty-fourth Street.

A large wedding on Saturday, in All Angels' Church, will be that of Miss Eleanor Bartlett, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Pomeroy Bartlett, and Carter Phelps. Many out-of-town folks will make up the bridal attendants, including the nine ushers and best man, who were all members of Mr. Phelps's class at Yale University, class of '14. Geoffrey Tower, son of Charlemagne Tower of Philadelphia, is to be one of the ushers. Mr. Phelps is a grandson of the late Oliver S. Phelps, the New York banker.

THE celebration of Hallowe'en will add to the picturesque gayeties of the week-end, although the eve of All Saints' Day falls on Sunday. The country colonists will make most of the games and sports peculiar to the evening. The week will mark the mid-Autumnal season at Tuxedo, where the Autumn ball is to be held on Friday night, with numerous entertainments among the cottagers for the younger set. The program for the week will include some charitable entertainments in aid of the Tuxedo Hospital.

In town, society will rally at the bazaar and fashion revue, to be held at the Ritz-Carlton on Thursday and Friday, for the benefit of the war sufferers. The entertainment is being held under the direction of Miss Anne Morgan, Chairman of the Vacation War Relief Committee, and Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin, Chairman of the French War Emergency Fund.

It has been announced that the fashion fête, which was to have been held at the Ritz the week of Nov. 7, has been postponed until after the horse show.

Another fortnight and the only great indoor Horse Show in the world this year will open in Madison Square Garden. When the exhibition starts on Nov. 6 society will find the interior of the Garden decorated as never before. Mrs. E. T. Stotesbury, wife of the new President of the National Horse Show Association, is taking a hand in the decorative scheme, and no expense will be spared to make it beautiful. There are to be mirror lakes and real fountains, and flowers and growing plants are to be used in great profusion. Gold and crimson will enter into the color scheme, and the effect of the old English in treatment, even to a replica of a real thatched roof cottage, will be faithfully carried out.

Mrs. Stotesbury has been spending considerable time in town of late assisting in the decorative details. Society expects the smart Philadelphians to patronize the show this season more than ever before. Being national in scope this year, there is no reason why it should not outrival the famous Olympia show in London, which has been suspended until after the war.

Plans are gradually accumulating for the season's dances. Miss Winifred Chisolm has organized a new series of subscription dances, to be known as the Thursday Seniors, and the first will be held on Dec. 6 at Sherry's. The first of the dances of the St. Christopher League is to take place on Dec. 10 at the Plaza. On Nov. 12 a subscription dance is to be held at the Baltusrol Golf Club. The subscribers are to number 100. The patronesses include Mrs. S. Harold Freeman, Mrs. Harold W. Hack, Mrs. George H. Hull, Jr., Mrs. Victor Mapes, Mrs. Stephen P. Nash, Mrs. José V. Onativia, Jr., Mrs. James R. Strong, Mrs. Charles J. Symington, Mrs. Nathaniel Tyler, Jr., and Mrs. H. Le Roy Whitney.

The first of the series of six concerts given by the Friends of Music will be held at the Ritz-Carlton on Nov. 14. Mrs. J. F. D. Lanier is assisting in arranging the program. A patriotic dance to celebrate the Battle of White Plains will be held at the Gedney Farms Hotel on Thursday night.

MANY of the débutantes will be seen about informally before the program of entertainments arranged specifically for them commences. Some of them will scintillate this week at the Tuxedo ball. Altogether it will be a long season for the buds, four months, after things start going, until Lent. While the President has designated Nov. 25 as Thanksgiving Day, society has selected Nov. 24 as the beginning of débutante activities. Miss Helen D. Geer, daughter of Mrs. Walter Geer, is to be presented on the afternoon of the 24th at her mother's home in West Seventy-second Street, the reception to be followed by a dance in the evening. Miss Muriel Lorillard Ronalds Conkling will make her début at a tea dance to be given by her mother, Mrs. Alfred R. Conkling, at Sherry's the end of November. Miss Conkling is the granddaughter of the late Eastman Johnson, the artist, and a grandniece of Roscoe Conkling.

Many entertainments are being planned for Miss Elizabeth Stuyvesant Howard, daughter of Mrs. T. H. Howard. Miss Howard is a direct descendant on the paternal side of Peter Stuyvesant. Miss Adeline Hatch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Hatch of 55 East Sixty-fifth Street, is among the season's débutantes. Mrs. Edward Winslow Packard of the Hotel Gotham will introduce her daughter, Miss Muriel Oakes, at a tea dance at Sherry's on Dec. 3. Miss Ethel Lamarche, daughter of Mrs. Paul E. Lamarche, who is still at Laurel Cliff, Locust, N. J., is to be presented this season.

Mrs. George B. de Forest and Mrs. Edward S. Knapp will chaperone a luncheon for their débutante niece, Miss Kate Wyman Griffin, to be given at Sherry's on Thursday, Dec. 9. Miss Griffin is a daughter of Dr. Henry A. Griffin of 91 Park Avenue. Mrs. Joseph Clendenin will give a reception for her daughter, Miss Genevieve Clendenin, on Saturday afternoon next, at Kirkhills, Ardsley-on-Hudson. Miss Clendenin was among those who received last week at the débutante reception given by Mrs. Frederic Clark Sayles for her daughter, Miss Helen Kingman Sayles, at Irvington.

Mrs. Lawrence Greer is to give a tea dance at the new Colony Club on Dec. 22, for her daughter, Miss Dorothy Greer, to be followed by a dinner and theatre party for the receiving party and additional guests. Mrs. Allan Marquand will introduce her daughter, Miss Eleanor Marquand, on Nov. 10, at Guernsey Hall, her place in Princeton, N. J. Later in the season Mrs. Marquand is to give a dance in town for the débutante.

On Dec. 1, Mrs. John Case Phelps will give a dance at the Ritz-Carlton for Miss Charlotte Platt, the débutante daughter of Mrs. Henry Barstow Platt of 535 Park Avenue. Mrs. Samuel Riker, Jr., of 206 Madison Avenue, will introduce her daughter, Miss Frances T. Riker, and Miss Constance Chappell, at a reception, to be held on Saturday, Dec. 11. A dance for the two débutantes will also be given at the new Colony Club on Tuesday evening, Jan. 11. Mrs. Frederic C. de Veau will give a dinner at Sherry's on Dec. 23, for her daughter, Miss Anstiss de Veau, followed by a theatre party.

SOCIETY is still on the go, and many are at the Virginia mountain resorts. By the time the Horse Show opens the majority of town houses will have been opened. The few who are going abroad, armed with passports, are bent on some charitable errand. Mrs. Edward C. Post is sailing soon with a complement of nurses, to assist in the French hospitals. Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt sailed today for Paris, where Mrs. Vanderbilt will resume her work at the American Ambulance Hospital, where she left off when she returned to this side last April. Mr. Vanderbilt still has many valuable horses at his stable near Paris.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor plans to arrive here this week from Bar Harbor, opening her town house at 840 Fifth Avenue. Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt will likely take possession of her new home at 1,021 Park Avenue early next month.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Jones (Miss Anna Livingston-Short) will be christened today in St. John's Church, Cold Spring Harbor, L. I. The child is to be named Anna Livingston.

It is announced that the dates of the Three Sherry Dances for this season are Dec. 3 and 30 and Jan. 21. The committee includes Mrs. Edward S. Knapp, Mrs. J. Herbert Johnson, and Mrs. B. Ogden Chisolm.

MISS BOWER, SUFFRAGE BUGLER

ANY one who wonders where Miss Rose Bower, who is bugling for the suffragists in New York just now and making speeches as well, got all the lung power to bring out those full, clear notes should know that she is a ranchwoman from South Dakota. She lives in the foothills of the Black Hills, and for the ranch house proper her family went up into the Black Hills and brought down great logs to make it warm and snug and tight. The soft cottonwood growing on the banks of the streams was good enough to make the other buildings.

You don't take pianos very far when there are no railroads, so Miss Rose's brothers, who had learned different brass instruments at the university, taught the other members of the family and soon they had a brass band with the family as players, seven of them all told. They had concerts every evening and the neighbors came from miles around to hear them and they played at all the "occasions" when something especially festive was needed. When the Northwestern Railroad made its way into the Black Hills they played for the glorious occasion with Miss Rose Bower as the cornetist.

She taught school and worked for suffrage in between the days on the ranch. The whole family, one after the other, took up claims and now Miss Rose, with a few acres she is hiring, has a neat little patch of more than 2,000 acres that she is running herself.

She is working extra hard to get the men of the campaign States here in the East to give the vote to their women, for, while her clear notes on the cornet ring out "Annie Laurie," "Tipperary," and "How Can I Bear to Leave Thee?" she is getting very anxious to return to her ranch in time for the running of the cattle. In the meantime small nephews and nieces are keeping her posted as to the news and trazedies of ranch life. There is Nannie, a pet calf, for instance, who has disappeared. Here is what a small nephew writes:

"Dear Aunt Rose: I spent two afternoons hunting for little Nannie, and we think the Indians have taken her. Mother and I went riding one afternoon and found a new little calf and six or seven new unbranded calves. We have got a new bridle for Peggie, (the pony.) I have got some more new little rabbits. Your loving nephew, JUSTIN."

That shows the important things there are to call a ranch woman cornetist home, and Justin has drawn on his letter a sad picture of Aunt Rose. It shows a stiff female with big tears rolling down her face; there is a badge, "Votes for Women," on her breast, and from her lips come the words: "Little Nannie is dead! Boo-hoo! Boo-hoo!"

The same nephew writes again: "We branded some calves the other morning, and I carmarked three of them. It is some job." The children have trained the pony to "lead," and there are pictures: "Breaking Our First Bronk."

"It isn't all fun," says Miss Bower, "and it is like women in other industries—they have a harder time than the men. When they are in factories and shops and offices they have to go home at night and do their mending and perhaps their laundry work and any number of other small things that take time and strength, and on the ranch they have to look after the housework and cooking, and the milk and chickens. Some of the ranch people would rather take their coffee black than bother with cows.

"We have our good cream and milk and I miss it here, and it helps with the table, for on a ranch you don't have a great variety. There may be a few vegetables and there may be none at all, and if the rancher doesn't have milk or chickens there will be times when there won't be much to eat in the house. We depend largely upon salt meat, and bacon is our great standby. One thing that we do have is good home-made bread. All the daughters in our family learned to make it and we are famous for it. Then with cereals, bacon, chickens, eggs, and potatoes we get along. We don't have much canned stuff. When we go to town we get fresh meat. Fried chicken, potatoes and gravy, and buffalo berry pie we consider a dinner good enough for anybody. Buffalo berries—oh, those are red berries that grow on high bushes and we shake them off. Then there are choke cherries, and we used to go off on trips for grapes and plums to preserve for Winter use. Sometimes we have watermelons.

"Oh, a ranch is all right; it is a good investment, and perhaps you like it best when you can get away and think of it."

However, Miss Bower is pretty anxious to get back and sound her cornet over those hills of whose beauties she has so much to say, to "rur" the cattle and see if little "Nannie" really is dead.

REGAL

Foot Comfort Week

Beginning To-morrow, Monday 25th

IN fitting twenty million feet, we have discovered that there are thousands who have foot trouble and don't know how to secure relief.

Hundreds of men and women needlessly suffer every day from tired aching feet, corns, bunions, cramped toes, callouses, with weak, fallen or broken down arches—

Hundreds who complain of body weariness, fatigue, aches and pains far removed from their feet, but caused by foot ailments—

Hundreds who are unable to wear shoes with comfort—who complain that shoes soon lose their shape or are distorted by bunions, enlarged joints, turning heels and flat foot—

An exhaustive investigation of this subject revealed the fact that the annoyance, discomfort and pain caused by weak or tender feet, could be immediately relieved and the cause removed by Dr. Scholl's fifty-four simple, corrective appliances and scientific devices, which we have installed in all Regal Foot Comfort Service Departments.

Free Examination and Advice To All Foot Sufferers

During Foot Comfort Week and permanently thereafter, an expert foot specialist will be in attendance at each Regal Store to make examination and give free advice on all foot troubles.

We formerly sold arch supports without individual fitting—the same as other shoe dealers and druggists do today, and we formerly made shoes with arch supports built in, which we have also discontinued, because the elevation of the arch or instep is different in every person's foot and frequently in the same pair of feet.

But today every arch support, appliance and device sold in a Regal Store is fitted and scientifically adjusted to the individual person. Salesmen in each Regal Store have had a special course of instruction on the anatomy of the foot and are thoroughly qualified to detect abnormal conditions and suggest the proper corrective device, and fit it to the foot and shoe, to give relief and perfect foot comfort.

During Foot Comfort Week, our trained salesmen will work under the personal direction of the recognized orthopedic authority, Dr. Wm. M. Scholl and his corps of foot specialists, and make examination and give free advice on any foot trouble.

We extend a cordial invitation to any one with foot trouble of any sort to take advantage of this opportunity, to consult without cost or obligation to purchase.

DEFENDS CONSERVATION ARTICLE IN NEW CONSTITUTION

Hon. Louis Marshall, Member of Conservation Committee at the Constitutional Convention, Replies to Critic Who Alleges That the Article Was Drafted for the Benefit of Special Interests.

By Louis Marshall,
Member of Conservation Committee, Constitutional Convention of 1915.

AN astounding publication addressed "To the Sportsmen and Voters of the State," bearing the signature of George A. Lawyer of the New York State Fish, Game and Forest League, with headquarters at Watertown, N. Y., has been industriously circulated throughout the State, evidently at great expense. It bears the startling headlines, "Vote Against the Constitution!" "Preserve the Adirondacks!" "Shall the Work of a Lifetime Be Destroyed?" In substance it charges that the conservation article was inserted into the new Constitution for the benefit of the lumber and water-power interests, and is intended to subject the State Forest Preserve to their tender mercies. The circular ends with an appeal for money and an admonition to sound the battlecry against the Constitution.

To those who know the history of the conservation article, who participated in writing it into the proposed Constitution, and who have read the debates of the convention, this is the most extraordinary exhibition of malicious misrepresentation and of falsification of facts that it is possible to conceive.

The conservation article was passed by a vote of 121 of the delegates for and only 11 against it, there being but one Democratic vote in the negative. The committee which framed it included in its membership Charles N. Dow, for many years an active member of the Niagara Commission; George Clinton of Buffalo, one of its most honored and beloved citizens; President Rhees of Rochester University; Professor O. N. Landreth of Union University; Hon. Morgan J. O'Brien, Arthur J. Baldwin, who had acted as the counsel for the legislative committee which a few years ago concluded a thorough investigation of the State water supply; Senators Blauvelt and Saxe, Edward N. Smith, prominent at the bar and in the civic affairs of Watertown; James S. Whipple and H. Le Roy Austin, both of whom had served as State Forest Commissioners; William P. Bannister, a leading architect of Brooklyn; Timothy A. Leary, a lawyer of recognized integrity, and W. Barlow Dunlap, one of the leading citizens of Amsterdam. There were but two members of the committee who were avowedly interested in lumbering: Messrs. Meigs and Angell; but none of the other members of the committee, of whom I was one, was either directly or indirectly interested in that industry, and none of them had any other purpose to subserve than that of furthering the public interest in the conservation of the natural resources of the State.

Every organization in the State that was concerned in the subject was given abundant opportunity to be heard before the committee. Mr. Lawyer did not appear. Much testimony was taken from scientists, public officials, educators, and sportsmen, and from those of practical experience. Men of national reputation advised the committee, and it deliberated for months upon the adoption of the best methods for protecting the public interests. It was recognized that in the subject of conservation was included not only the preservation of the forests, but that of husbanding the waters of the State for purposes of navigation, municipal water supply, and agriculture, and its fish and game—all being intimately interrelated. It was believed that these great objects had been materially advanced by the action of the convention. Yet it is now vociferously and vehemently proclaimed, regardless of the implied reflection on the integrity of the members of the convention, that the proposed amendment was in fact intended to enable the lumbermen to seise and destroy the forests for their own advantage. How this is possible, in view of the prohibitory language of Section 2 of the article, is not indicated. Bald assertion is deemed more important than a reference to the language of the Constitution. It expressly declares:

> The lands of the State, now owned or hereafter acquired, constituting the forest preserve as now fixed by law, shall be forever kept as wild forest lands. They shall not be leased, sold, or exchanged, or be taken by any corporation, public or private, nor shall the trees and timber thereon be sold, removed, or destroyed.

This is a re-enactment of the provision inserted in the Constitution of 1894, strengthened, however, by solving the doubt hitherto existing as to the comprehensiveness of the prohibition against the sale, removal, or destruction of timber, by specifically including "trees" in the prohibition. In spite of the efforts made by the lumbermen to commercialize the forests, to permit the cutting of timber and to divide the preserve into zones, every effort in that direction made in the convention was voted down peremptorily, and there was added to the former Section 2 the following:

> The department is, however, empowered to reforest lands in the forest preserve, to construct fire trails thereon, and to remove dead trees and dead timber therefrom for purposes of reforestation and fire protection solely, but shall not sell the same.

By this clause there was removed every incentive for destroying the forests. Not even dead trees or dead timber can be taken away except for the sole purpose of reforestation and fire protection, and even in such event they may not be sold. How, then, can any honest man contend that under such a constitutional provision it is within the range of possibility for the lumbermen to encroach upon the forests? Although efforts were made by them in the convention to permit the building of highways throughout the forests, it deliberately set its face against such a policy, knowing that it would serve merely as a subterfuge for the improvident and wasteful cutting of timber, and would in the end result in the destruction of the Forest Preserve. The building of a single State highway was authorized along a clearly defined course, and this modification of the report of the committee was adopted at the instance of no less a personage than President Schurman of Cornell University.

The provision of the present Constitution with regard to the construction and maintenance of reservoirs in the Forest Preserve was continued without change. Permission was also granted to the City of New York to acquire, for just compensation and for its municipal water supply, lands constituting in the aggregate not to exceed 100 acres in Ulster and Greene Counties, all indicating the most meticulous care to prevent either public or private interests from interfering with the continuity of the policy of forest preservation. Having established that policy, the method of administering the natural resources of the State became a matter of secondary importance, since no commission, whether it consisted of one, three, or nine members, whether paid or unpaid, could modify the effect of the affirmative prohibitions which have just been pointed out. Accordingly, it was declared with respect to the Department of Conservation, which was created by Section 1 of Article VII.:

> Subject to the limitations in this Constitution contained, the department shall be charged with the development and protection of the natural resources of the State; the encouragement of forestry and the suppression of forest fires throughout the State; the exclusive care, maintenance, and administration of the forest preserve; the conservation, prevention of pollution, and regulation of the waters of the State; the protection and propagation of its fish, birds, game, shellfish, and crustacea, except migratory fish of the sea within the limits of the marine district, with the power, subject to the veto within thirty days of the Governor, to enact regulations with respect to the taking, possession, sale, and transportation thereof, which shall have the force of law, when filed in the office of the Department of State and published as the Legislature may provide, until and unless the Legislature shall thereafter modify such regulations. The department shall also be intrusted with the enforcement of the general laws of the State respecting the subjects hereinbefore enumerated and exercise such additional powers as from time to time may be conferred by law.

It will thus be seen that neither the Department of Conservation nor the Legislature could by any possible method depart from the express limitations which guarantee the continuance of our Forest Preserve as "wild forest lands." The courts have hitherto jealously maintained the effectiveness of this prohibition, so far as it is to be found in the present Constitution. The new provisions emphasize and strengthen the efficacy of the existing prohibitions. The only opposition in the convention to these prohibitions came from Mr. Meigs and Mr. Angell, and it was found necessary in the debate, in order to demolish their contentions, to refer to the dangers of that scientific method of forestry which they advocated, as set forth in the decisions to which Mr. Lawyer's circular refers.

But it is said that the Department of Conservation is to consist of nine Commissioners, who are to be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms which shall expire in nine successive years, and that one Commissioner shall reside in each judicial district, and that this proposal "had its origin in the camps of the lumber interests and in the brain of Mr. Meigs." That is untrue. His proposal was for the establishment of a board of twelve members, to be elected by the Legislature on joint ballot, for a term of twelve years. They were to be given the control of all the State's natural resources, including Forest Preserve lands and waters thereon, but not subject to the limitations to which I have referred. In other words, they were to exercise their own discretion as to the extent to which lumbering might be pursued; as to the construction of highways; as to the leasing of camp sites, and the innumerable other methods by which the character of the forests could be changed. His plan was rejected by the committee and by the convention. Moreover, so earnest were the delegates in their insistence upon the preservation of the resources of the State, that at the instance of Alfred E. Smith this additional safeguard was inserted:

> No person shall be eligible to or shall continue to hold the office of Commissioner, who is engaged in the business of lumbering in any forest preserve county or who is engaged in any business in the prosecution of which hydraulic power is used or in which water is distributed or sold under any public franchise or who is an officer or holder of the stock or bonds of any corporation engaged in such business within the State.

How, then, can any fair-minded man say that the department can ever come under the sway of the lumbering or water-power interests or that it would be possible for them to deprive the State of the twig of a tree or a single drop of water? Besides all this, the Commissioners are subject to removal by the Governor on charges, after an opportunity to be heard, and, finally, under Section 6 a remedy is given to any citizen to restrain any violation of the provisions of the article by suit, brought with the consent of the Supreme Court in Appellate Division, on notice to the Attorney General.

To carry out the policy of reforestation, which is fully as important as the preservation of the forests which now exist, the Legislature is directed to make annual appropriations for the purchase of real property within the Adirondack and Catskill parks. This is also necessary for the protection of the present holdings of the State and for the prevention of the erosion of our mountaintops, which follows closely on the heels of their denudation. The real purpose of the conservation of the forests is to maintain their function as sponges to hold and absorb the water, so as to enable it to flow into our streams slowly, as required, instead of in torrential floods. Because of our failure in the past to observes this necessary precaution, our streams have been drying up and our agricultural lands have become more arid, not only because of the lack of surface water, but because of the gradual falling of the subterranean water level to an extent which has been startling. There are today over 10,000,000 acres of waste lands in New York State suited for no other purpose than that of forestation. It is the purpose of the conservation article, which has been thus violently attacked, to stimulate the planting of forests, not only in the present preserves but throughout the State.

But it is said that the nine Commissioners are to appoint and remove a Superintendent, and that he will be an executive tool. This is an absurdity. The model upon which this department has been created is the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York. Its members are also selected one from each judicial district. They serve for terms of twelve years. They have the power to appoint and remove the President of the University, who is the Director of the Department of Education. The existence of the Board of Regents is co-extensive with the history of the State. It has been admirably successful, and there is no reason why the Department of Conservation under a like organization cannot be equally successful. To bestow upon a single Superintendent, without supervision by such a board, the vast powers of the Department of Conservation would be unwise; whereas, with proper guidance by a board of men of eminence, serving without compensation, and selected because of their interest in the public welfare, there is every reason for expecting more satisfactory results than have hitherto been obtained through the various agencies adopted for the management of our natural resources.

Mr. Lawyer also makes the insulting suggestion that the commission is to be packed. Who is to pack it? The Governor? The Senate? It is said that it will be difficult to find a man in each district fitted by study and experience who can or will perform the duties without compensation. Has it been difficult to find suitable members for the Board of Regents or for the State Board of Charities? It is said that "it subordinates fitness of a Commissioner to the senseless theory of established geographical representation." Is the gentleman from Watertown so anxious that the administration of the forests shall be left solely to those who reside in the lumbering regions? Does he not forget that the entire State is interested in conservation? Does he not know that it includes land, waters, fish, game, and other natural resources, and that the citizens of the First, Second, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Judicial Districts are fully as much interested in the problems, and are as capable of understanding them, as are the residents of the Third, Fourth, and Fifth Judicial Districts, or any single individual who may be appointed?

A great hue and cry is raised with respect to the grant of power to the Department of Conservation concerning the enactment of regulations as to the taking, possession, sale, and transportation of fish, birds, game, shellfish, and crustacea. That provision is essential to a proper administration of our game laws. Under the present system, from 80 to 100 amendments to those laws are passed annually by the Legislature. They determine when suckers may be caught in certain waters. These measures are of a character in which the members of the Legislature as a whole have no concern, and which are generally enacted as a matter of course, by way of compliment to the members who propose them.

The Department of Conservation can deal more efficiently and reasonably with subjects of this nature, and is better able than the Legislature to investigate and study any suggested change in our game laws. But its determination is not conclusive. The Governor has the power to veto any regulation which it adopts. The Legislature may modify.

To one who is familiar with the statutes of New York it is ridiculous to prate of tinkering with our game laws. But this protagonist with the legal label, who is thus fearful lest they be tinkered with, discovers "the fine Italian hand of the Fish Trust," whatever that may be, in the provision which deprives the department of jurisdiction over the migratory fish of the sea within the limits of the marine district. He apparently forgets that our present game laws, which he now seeks to exalt, contain the very same exception, for the obvious reason that the regulation of the migratory fish of the sea is a matter that comes within the jurisdiction of Congress and can only be dealt with effectively by the Federal authorities. At all events, there is nothing in the conservation article which prevents the Legislature from exercising such powers as it possesses in dealing with the subject of migratory fish, which, after all, relates to an industry, and therefore does not come specifically within the purview of the game laws.

In conclusion, it may be interesting to call attention to the fact disclosed by the Syracuse newspapers, that at the meeting of the New York State Fish, Game, and Forest League, called by him on short notice, at which but few members were present, Mr. Lawyer declared that from a single source he had been assured of a fund of $50,000 to defeat the Constitution. Why so large a sum of money from a single source? He was asked to specify, but declined to do so. Why this secrecy? May it not be possible, after all, that the lumber interests, against which he so violently inveighs, may lay claim of paternity to this fund? Who else can have so controlling a motive to defeat the conservation article? The Society for the Preservation of the Adirondacks favors it. Every scientific organization supports it. The New York State College of Forestry has indorsed it; and, so far as the hunters, fishermen, and sportsmen are concerned, one would suppose that they would rejoice in the establishment of a department where they may at any time be heard with respect to the wisdom of the game laws in which they are concerned.

It is interesting to learn whether the voters of this State will give heed to so unworthy an appeal as against the affirmative action of the disinterested men who, without regard to political affiliations, by a vote of ten to one adopted the conservation article, with the most disinterested of motives and against the protests of those who sought to commercialize the forests and to break down the administration of our natural resources.

NEW CONSTITUTION SHOULD BE ADOPTED, SAYS DR. LYMAN ABBOTT

He Gives Four Reasons for His Opinion and Declares That Adoption Will Mark Great Moral and Political Advance.

By LYMAN ABBOTT.
To the Editor of The New York Times:

I SHOULD esteem it a favor if you could allow me to state four reasons why it seems to me very desirable that the new Constitution should be adopted by the voters of this State in this Fall's election. I have made a fairly careful study of its provisions and of the objections which have been, from various quarters, presented against it, and believe that its adoption would mark a great advance both morally and politically toward a purer and better government.

(1) The new Constitution substitutes a visible for an invisible government. Thomas Mott Osborne, in a public address, recently told the following incident, without giving dates or names. An election was to be held for Governor. The bosses of two political parties met to select a ticket. They agreed upon a Governor. The chief boss then called on the district bosses to name their favorites for the subordinate places. One after another were thus named with due reference to drawing power—an Irish Catholic, a Jew, a native American, and finally it was left to the last boss to name a German. The office to be filled was that of State Treasurer, and the presiding boss explained that the candidate, therefore, must be a banker. The boss appealed to was sure that he knew the man for the place, and named him. The party was victorious, the ticket was elected, and the State then found they had elected a German baker as Treasurer of the State. The subordinate boss happened to be deaf and had heard baker when his chief said banker.

I do not vouch for the accuracy of my recollection of Mr. Osborne's speech nor for the accuracy of his recollection of the incident, but it easily might have occurred under our present system. We elect not only a Governor, but all the heads of the departments. We know something about the man we are choosing for Governor, but very few of us know anything about the man we are electing for State Treasurer, State Engineer, Secretary of State, and the like. It has happened once in my recollection that we elected a Republican for Governor, while the heads of departments elected were all Democrats. The administration of our affairs depended largely on these heads of departments, and the Governor, who neither appointed them nor could remove them, was absolutely unable to exercise any political control over their administration. It is notorious that the road making in this State under Governor Dix was extravagant, wasteful, incompetent, and corrupt, but Governor Dix was without any adequate power to prevent the evils, even if he realized them.

Under the new Constitution the Governor will appoint most of the heads of the departments and will have power to remove them. In this respect the new Constitution is modeled after the United States Constitution and confers on the Governor the same kind of power which is conferred on the President. The cry that this amendment gives too great power to the Governor is conclusively answered by the fact that the same power is given by our Federal Constitution to the President, and no peril to the liberties of the people has resulted. It cannot be too often said that it is not power in an executive, but irresponsible power which is a peril. Under the new Constitution the heads of the departments, to whom by necessity all details of administration will be intrusted, will be directly responsible to the Governor and the Governor, whose term of office is limited to two years, will be directly responsible to the people. We shall not again intrust the financial affairs of the State to a German baker because the sub-boss, who makes the nominations, is deaf.

(2.) The new Constitution substitutes a responsible Government for a Government that is irresponsible. At present the various departments present their requests for money for the ensuing year to committees of the House. These demands, with little or no attempt to harmonize them or to consider either how they should be proportioned or what relations the totals bear to the income of the State, are presented to the Legislature. This is done generally toward the close of the session, not infrequently two lats to have the reports printed for the inspection of the members. Under the new Constitution the various departments will present their requests to the Governor: it will be his duty to study them, consider what should be their due proportion, and how the total is related to the income of the State, and present his recommendation in the form of a budget to the Legislature. This budget the Legislature can decrease but cannot increase. In considering this budget they can call the Governor and the heads of the departments before them and question them, and the Governor can, if he wishes, voluntarily go before the Legislature to give information which he desires to lay before that body. Under this system one man will be responsible for making and proposing a financial plan adjusted on the one hand to the needs and on the other hand to the resources of the State. This plan is to be presented to the Legislature before the first day of February, which will give ample time for public consideration of the budget both by the Legislature and by the people. They will know, as they do not now, what moneys it is proposed to spend and for what purpose they are to be spent.

The objection that this takes the power of appropriation out of the hands of the Legislature and intrusts it to the Governor and is, therefore, a recurrence to the methods of Charles I. in his endeavor to establish autocratic rule in England, does not seem very intelligent. The power of appropriation is still left absolutely with the Legislature, but the power to propose the plans for appropriation is taken out of the hands of a few men, whom a minority of the voters of the State have elected and of whose names and character the majority of the voters are absolutely ignorant, and is put in the hands of one man, whom all the voters of the State have elected, who in less than two years will have to give an account of his stewardship to all the voters, and with whose conduct and character all the voters are or can easily become measurably acquainted. This amendment is wholly in the interest of popular control and popular welfare in the expenditure of the people's money.

(3.) The new Constitution substitutes self-government for bureaucratic government. The contribution which the Federal Constitution made to the theory and practice of human government was its provision that the people should govern themselves. This involves self-government for the individual in all affairs which concern only the individual, for the locality in all affairs which concern only the locality, and for the nation in all those affairs which concern the entire nation. The Federal system or union of States is simply an application of this fundamental principle of self-government. The new Constitution makes a very honest and earnest endeavor to apply this principle in this State to the government of municipalities and of counties. I shall not take your space here to outline the plan further than to say it gives to the people of the city the right to frame and to amend their own charter, as the Federal Constitution gives the right to the State to frame and amend its own Constitution, and at the same time it guards the right of the people of the State to control those matters which concern not merely the city but the State at large. If the principle embodied in the new Constitution is adopted by the people of the State and is honestly carried out by future Legislatures and by the courts, it will certainly lessen and perhaps put an end to that perpetual tinkering by the Legislature with municipal affairs which has worked incalculable evils to the cities and has furnished temptations to corruptions not always resisted in the Legislature.

To one who lives in the country, as I do, the increased power given to county governments seems scarcely less important, though it has been less commented upon. The widely variant conditions of our counties, some with compact, some with scattered and sparse populations, make necessary important differences in legislation. Under the present Constitution any citizen in any county, who has sufficient influence with his representative from that county, can often secure special legislation, since the legislation which the representative of a county requests the Legislature is apt to grant. The consequence is a great amount of special legislation not always wisely, not even always honestly framed. Under the new Constitution requests for special legislation from any county must come from its governing body. Thus, while special legislation is and must be continued, the initiative for such legislation will come not from any individual who has a fad or interest to promote, but from the people of the county represented in their governing body. These two provisions for local self-government in the cities and in the counties are so evidently in accordance with the fundamental American principle of local self-government that little public objection has been raised to them, though I cannot doubt that the secret objection of certain politicians, whose political power these provisions will diminish, has helped to instigate some of the public opposition to the Constitution, which is put upon different grounds.

(4) The new Constitution will go far to remove some of the injustices from which those who are unfortunate enough to be involved in law suits suffer under the present system. The law's complexity and the law's delays are both notorious. When I was a boy my brother Vaughan was engaged with David Dudley Field in framing his famous Code of Practice, the aim of which was to abolish the complicated and perplexing system of rules which we had inherited from England and substitute therefor a code of practice easily understandable by lawyers, and not impossible to be understood by the laity. As adopted by the Legislature it comprised, if my memory serves me aright, about three hundred sections. In the more than fifty years that have elapsed this code has been amended from time to time by legislative enactment without any coherent plan and without the aid of experts. As a result, we now have over 3,300 sections in our New York Code of Procedure. The opportunities for delay and for injustice which such a no-system affords will be plain enough to the ordinary reader without the necessity of illustrations. Mr. Root in his speech before the convention intimated that it was the general opinion among the well-informed that by taking advantage of this complex system, a skillful lawyer can keep a cause from coming to final judgment for seven years. The new Constitution directs the Legislature to adopt a simple code, to make no changes in it for a space of five years, and thereafter only every five years, and to make such changes only on the report of a commission appointed to report what changes, if any, are necessary; but the courts are empowered to make such modifications and amendments as they deem necessary. This amendment secures two objects: First, simplification in legal procedure; second, that simplification worked out in its details by experts upon a well considered plan.

The new Constitution further reduces the number of appeals, makes some increase in the number of Judges, especially in New York City, where the courts have found it impossible to keep pace with the accumulating business, and adds one provision which has been grossly misapprehended, if not deliberately misreported, but which should, it seems to me, commend itself to any one who is at all familiar with legal procedure. To relieve themselves of the burden of taking detailed testimony in cases tried before the court the Judges have long exercised the right to appoint referees to take such testimony and report the facts, with the testimony, to the consideration of the court for its action. These referees, and the Commissioners similarly appointed by the courts to conduct condemnation proceedings, have been paid by fees. As every session brings a fee to the referee's pocket, he has at least no interest to expedite the proceedings and reduce the number of sessions. During the year 1914 there were 1,709 appointments of referees in New York City alone. What their fees amounted to I do not know, but the fees of those appointed for condemnation proceedings amounted to nearly three-quarters of a million dollars.

The new Constitution authorizes the Legislature to create, in the place of these referees, Commissioners paid by salaries, who will exercise substantially the same functions as the referees paid by fees. These Commissioners are not to be allowed to engage in the practice of the law while they are fulfilling these quasi judicial functions. One does not need to be a lawyer to perceive that this change will both promote expedition in the legal procedure and lessen its expense. It will at the same time put an end to one serious scandal. The power of the Judges to appoint these high-priced referees has made Judgeships a valuable asset to the political boss, has been in some instances a source of corruption, and has rendered the courts subject to a public suspicion from which it should be the supreme desire of all good citizens entirely to free them.

These four reforms—the substitution of a visible for an invisible government, of a financially responsible for a financially irresponsible government, of local self-government for bureaucratic government, and for courts hampered by a perfect tangle of legislative enactments courts equipped with simple rules and with salaried in place of feed assistants for their minor work—should be sufficient to make the voters of the State, with practical unanimity, vote for the amended Constitution, unless there are very serious objections to its adoption. It is somewhat difficult for one who always desires to attribute honest motives to his fellow-men to escape the conviction that most of the objections which are made to this Constitution are not honestly made. It is evident that there is a concerted movement to defeat its adoption. It is almost equally evident that those who are inspiring this concerted movement are concealing themselves behind agencies which they hope will be free from public suspicion.

It is not true that the Constitution removes any safeguards contained in the old Bill of Rights. Every one of those safeguards is continued in the new Constitution. Nor is it true that the right of jury trial is impaired, though a provision allows one accused of a minor crime to waive indictment by a Grand Jury, if for the sake of expedition of his trial he desires to do so. He cannot be deprived of the Grand Jury's action, though he may himself waive it. Nor is it true that any new system of taxation is created by the new Constitution. An amendment providing for a new system of taxation, which I am inclined to think is wise, is proposed to be separately voted on; but a vote for the new Constitution does not adopt this provision, and a vote against the new Constitution does not reject it. It is true that certain officials' salaries are moderately increased, the first increase which has been made by the State in these salaries in forty years, during which time, as all your readers know, the purchasing value of money has greatly diminished. The increase is none too great to meet the reasonable demands of justice; and every business man knows that it is good economy to pay good salaries for good service, and poor economy to pay poor salaries for poor service.

The simplification of administration by bringing all the administrative work of the State under seventeen heads of departments, with possible reduction or elimination by the Legislature of the 152 commissions now existing, and the provision making the Governor responsible for recommending a budget to the Legislature, will save the expense involved in these added salaries many times over. Why the convention provided a board of nine Commissioners in place of one Commissioner for the preservation of our forests and water powers I do not know, but the somewhat hysterical appeal which has been issued to voters to vote against the Constitution solely on this ground furnishes no argument whatever to justify its assertion that the creation of this board was made for the benefit of corrupt corporate interests. No doubt conservatives will regret that the convention did not adopt Mr. Barnes's amendment and forbid the Legislature from enacting laws for a minimum wage and minimum labor day; and radicals will regret that it did not adopt the initiative, the referendum, and the recall. But the fact that a Constitution does not contain all the good things which a voter desires to see incorporated in it furnishes a very poor reason for casting a vote against it.

During the Summer of 1915, some of the ablest men of the State—and that is equivalent to saying some of the ablest men in the nation—spent their time in studying the problems of our State and City Governments and in working out the Constitution now offered to the people. It was adopted by a vote of 118 to 33, the opposition being almost all Tammany Hall Democrats or reactionary Republicans. The voter, before he decides to vote against this Constitution because some local editor, local politician, unknown newspaper correspondent or circular bearing the name of a pretentious organization advises him to vote against it, will do well to put this advice in the one scale and the names of Democrats as eminent as Louis Marshall and Judge O'Brien, and of Republicans as eminent as those of Elihu Root, George W. Wickersham, and Seth Low in the other and see which way the scales tip.

FROM THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Boston Opera Company Comes to Add Music to a Week Well Provided with Concerts and Recitals.

THE new Boston Grand Opera Company, organized in connection with the Pavlowa Ballet Russe, will appear for the first time in New York tomorrow evening, opening at the Manhattan Opera House with a revival of Auber's "La Muette de Portici," ("The Dumb Girl of Portici,") sung in Italian, in which Mlle. Pavlowa will act the pantomimic rôle of Fenella, the dumb girl. The engagement is scheduled for two weeks.

The organization is under the direction of Max Rabinoff. It includes among its principal members Felice Lyne, Taraki Miura, Maggie Teyte, and Luisa Vilani, sopranos; Maria Cay, Elvira Leveroni, and Elizabeth Campbell, contraltos; Giovanni Zenatello, Riccardo Martin, Zanco di Prima, Lasar Andres, Ernesto Giaconne, Ippolito Lazzaro, and Georgi Michailoff, tenors; George Baklanoff, Thomas Chalmers, Ernesto Caronna, and Giorgio Puliti, baritones; and Paolo Ananian, Alfred Kaufman, Gaudio Mansueto, and José Mardones, basses. Edoardo Ferrari-Fontana, tenor, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing in performances of "The Love of Three Kings."

The conductors are Agide Jacchia, Roberto Moranzoni, and Adolph Schmid. Ryszard Orlynski, a former associate of Reinhardt, is the general director, and Ivan Clustine is choreographic director.

The Pavlowa ballet is an important part of the organization. There will be an extensive ballet number at each performance, either as part of the opera presented, or separately, at the conclusion of the opera. Ivan Clustine will again be ballet master of the organization, and Alexandre Volinine the principal male dancer. Stephanie Plaskovietzka and Stasia Kuhn continue as principal dancers.

The cast for "The Dumb Girl of Portici" tomorrow night includes, besides Mlle. Pavlowa as Fenella, Giovanni Zenatello as Masaniello, Felice Lyne as Elvira, Georgi Michailoff as Alfonso, and Thomas Chalmers, Paolo Ananian, Giorgio Puliti, and Fely Clement in other rôles. Agide Jacchia will conduct. Mlle. Pavlowa's ballet has an important share in the work.

Tuesday evening's bill consists of Montemezzi's "L'Amore dei Tre Re," followed by the "Elysian Fields" ballet from Gluck's "Orfeo ed Euridice." In the opera Luisa Vilani will be heard as Fiora, a rôle which she originated in Italy. Edoardo Ferrari-Fontana will be heard in the tenor rôle of Avito, which he has sung exclusively at the Metropolitan since the first performance of the work two seasons ago. The Manfredo will be the Russian baritone, George Baklanoff, while the old King will be sung by José Mardones, a Spanish basso. The other parts will be sung by Ernesto Giaconne, Elizabeth Campbell, Elvira Leveroni, Enrico Nava, and Fely Clement. Roberto Moranzoni will conduct. In Gluck's ballet, Mlle. Pavlowa and Alexandre Volinine, with the rest of the Pavlowa ballet, will be seen, and the parts of Orfeo and Euridice will be sung, respectively, by Maria Gay and Phyllis Peralta. Adolph Schmid will conduct this number.

There will be a special matinée Wednesday, given over to Pavlowa and her ballet. The works offered will be "The Fairy Doll" and "Snowflakes," the latter from Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker" ballet, which Pavlowa has not yet done in New York. There will also be a series of divertissements.

On Wednesday evening "Carmen" will be sung. Maria Gay will be heard in the title rôle, which she appeared in at the same house before when Oscar Hammerstein was giving opera there. Giovanni Zenatello will be Don José and José Mardones will sing the Toreador. Alfred Kaufman will be Zuniga, and the other rôles will be in the hands of Bianca Saroya, Fely Clement, Belle Gottschalk, Giorgio Puliti, Paolo Ananian, and Ernesto Giaconne. Robert Moranzoni will conduct. The complete original ballet of "Carmen," elaborated with a set of Spanish dances by Bizet, will be given by Pavlowa and her organization.

The opera Thursday night will be "Madama Butterfly." Tamaki Miura, a Japanese soprano, will be the Japanese heroine of Puccini's work. Riccardo Martin will sing Pinkerton and Thomas Chalmers Sharpless, while Elvira Leveroni will be Suzuki. The others are Elizabeth Campbell, Paolo Ananian, and Richard Davis. Agide Jacchia will conduct. On this bill Pavlowa's offering will be a repetition of "Snowflakes."

Verdi's "Otello" will be sung Friday night, with Giovanni Zenatello in the title rôle, his conception of which he made known to New York during the Hammerstein seasons. Luisa Vilani will sing Desdemona and George Baklanoff will be the Iago. The other parts will be sung by Elvira Leveroni, Ernesto Giaconne, Elizabeth Campbell, and Giorgio Puliti. Roberto Moranzoni will conduct. The opera will be followed by divertissements danced by Pavlowa, Volinine, and other members of the ballet.

On Saturday afternoon there will be a repetition of Thursday night's bill, "Madama Butterfly" and "Snowflakes," and on the same evening "The Dumb Girl of Portici," the opening bill, will be repeated. The répertoire for the second week has not yet been announced.

PROGRAMMES OF THE WEEK

THE principal item in the busy week of concerts and recitals which begins this afternoon will be the opening of the Philharmonic Society's season, which will occur at Carnegie Hall Thursday evening, Josef Stransky conducting. Aside from this there is a long list of song and instrumental recitals, both by artists of established reputation and others in the earlier stages of the battle for public favor.

The first of the People's Symphony Concerts will be given this afternoon at Carnegie Hall. Under the direction of Franz X. Arens, the organization will play Tschaikowsky's symphony No. 5, an air from Bach's suite in D minor for strings, and the "Egmont" Overture of Beethoven. Ethel Leginska, pianist, who will be the soloist, will play Liszt's Hungarian Fantasie.

Mischa Elman, violinist, will be the soloist at the concert of the Symphony Society of New York this afternoon at Aeolian Hall. He will play Goldmark's Concerto in A minor for violin and orchestra. The other numbers of the program comprise Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 and a symphonic fragment from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Marguerite Melville-Liszniewska, an American pianist who has done most of her work abroad, will give a piano recital tomorrow afternoon at Aeolian Hall. The principal numbers of her program are Chopin's Sonata in B minor and Schumann's "Scenes of Childhood." There is also D'Albert's arrangement of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in D and a group of Brahms's pieces, beside some music by French and Polish composers.

Francis Macmillen, violinist, appears for the first time this season in a recital at Aeolian Hall tomorrow evening. He will play Goldmark's Concerto and Vitali's Ciaconna, besides a Barcarole of his own composition and pieces by Gluck, Flocco, Couperin, Pugnani-Kreisler, Sarasate, Sgambati, and Tor Aulin.

With a program consisting principally of German lieder, Vernon d'Arnalle, baritone, will give a recital Tuesday afternoon at Aeolian Hall. He will sing three groups of songs divided between Schubert, Franz, Schumann, and Brahms, two Irish songs and Carpenter's "To One Unknown," with Hadley's "How Do I Love Thee."

Maud Powell will give her annual recital Tuesday evening in Aeolian Hall, assisted by Arthur Loesser, pianist. Her principal numbers will be de Beriot's Concerto No. 7 in G and d'Indy's Sonata in C, Op. 59, for violin and piano. Her final group of pieces will include novelties and new arrangements by Victor Herbert, Percy Grainger, and Edwin Grasse.

Lester Donahue, a young California pianist who has not yet been heard here, will give a recital Wednesday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. He will play Beethoven's "Eroica" Variations and Fugue, Brahms's Sonata in F sharp minor and groups of compositions of Chopin and Liszt.

May Peterson, an American soprano who has not yet been heard in this city, will give a song recital at Aeolian Hall Thursday afternoon. Her program will consist of four groups of numbers, the first from Mozart and Handel, the second of modern German songs, the third in French, and the last representative of contemporary American composers. Victor Harris will assist at the piano.

Harold Bauer will make his first appearance this season in a recital Saturday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. His program is the following: Brahms's Sonata in F minor, Op. 5; Schumann's "Scenes from Childhood," Chopin's Polonaise Fantasie, César Franck's Prelude, Aria, and Finale; De Bussy's "Estampes," and Saint-Saëns's "Etude en Forme de Valse."

Roderick White, a young American violinist who was heard here first last season, will give a recital Friday evening at Aeolian Hall. He will play Bruch's Concerto in D minor and three groups of shorter pieces, including several Kreisler arrangements. Maurice Eisener will assist at the piano.

Josef Stransky's program for the season's opening pair of concerts by the Philharmonic Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Thursday evening and Friday afternoon has for one of its numbers the first performance in this country of Max Reger's "Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Mozart." American, French, and Russian compositions form the remainder of the program, MacDowell's "Lancelot and Elaine" being scheduled for first presentation by this orchestra. The complete program includes MacDowell's "Lancelot and Elaine"; Berlioz's scherzo, "Queen Mab"; Reger's "Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Mozart," and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

Frederic Martin, bass, will be heard in a song recital Thursday evening at Aeolian Hall. His program consists of older classics; lieder of Schubert, Jensen, Strauss, and Hugo Wolf; songs by modern English and American composers, and three songs in French by Bizet, Tosti, and Alexander Georges. Charles Gilbert Spross will assist at the piano.

Mme. Gadski will give her annual New York recital in Aeolian Hall on Friday afternoon. Her program will consist entirely of German songs, the works of Schumann, Schubert, Franz, Brahms, Liszt, Wagner, Wolff, Strauss, Eugen Haile, Paul Eisler, and Henschel. Mme. Gadski will be assisted at the piano by Paul Eisler.

Mischa Elman will appear Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall in a recital. He will play Vivaldi's Concerto in G minor, with piano and organ accompaniment; Ernst's Concerto in F sharp minor, Scolero's Variations on a Theme by Mozart, and shorter compositions arranged from Bach, Wieniawski, Michiels, and Weber. Walter H. Golde will assist at the piano and Frank L. Sealy at the organ.

PLANS OF THE MUSICIANS.

JOSEF STRANSKY has decided to make the first performance by the Philharmonic Society of Richard Strauss's "Alpine" Symphony the occasion of a festival evening devoted entirely to works of the German composer. Next in importance to the performance of the symphony will be the playing of the entire finale of the opera "Salome." The vocal part in this number will be sung by Marcella Craft, who sang the rôle in Munich at the premiere under the direction of the composer.

Dr. Karl Muck has already arranged the programs for the first concerts in New York this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday evening, Nov. 4, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 6. At the first concert he will play Brahms's Symphony in E minor and Schumann's "Manfred" Overture, Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration," and Dvorak's overture, "Husitska." Saturday afternoon he will give Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, Ravel's "Ma Mere l'Oye," Loeffler's "The Death of Tintangiles," and Liszt's "Les Preludes."

The Flonzaley Quartet will give its series of concerts at Aeolian Hall on Tuesday evenings, Nov. 30, Jan. 25, and March 14. The répertoire will include several novelties. Among them will probably be a string quartet by Ernest Bloch, the Belgian violinist and conductor, who may come to America. Two other composers whose works will figure on the list are Emmanuel Moor and Igor Strawinsky, while there is still another, an American, Templeton Strong, who has recently finished a string trio dedicated to the Flonzaleys and their patron, E. J. de Coppet.

The Musical Art Society's two concerts will be given under the direction of Frank Damrosch on Tuesday evenings, Dec. 14 and March 14, at Carnegie Hall. Among the works to appear for the first time on the programs of the organization are a series of "Love Songs" (waltzes) from Brahms; a work based on the Lutheran Christmas chorale, "Von Himmel hoch da komm' ich her," for mixed chorus, boy choir, solo violin, and organ, and Percy Grainger's "The Merry Wedding," a new composition which will have its first performance at the concert in March.

The Music Department of Hunter College will give on the evenings of Nov. 30, Jan. 4, and Feb. 22 a series of sonata recitals for 'cello and piano under the direction of Leo Schulz, who will be associated with Albert von Doenhof, Clarence Adler, and Leopold Winkler. The programs will include classic works and the compositions of Reger, Strauss, and other representatives of the modern school.

Carl Friedberg, pianist, will be the assisting artist at the first concert of the Kneisel Quartet in Aeolian Hall on Tuesday evening, Nov. 9. He will play with Mr. Willeke of the quartet Chopin's Sonata for 'cello and piano. The remaining numbers on the program will be Haydn's Quartet in D, Op. 20, No. 4, and Ravel's Quartet in F.

John McCormack, tenor, will give his first recital of the season at Carnegie Hall on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 7. His program will include an aria from an unfamiliar opera of Mozart; English transations of songs by Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Bleichman, Björgen, and Liszt; a group of songs by American composers; a Hungarian song arranged by Fritz Kreisler; and a group of old Irish songs arranged by Sir Charles Villiers Stanford, Dr. Joyce, and Alfred Moffat.

The first meeting of the season of the local branch of the New York State Music Teachers Association was held last week at the McAlpin with the President, Frederick Schileder, in the chair. The subject for the meeting was "The Standardization of Theory and Harmony." Among those from out of town who took part in the discussion were James W. Pierce of the San Francisco Music Teachers Association, and Mr. Rowley, President of the recently organized branch of the New York State body at Utica.

The New York Orchestral Society, Max Jacobs, conductor, will give Sunday evening symphony concerts at the Standard Theatre, Broadway and Ninetieth Street, beginning on Oct. 31.

Albert Gregorowich Janpolski, a Russian baritone, will give a song recital at Aeolian Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 11. Among the numbers on his program will be several Russian and Polish songs which have not been heard here, and a group of songs in English, several of them by American composers.

The University Settlement, at 184 Eldridge Street, is organizing a choral class for young men and women under the direction of Israel Joseph. The purpose is to develop choral singing and to give an operetta. The first meeting, at which voices will be tried, will be held at the settlement house tomorrow evening.

Samuel Gardner, a young violinist who received most of his training here and has appeared here in recitals, has been engaged to appear six times this season in the West with Frederick Stock and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

OTHERS TO BE HEARD.

At his free organ recital at City College this afternoon at 4 o'clock Samuel A. Baldwin will play the following numbers: Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Largo, Handel; Toccata in F, Bach; "Sposalizio," Liszt; "In the Morning" and "Ase's Death," from "Peer Gynt" Suite, Grieg; "Elfes," Bonnet; "Am Meer," Schubert, and Grand Choeur in A, Kinder. On Wednesday at the same hour he will play: Prelude in E minor, Bach; Concert Adagio in E, Merkel; Sonata in C minor, Baldwin; "Liebestraum," Lemare; Variations de Concert, Bonnet; "Kamennoi Ostrow," Rubinstein, and "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar.

A lecture-recital on Elizabethan music will be given by Miss J. Katherine Macdonald, pianist, and Miss Helen Latham, contralto, at 5 o'clock in Milbank Chapel of Teachers College tomorrow afternoon. It will be open to the public without cards.

Bispham Recital in Brooklyn.

AN APPEAL.

I'm only a cavalry charger,
And I'm dying as fast as I can
(For my body is riddled with bullets—
They've potted both me and my man);
And though I've no words to express it,
I'm trying this message to tell
To kind folks who work for the Red Cross—
Oh, please help the Blue ones as well!

My master was one in a thousand,
And I loved him with all this poor heart
(For horses are built just like humans,
Be kind to them—they'll do their part);
So please send out help for our wounded,
And give us a word in your prayers—
This isn't so strange as you'd fancy,
The Russians do it in theirs.

I'm only a cavalry charger,
And my eyes are becoming quite dim
(I really don't mind, though I'm "done for,"
So long as I'm guilt to Him);
But first I would plead for my comrades,
Who're dying and suffering, too—
Oh, please help the poor wounded horses;
I'm sure that you would—if you knew.

Exceptionally Low Prices on High Grade Fall Dress Goods

We bought a large quantity of these fine Fall dress materials some time ago, and marked the prices very low, which we could afford to do since we purchased them at out-of-the-ordinary price concessions. But we never exploited our offering of this particular lot by advertising. NOW, we present the entire assortment, comprising the newest, the most beautiful, and most wanted fabrics at prices that are truly remarkable because of their lowness. We advise you to anticipate even your far-off requirements, for the concessions which we present here are not likely to be repeated.

Ever See a Doll 250 Years Old?

It is the most remarkable collection of dolls, we believe, that has ever been assembled in Newark.

There are handsome dolls—dolls as tiny as flies, and yet perfectly jointed; ugly and grotesque dolls; Indian dolls; porcelain head dolls; and rudely carved dolls.

These dolls were exhibited by New Jersey people.

These dolls have competed for LIVE PRIZES.

The winning dolls are on display. Come and see them! Both prizes and dolls are here.

"Bolling" Green Blouses

What a wonderful shade of green is this: very soft and dark, yet not quite so dark as Russian green.

We have arranged a display of smart "Bolling" green blouses in georgette crepe, crepe de chine, and taffeta, in tailored and dress styles, very new and lovely.

Included are the blouse with the double frill, decidedly in vogue; a stunning little model of crepe de chine with a satin stripe; a georgette with vestee and collar of taffeta, beautifully made, and many others. 3.00 to 7.98.

Mahogany Candle Sticks, 1.00

The soft, flickering glow of the candle is still seen in many homes in spite of electricity and gas.

Place one on your dresser, on each corner of the mantelpiece, or on the piano—capped with a neat shade in harmony with the room's decorations—and let it shed its mellow glow about the room.

The candlesticks we offer are made of beautiful mahogany, splendidly finished. Price 1.00. (Silken shades in many colors at little prices).

The C/B a la Spirite Corset

For the New Carriage—Straighter, Smarter

The modish woman of the day does not lounge. Her spine forms a beautiful, straight line, as nature intended it to do. Her shoulders are of military erectness and her diaphragm finds itself beautifully free to govern her breathing, if——her corset is a C/B a la Spirite. It is wonderful, is this corset, encasing the flesh below the shoulders without pushing it up; emphasizing the natural curve of every woman's waist, giving her the newer, better figure.

We are showing these new models now. Their prices begin at as low as 1.00.

Discard your old corset immediately. You thought the old, low kind gave you breathing space. They did not, because you allowed yourself to "slump" forward until your diaphragm had less chance than ever before. Our expert fitters will be glad to help you choose the model your figure can wear to best advantage.

IN THE PLAYHOUSES OF NEW YORK

SECOND THOUGHTS ON FIRST NIGHTS

Ethel Barrymore and "Our Mrs. McChesney."

ETHEL BARRYMORE, looking uncommonly handsome, came back to town last Tuesday evening. The joyful occasion was the presentation before an impressive audience at the Lyceum Theatre of "Our Mrs. McChesney," obviously a dramatization of the short stories which have added so materially to the fame and fortune of Edna Ferber. As the traveling saleswoman of those stories, Miss Barrymore is most charming, and it is scarcely a matter for astonishment that the Lyceum has been sold out ever since.

It is impossible to speak of the play itself with enthusiasm. Here is a dramatic effort of no importance, and however delightful the appearance of Miss Barrymore in the leading rôle, that appearance is inevitably received with mingled feelings. You may feel a certain gratitude at the sight of such scanty and trivial material thus immeasurably enhanced, the while you experience a keen regret at the thought of so gifted an actress devoting a month of her time, let alone an entire season, to anything short of the best there is in the theatre.

We are indeed wasteful of the talents of the few actresses of the first rank who grace the American stage. It is scandalous economy which lets nearly three years pass without a single appearance of Mrs. Fiske on Broadway and that suffers Laurette Taylor to be confined to one rôle for four whole seasons. Elsie Ferguson, Frances Starr, Grace George, Margaret Anglin, Ethel Barrymore—there are not so many more than these. It is not a big company. They are too few and life is too short for one who really loves the theatre to see without a pang any one of them frittering away a single season.

It is an agreeable experience, then, to see Miss Barrymore as Emma McChesney. Of course it is. But there are many actresses who could meet the requirements of the rôle, and there are precious few in England or America who could even approach the superb performance which Ethel Barrymore gave at the Empire last season as the unloved woman in "The Shadow."

Be sure Miss Barrymore makes "Our Mrs. McChesney" good entertainment. Be sure she brings to it something more than beauty, radiant charm, and vocal sorcery. She expends, it is true, little or no effort in characterization—far too little, as a matter of fact, although some light on this point is cast by Miss Ferber's own appreciation of Miss Barrymore, which is printed elsewhere on this page. But to the one or two moments in the play that invite it she brings that genuine emotion which is acting in its best estate. Ethel Barrymore is a born actress, and this is true not because she comes of a tribe of famous players nor because with the passing years she has mastered the technique of her profession, but because she possesses to a rare degree what a thousand and one writers on things theatrical have taken refuge in calling the real fire. If ever in an idle moment you have foolishly said that Miss Barrymore brings only a pleasing personality to a part, go to the Lyceum and watch her work in the scene where she hears her boy is suspected of thieving, where she rallies her faith to his aid and is able to meet him soon with the charge disproved. Watch this, wipe your eyes, and then write your letter of abject apology. It is rather too bad that the play has so very few such opportunities as this.

It is, unfortunately, a somewhat gawky and incoherent play which Miss Ferber and Mr. Hobart have made from the Emma McChesney stories, but the text is kept bright by Miss Ferber's own observant, kindly, and unflagging humor.

A comparison between the dramatization and the original stories offers an occasional illuminating instance of how surely your author coarsens and cheapens a situation for the stage. For instance, one is permitted to guess that one of the threads in the first act can be traced back to a certain story called something like "Under the High-Cut Vest," which demonstrated that the heart of Mrs. McChesney's son was in the right place, after all. It was a poignant study in maternal heartache; the dreary picture of Emma in a deary hotel where, while her son was traipsing off on some party of his own, she waited alone through the college vacation she had joyously anticipated spending with him. In the play Emma comes to join the boy, only to find that he has raised a check of hers and invested the proceeds in an impromptu marriage with a chorus girl.

There is no reason on earth why the Emma McChesney stories should not be worked into a comedy of the finest quality. Indeed, such a short story series, made coherent by the recurrence of an interesting and winning character, should present the dramatist with an easier task than the dramatization of a novel. The man who would make a play from a novel is inevitably bound hand and foot by a plot that more often than not is little suited to the confines or requirements of the stage. A short story series, however, leaves him freer. It gives him characters and color and then only a book full of incidents to use or discard at will.

The short story series of this variety has been tempting from the days of "Chimmie Fadden." "Sherlock Holmes" is a good example of the clever use of such material. "Wallingford" and "Potash & Perlmutter" offer more recent illustration of what popular success may attend such a venture. Last season saw the Cordelia Blossom stories go to disaster on the stage. If you look close enough you will find a short story series in the beginnings of the delightful "Young America," and even now Boston is witnessing the play made from the Judge Priest stories of the amiable Irvin Cobb. The blessed Old Chester tales, however, have remained on the shelf save as they aided in the stage version of "Helena Ritchie," and one is permitted to hope that at least the mighty adventures of Master Penrod Scofield will never be turned to the uses of the theatre.

THORNY PATH TO BROADWAY

THE road that leads to Broadway proved a long and tedious one for Otto Kruger, the pleasing juvenile of "Young America," whose performance as the young husband is one of the joys of the new season. Mr. Kruger trained for a place on the street of the midnight sun through years of hard work in stock and répertoire in the Middle West.

He began his stage career in Toledo, Ohio, where he was born, as a member of a stock company.

"I offered myself for better or for worse or for nothing," he says, "and was taken on those terms."

From stock he drifted into répertoire, playing with various companies over the Stair & Havlin circuit, a chain of theatres which begins up-State and loops out through the Middle West as far as Kansas City. In one of these companies he was up in thirteen plays, ready to go on in any one of them at a moment's notice, which he was often called upon to do, since the bill was never announced far ahead. Once he jumped from one company to another, and in the répertoire of the new company there was not one play of the thirteen he had learned for the other.

"All the time," Mr. Kruger said the other night in his dressing room at the Gaiety, "I was looking forward to the time when I would get a chance on Broadway. I stayed away purposely for several years because I felt I wasn't ready yet. Finally I decided I was equipped to try it and when an offer came through an agent to come and play George Probert's rôle of the cadet in 'The Lure' I jumped here, saw the play one night, learned the part and went on the next night. So at the beginning my stock and répertoire training stood me in good stead, for there were seventy-four sides to the part. Mr. Probert did not want to go to Chicago and that was why I got the chance. I played in Chicago and came back here after the run there.

"A year ago last June a special performance of Charles Sumner's play, 'The Natural Law,' was announced for the Fulton Theatre. It was a 'for sale' performance arranged so the managers could see the piece, and as such performances give new players an excellent opportunity of showing what they can do there were plenty to volunteer their services.

"I was fortunate enough to please the author to a degree sufficient to have him stipulate in the contract that the play could not be produced without me in the part I created. The same was true of Miss Holmes. Then the hardest thing I have ever had to do came. It was a gamble whether the play would ever be produced; I knew if it should be my long-looked-for chance would come. I could not run the risk of taking a long engagement out of town, so all there was for it was to sit and wait, with a fine chance of starving during the process.

"I waited from June until the following April, and while 'The Natural Law' did not have a long run it gave me a Broadway hearing and my present rôle."

Mr. Kruger is a University of Michigan man. He was in school with Norman Hackett, an actor popular on the répertoire circuits of the West, and at one time the two acted in the same company.

Lectures on French Drama.

A feature of the new season at the Théâtre Français will be a series of lectures or conferences to be given Monday mornings in preparation for the performances of literary plays Friday afternoons. These will be conducted along the lines of the conferences at the Odéon, Vaudeville and Femina theatres in Paris.

FASHION SHOW ON ICE.

Many Novelties at St. Nicholas Rink This Winter.

The St. Nicholas Ice Skating Rink will begin its twenty-second year next Saturday night. With the waning popularity of dancing and the introduction of the ice ballet at the Hippodrome ice skating bids fair to be something of a fad this Winter.

Already several adaptations of modern dances have been made to be executed on skates. The ice waltz, the snowball trot, the frosty hesitation, the ten-below tango, and the polar bear hug are some of the ice dances. One of the novel features will be a fashion exhibit in which skaters will wear furs, outing costumes, and skating dance gowns.

At the Century.

Singer's Midgets, a troupe of eighteen Lilliputian players, will take part in the concert tonight at the Century. Will Rogers, Lew Horn, Cross and Josephine, and Adelaide and Hughes will contribute to the bill.

The First-Night Calendar.

"SHERMAN WAS RIGHT"—A new farce by Frank Mandel, with Hale Hamilton, Tuesday night in the Fulton Theatre.

"DER IDEALE GATTE."—Oscar Wilde's comedy acted in German, with Arnold Korff in the rôle of Lord Goring, Wednesday night in the Irving Place Theatre.

ANOTHER war play will be produced this week. It is called "Sherman Was Right," and differs from most of its predecessors in that it is farce and not more serious drama. Frank Mandel is the author of the play.

The farce is founded on a news item of March 11, 1915, which told of the converted cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich being interned at Newport News with 350 passengers captured from neutral vessels. The complications begin when John Smith, a New York broker, Teutonizes his name to Johann Schmitt for the sake of winning the love of a girl with decidedly German sympathies. The real Johann Schmitt, engaged in making munitions for the German Government, enters the plot and naturally things begin to happen.

H. H. Frazee is sponsor for Mr. Mandel's farce, and for the principal rôle he has chosen that expert and pleasing farceur of other Frazee productions, Hale Hamilton. With Mr. Hamilton will be seen Dorothy Dorr, Dodson Mitchell, Jean Shelby, Sam Sidman, Georgie Lawrence, Ernest Cossart, Suzanne Wills, Regine Wallace, and Maryin Alsop.

The first performance will be given Tuesday night in the Fulton Theatre.

Oscar Wilde's comedy, "Der ideale Gatte," will be the offering of the German stock company at the Irving Place Theatre this week. Arnold Korff, the visiting star from the Hofburg-Theatre, Vienna, will stage the play and will appear in the rôle of Lord Goring. Jenny Valiere, Richard Feist, Heinrich Matthaes, Enni Rub Foerster, Hertha Schoenfeld, Aranka Eben, Gustav Paul Schuetz, Iffi Engel, Willy Frey, and Henry Falk will be others in the cast. "Der ideale Gatte" will be given Wednesday night. The first two nights of the week Schoenherr's interesting play, "Der Weibsteufel," will be acted.

David Bispham will repeat his performance of "Adelaide" tomorrow and Tuesday afternoon in the Harris Theatre. A performance was originally announced for this afternoon, but the action of the Sabbath Society necessitated changing the date. Mr. Bispham has studied the statute under which the society acted and finds nothing in it against making an announcement today.

AT OTHER THEATRES.

STANDARD—"The Show Shop," James Forbes's amusing comedy of stage life, originally acted last season at the Hudson, with Zelda Sears and George Sidney in the rôles they created.

YORK—"The Law of the Land," George Broadhurst's melodrama, seen last year in the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, with Adelaide French in Julia Dean's original rôle, and Coates Gwynne, Frank Stirling, Joseph Merrick, and A. T. Hendon in principal parts.

LEXINGTON—"The Natural Law," a melodrama by Charles Sumner, first presented last Spring in the Republic Theatre, the cast including Julie Herne, Teresa Maxwell Conover, Howard Hall, and Conrad Nagel.

BRONX OPERA HOUSE—The Hauerbach-Friml musical comedy, "High Jinks," in which Emma Trentini was the prima donna when it was first presented.

YORKVILLE—"The Frolics of 1915," a revue of last season's Broadway successes, with Arthur Connelly, Frank Wesson, and Anna Healey as the stars.

EDEN MUSEE—The World in Wax in the crypt and Kinemacolor pictures and band concerts in the concert hall.

Frapped Band Music.

Charlotte and her companions of the skating scene, "Flirting at St. Moritz," will appear at the Hippodrome tonight as a feature of the Sousa concert. Orville Harrold, Belle Storey, Nat M. Wills, Virginia Root, and Herbert L. Clarke will be the soloists. The Miramba Band will also play.

HATS OFF TO THE BUSINESS WOMAN!

By EDNA FERBER.

Edna Ferber, with the assistance of George V. Hobart, has taken her widely known short stories of the traveling saleswoman and evolved therefrom a three-act comedy. This is called "Our Mrs. McChesney," and it was presented to New York last Tuesday evening at the Lyceum Theatre. Ethel Barrymore plays the leading role, and all signs point to a most prosperous engagement.

That's Webster. Also, it's Emma McChesney. Incidentally, it is a definition of any one of those clever, capable, hard-working, quick-thinking blue-serge women who in the last ten years have shown themselves capable of earning between $5,000 and $15,000 a year in the business world. It's a cruel, dizzy, devil-take-the-hindmost sort of planet, that business world, and it revolves at the rate of a mile a minute. And I rise to remark that any woman who can keep her head and her salary in the midst of the whirl of it has got to have breeding, education, and refinement. Just as it is the colleged-bred, technically trained man who is commanding the five-figure salary today, so it is the well-read, intelligent, cultured, and low-voiced woman who is to be found busily engaged on the other side of that mahogany door marked "Private."

Six months ago Miss Ethel Barrymore, this country's foremost actress, who has played everything from a scrubwoman in "The Silver Box" to a paralytic in "The Shadow," announced that she would take the part of a traveling saleswoman in a play built around the Emma McChesney stories.

There arose a howl. Out of the hoarsest of it could be heard the words "Vulgar! Slangy! Common! Unrefined!"

But Miss Barrymore, blessed with the Barrymore intelligence, knew better. She knew, as does any one who has been fortunate enough to meet one of these twentieth century American business women, that she would be called upon to portray a person of charm, poise, level-headedness, and quiet assurance. She knew that those ignorant ones who expected a slangy, breezy, hello-kid type were going to be disappointed. And they were. And they deserved to be.

Some of those who have seen Miss Barrymore in "Our Mrs. McChesney" have said that it is impossible to tell where Emma McChesney begins and Ethel Barrymore stops. Which is as it should be.

"I shan't be playing a part in this," Miss Barrymore said, when she decided to play Emma. "For the first time in my life I'll be able to act, and talk, and walk, and dress just as I do every day of my life. I'll be taking the part of an American woman possessed of brains, and initiative, and a taste in clothes. It's going to be great fun."

They're as modern as the Woolworth Building, these business women of today. But they're as wholesome, and sane, and womanly as their mothers or grandmothers before them. You'll find them at the heads of departments, you'll find them as foreign buyers, you'll find them selling goods on the road, in insurance offices, in real estate offices. Quiet, capable, well-dressed, poised. I love them. I like their humor. I admire their courage. They know so much about life, which means that they are so tolerant of men and women. Knowledge doesn't sour them. It mellows them. They're sympathetic and human and lovable. Show me a successful business woman between 30 and 40 years of age, and I'll show you as charming, and witty, and broad-minded and companionable a woman as there is in the world. Slang? She doesn't use it, though her vocabulary is crisp and brisk and entertaining. Vulgarity? She's as far removed from it as any of her non-working sisters.

A year ago last August I returned from Europe just one jump ahead of the war. Two days after sailing from Southampton war was declared, and in twenty-four hours everybody on shipboard was talking to everybody else. The news united the entire passenger list. Among those on board was a woman of about 37, tall, dignified, charming, well dressed. There was always about her costume a bit of lace, a single good piece of jewelry, a line of hand embroidery, or some one of those indications of taste and refinement that make a dress distinctive in a quiet way. With her was her daughter, a girl of about 18. The daughter was one of those slim, pretty, graceful creatures who dance well, talk prettily, and are always severely chaperoned. The mother and daughter were always included in the little group of young people that formed soon after sailing. The mother was especially popular. She was wholesome, friendly, bright, entertaining. They had been abroad since Spring. The daughter was going to an exclusive girls' school here. At the end of the voyage a hundred people bade them good-bye with real regret.

Two months later I met the mother at the Congress Hotel in Chicago. She was stopping there. We shook hands, talked of the horrors that had transformed Europe; then I said, "What are you doing in Chicago?"

"Working, of course," she replied quietly, and smiled. "I'm on the road, you know. I sell corsets."

I shook hands with her all over again—both hands this time. And she told me, in her quietly humorous way, a story of quick-thinking saleswomanship ("salesmanism," Abe Fromkin calls it) that later I used in a McChesney story called "From Broadway to Buenos Aires."

This is why I so delight in watching Miss Ethel Barrymore as Emma McChesney. She knows the successful business woman as she really is, not as the unthinking imagine her to be. She knows that Emma McChesney could mix a devil's food cake and ice it just as successfully as she could approach a grouchy customer in Dubuque, Iowa, or carry on a conversation that has to do with books and music and philosophy. She knows that Emma dresses, and talks, and acts as quietly as any other intelligent, well-bred woman.

"Ethel Barrymore too much of a lady to play Emma McChesney!"

She's too much of a real woman not to.

SOUSA HAS LED HIS BAND MORE THAN 700,000 MILES

The Journeys Were Made in Short Marches, Which He Wrote, Played, and Heard in Every Corner of the World.

SOUSA and his band have come home to roost. After twenty-four years of wandering about the globe, during which time they have covered more than 700,000 miles, the March King and his men have settled down in the Hippodrome for the Winter. In that mammoth playhouse of gargantuan spectacles the band provides a brief musical interlude in which measures of some of the most popular of the Sousa marches are mingled with snatches of other familiar American melodies.

The days when "Manhattan Beach" and "The Washington Post" occupied the place on the piano ledge now filled by Irving Berlin's "When I Leave the World Behind," or Jerome Kern's "The Land of Let's Pretend," and when every village band began its weekly concert in the courthouse square with "Semper Fidelis" and ended with "The Stars and Stripes Forever," may be gone, but they are not forgotten, as is evidenced by the bursts of applause that greet the first notes of every swinging march in the medley that accompanies the ballet of the States.

Sousa stands there, a little more of him than in earlier years, the waxed mustache and pointed beard a trifle grayer, but otherwise the same graceful, commanding figure. His arms swing in unison from the shoulder sockets with the precision of a metronome in the characteristic Sousa sweep, and the music rolls forth as if the movements released it.

When the bandmaster had changed from his regimentals to his "cits" the other day he sat and talked about marches and music generally.

"Music, like other things," he said, "goes in cycles. For a period marches will be the prevailing form, then their popularity will wane and ballads will follow, or perhaps, the waltz, ragtime, or some other form of music. Then the cycle revolves and eventually repeats itself.

"In each phase of the cycle there will be some particular rhythm that is more popular than the others, that will be heard almost to the exclusion of all others. Of course there is always a place for the inspirational composition, and no matter what the prevailing rhythm may be, an inspired piece of music of any other form will be welcomed. The thing the real composers have to contend with is the imitators who spring up and with their uninspired imitations of the popular mode blunt the popular taste for the compositions of real merit. Finally the public suffers from auricular fatigue, and when the imitations die they die all over."

"How did it happen that you specialized in marches?" the reporter asked.

"I think I must have got the inspiration in my boyhood days," Mr. Sousa replied. "As a boy I lived in Washington—I was born in the '50s—and the capital in those days was practically an armed camp. The days and nights were filled with marching troops, and the sight and sound of them left their impress on my youthful mind.

"You know I didn't begin as a bandmaster. That came about quite accidentally. I was a violinist and played in the orchestra that toured with Offenbach on his first visit to America. It was about '80 that I was musical conductor for Mr. Mackay, now one of the mainstays of the Actors' Fund, who was producing in the Chestnut Street Theatre in Philadelphia. I had written the music for a piece he had produced, and was conducting the orchestra one night when Colonel Charles G. McCauley, Commandant of the Marine Corps, who was in the city on his annual tour of inspection of the Navy Yard, visited the theatre.

"He saw me conduct, and when he returned to Washington he called on my father and said: 'Sousa, I saw a young man with your name leading the orchestra in Philadelphia. Is he any relation to you?' My father replied that the young man was his son, whereupon Colonel McCauley said he wanted me for conductor of the Marine Band. Negotiations were begun; I could not leave my post immediately because the place was about to go on tour, but when we got to Kansas City I got a substitute and went to Washington.

"I remained there as leader of the Marine Band for twelve years. During that time I wrote many of the marches that were largely responsible for the march vogue of the '90s. While I had studied the violin principally I had some knowledge of all the other instruments, and I took a great interest in the new work.

"I had written my first march, called 'Resumption,' named for the resumption of specie payments, in '78, and after I took charge of the band others followed in rapid succession. In all I have written a hundred marches, and of these at least fifty are known throughout the world. When I went around the world at the head of my own organization the strains of 'The Stars and Stripes Forever' or 'Semper Fidelis' would invariably be greeted with applause of recognition whether we were playing in England, Germany, Sulu, or Africa. General Miles told me that once he stood with the Sultan watching the Turkish troops pass in review and as they passed the Sultan's stand the bands played 'The Liberty Bell.' In Germany, France, and England some of the marches were often used by the army bands."

The reporter, to whom the writing of music has always seemed a gift of the gods beyond the power of ordinary mortals, asked Mr. Sousa what his method of composition was.

"When I think of a subject," he said, "I dig down and down till finally I have the melody complete. Then I set it down on paper. I could write notes off by the yard and the music would be melodically correct, but you would never listen to it. Sometimes it comes quickly and easily, and again I have to keep at it for a long time. I often think there is something beyond one that furnishes the power, the inspiration to compose, and that this same mysterious something prepares the public mind for the new piece.

"I labored over 'King Cotton' for months before it finally came, while 'The Stars and Stripes Forever' was written in a week. That was the result of longing for my own country. I had been abroad with the band and was pretty homesick, and when I finally got aboard the Teutonic the strains of the march began to form themselves. I paced the deck for hours with battalions of soldiers marching through my brain. By the time we reached the Statue of Liberty 'The Stars and Stripes Forever' was ready to be transcribed. It bears the date Dec. 25, 1896, I think. Of all my marches I consider it the best, as it is the most popular.

"Then there was 'The Washington Post.' That newspaper was conducting an essay contest among the school children of the capital, and on the day of the award thousands of the entrants were to gather at the White House grounds. The Marine Band was to play and my friend Frank Hatton, one of the proprietors of the paper, said he would be my friend for life if I would write something for the occasion. So I wrote the piece and dedicated it to the paper. It proved an instantaneous success. It so happened that the dancing masters had a new dance they had been trying to popularize which the composition just fitted, and the two-step and 'The Washington Post' came into popular favor together. The music became so closely identified with the two-step that in Germany the dance is known as the post. They didn't know what the title meant over there and I have seen dance programs with little pictures of a coach and four, which was their idea of it."

"What of ragtime, and will the march ever come back?" Mr. Sousa was asked.

"As long as there are marching men—or suffragists," he answered, "the march will be popular. As for ragtime, it, like the poor, is always with us and always has been. It is not alone of America, for the rhythm of ragtime is to be found in the music of many countries. It is syncopation, and that is an old form of rhythm.

"But ragtime is characteristically American, because it expresses so well the humor of the American character. Your American is essentially a sunshine animal. He will tell you that the country is going to the dogs, and will predict utter ruin if Mr. So and So is elected. But the moment he is elected he forgets all about it, and is as cheerful as before. So the syncopated rhythm of ragtime with its inherent comedy reflects the American nature, and we find it the form in vogue today.

"Ragtime suffers through having an unfortunate name. It is really a bright composition that should have a name suggestive of diamonds or satin, and not rags. Shakespeare's rose by any name might smell as sweet, but ragtime with another name unquestionably would sound sweeter to certain highbrows and sensitive souls whom its lowly name offends.

"It was in 1892 that David Blakeley persuaded me I was well enough known to have a band of my own. The band I organized then I have led to most of the countries of the world in which there are English-speaking people. There are still three men in the organization who have covered the 700,000 miles with me."

QUITE novel and decidedly amusing was the new photoplay exposed to private view last Tuesday morning at the Broadway Theatre, the first output of a company bearing the mysterious name Kulee. This sounds as if it might be the registered title of a corporation formed to do the business of a Chinese laundry on a large scale, but it is really the name of a new film-producing company. Its first photoplay is novel in that a notable array of stars from the fairly legitimate stage aided in its preparation. It was called "How Molly Made Good." It might have been called "Little Journeys to the Homes of Famous Players," or it might have been called "Wild Life on The Tribune."

The actors assisting were Leo Ditrichstein, Robert Edeson, Julia Dean, May Robson, Cyril Scott, Julian Eltinge, Lulu Glaser, Henrietta Crosman, Henry Kolker, Charles J. Ross, and Mabel Benton. The scheme was to show them in their respective homes, and as they don't live in a neighborly group at Siasconset, but are scattered exasperatingly over the territories of Westchester, Connecticut, Long Island, and New Jersey, the camera had to travel a good deal.

To take them all in, a special scenario was constructed by Burns Mantle, dramatic editor of The Evening Mail. He might have had these thespian homes visited by a traveling insurance agent, or by a roaming burglar, and so evolved "Little Journeys to the Second Stories of Famous Actors." But he selected a reporter as a properly reckless heroine, a little Irish girl assigned to an endless chain interview, who goes through the most harrowing experiences while assembling her story.

That is where The Tribune comes in. From time to time you see Molly trotting past the statue of Horace Greeley, but it is firmly believed that the incorrigibly romantic interior was devised in a studio and not found anywhere along Park Row.

An advertisement altered the career of Marguerite Clayton, the pretty blonde heroine of Essanay's "Broncho Billy" photoplays. Miss Clayton answered the ad in person and obtained a chance to appear in one of G. M. Anderson's pictures. She registered so well on the film that Mr. Anderson promptly engaged her for regular parts. And, although the Western Essanay's Western studio at Niles, Cal., is only a short distance from the lure and lights of San Francisco, Miss Clayton prefers to stay in dusty old Niles studying, that she may perfect herself in every detail of her work.

Fred E. Wright, who staged the Essanay production of F. Marion Crawford's "In the Palace of the King," chose the "soft pedal" method in directing the 5,000 individuals used in the production, as opposed to high-handed dictatorialism. Through his own enthusiasm he inspired the crowd with their individual responsibility—with the feeling that they were part and parcel of a huge force that lived and loved and fought in the times of old Don Philip II. of Spain.

Mr. Wright established a comaraderie and then secured their co-operation by telling them the reasons for his instructions, rather than demanding that they "do this" or "do that." In other words, instead of "You are supposed to fight," it was, "This is your country, your King, your honor! Make the audience, make me, and make every one know that there is something in this for you and for you alone! Work as you have never worked before. There—there come the horsemen of the other monarch—you'll lose—run, fight—attack with the first fellow you come nearest to—and don't forget that beautiful Princess who is kept in captivity until you—you who are not running fast enough there—you save that castle."

"How any one can go back to the speaking stage after playing in photoplays I cannot understand," says Edna Mayo, one of Essanay's leading women. "The terrible monotony of playing the same piece night after night almost drives one to madness at times. In photoplays you feel when you have finished a play that you have accomplished something. It is there on the screen for all time, just as an artist's completed picture lives forever on canvas. Motion pictures are refreshing. The stage is nerve-shattering."

Harry La Pearl, one of the most celebrated of the old Hippodrome clowns, has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Company to appear in support of Marguerite Clark in a production of Edith Barnard Delano's "Still Waters." Much of the action of the story takes place under canvas, and it was for these scenes that Mr. La Pearl was engaged.

A BANDBOX BENEFIT.

The Washington Square Players, assisted by other artists, will give a benefit performance in the Bandbox Theatre Tuesday night, Nov. 16, for the Blue Cross Fund. This is a branch of Our Dumb Friends' League of London, and has for its purpose the saving of horses wounded in the war. In France there are hospitals in which more than 700 horses can be taken care of at the same time. Since the war began more than 2,000 horses have been saved for the French Government, while many have been restored to the Italian Government. Mrs. Elphinstone Maitland of 829 Park Avenue and Miss Beatrice Wanger of 607 Park Avenue are in charge of the entertainment, which will be under distinguished patronage.

THE GILBERT MEMORIAL

A MEMORIAL to Sir W. S. Gilbert has been unveiled in London. It is a bronze medallion bearing a profile relief of Gilbert's head and shoulders, on either side the figures of Comedy and Tragedy, and an inscription which reads: "W. S. Gilbert, 1836-1911. Playwright and Poet. His foe was folly and his weapon wit.".

The medallion is the work of Sir George Frampton, R. A., and has been added to the group of sculpture in the Thames Embankment Gardens, in the shadow of the Adelphi Terrace, and about 200 yards from the memorial to Sir Arthur Sullivan. This is a marble pedestal about six feet high, crowned with a bust of the composer. At the base lies a mandolin, and leaning against the shaft is the half-draped figure of a woman in bronze. One arm is outstretched above her head, and in the other her face is hidden.

In a recent issue of Musical America Wallace L. Crowly has written interestingly of a visit he once made to the famous librettist.

"I know only too well," writes Mr. Crowly, "what Gilbert would have had to say about it, if he had not lost his life that cold morning in his private bathing lake at Harrow Weald. He would have said that, like the report of Mark Twain's death, it was 'much exaggerated.' I never knew any one quite so difficult to flatter as Gilbert. And he was notoriously difficult to interview. The Pall Mall Gazette tried hard one Winter, and at last this from his secretary: 'Sir W. S. G. writes to say that if you will send along that ugly looking chap who does your music stuff so madly, on Christmas Day, at 2 o'clock, he will give him a mauvais quart d'heure.' Pleasant outlook for me! London to Harrow Weald, on the bleak Middlesex fringe of greater London, just as my Christmas turkey was at its zenith, with snow thrown in. The public doesn't care an icicle where you get your material, so long as you get it, so, just to spite the spiteful Savoyard, I went. And he gave me a two-hour talk, a rippin' lunch and a glass of old Tokay, the memory of which lingers with me yet. And then drove me, not into the cold, cold blast as I deserved, but up the hill to Bushey and to Sir Hubert Herkomer, R. A., and to a feast of art criticism which in all my experiences I had never met before and only once since. (This subsequent event was a courtly exchange of deep philosophy and subtle badinage between the late Dr. Francis Hueffer, the great critic of The Times, then the leading Wagner protagonist in this country, and the excitable Gounod, to whom Wagner was then anathema.)

"But everything approaching publicity Gilbert hated, and I have been told that one of the things which contributed to the regrettable split between the Savoyards—all three gathered to their fathers—was D'Oyly Carte's methods of obtaining publicity. Sir Arthur Sullivan was much too gentle to protest against anything.

"Fine as the memorial in bronze may be, the most remarkable thing is that, as the years roll by, the Gilbert and Sullivan operas grow in public favor, and if—as is manifest—we have no national grand opera, we have a very distinct and distinguished light opera which is entirely our own. No other native product of the same character has held the stage so long. History has always been kind to the efforts of these two gifted hands; that is to say that at intervals during the thirty-five years since the first of these works saw the light, something has occurred from time to time to give point to their satire when directed at some social weakness. The truth is they belong to all time.

"When, on Monday week, the D'Oyly Carte Company, performing the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, opened a fortnight's season at the Kensington Theatre, in a not very aristocratic suburb of London, the house was filled from floor to ceiling. The thirty-year-old 'Mikado' was chosen for the occasion, and it was as fresh and as fascinating as on the occasion of its first representation."

BROOKLYN AMUSEMENTS.

TELLER'S—"Kick-In," Willard Mack's melodrama, with Richard Bennett in the rôle of the ex-convict, played originally by Jack Barrymore.

BUSHWICK.—Keith vaudeville, with these features: Gertrude Hoffman, in her interesting production of Reinhardt's wordless play, "Sumurun," condensed for vaudeville purposes; "Cranberries," a sketch by Everett S. Ruskay; Dorothy Toye, in a program of songs.

ORPHEUM.—Dorothy Jardon, in a new collection of songs and gowns; Eddie Leonard, assisted by Austin Mack and company, in "The Minstrel's Return"; the Avon Comedy Four, in their hilarious sketch, "The New Teacher"—the featured numbers on a new variety program.

PROSPECT.—Keith variety, with T. Roy Barnes and Bessie Crawford in "The Magazine Man and the Lady"; "The Bride Shop," a miniature musical comedy, and the Courtenay Sisters, in songs, as the headline numbers.

Somewhere in Flanders.

There is a dugout in the defenses of the allied armies in Flanders which the soldiers of the Canadian contingent have named Loew's Theatre. In Toronto Marcus Loew has one of the largest playhouses, and, following the custom of giving different parts of the long-armed line familiar names, the men from Toronto christened the dugout after their favorite resort at home.

The "Self-Help" Nemo Wonderlift Corset

The most brilliant success the corset world has ever known. It opens a new era in corset service and corset selling.

The semi-elastic Wonderlift Bandlet is instantly adjustable to any figure. It uplifts, supports and holds in place the vital internal organs, preserving the health and preventing disease.

Already many thousands of physicians are prescribing the Wonderlift, not only as a remedy for women's ills, but as a preventative.

Nine out of every ten women correctly fitted in a Nemo Wonderlift Corset will never be satisfied to wear any other.

No. 554—for short full figures
No. 555—for taller full figures
No. 556—for slender to medium
} $5.00

Then there's one style de luxe, of lustrous silk brocade, for all average full figures—$10.

NOTE—To adjust the Wonderlift Bandlet after corset is laced on figure, wind both laces (on each side) evenly once around forefinger; pull slowly, straight downward—not up or out. Do not jerk or twist the laces.

Nemo Self-Reducing Corsets with Relief Bands

For a certain type of stout figure, Nemo Corsets with Relief Bands are best. The Relief Bands now are made largely of semi-elastic Lastikops Webbing. They gather up a large, soft abdomen, support it comfortably, and gradually, by a constant massage, drive away the fat and make the figure both smaller and lighter.

This very valuable and popular feature is now used in three different models, for three different types of the heavy figure:

No. 402—For short figures with small bust; excess fat on abdomen rather than on hips—$4.00.

No. 403—For women of medium height, full bust, large abdomen and hips—$4.00.

No. 405—Similar to No. 403, but with higher bust and back; for taller full figures, with large bust—$4.00.

Each has a medium skirt, with elastic bands at back to give comfort in any position.

Many thousands of stout women of medium height have worn No. 403 for years, and will wear no other. The two new models provide the same satisfaction for the shorter and taller types.

MR. ARDEN ON THE MOVIES

THERE are two things above all others which Edwin Arden, who has gone in for motion pictures, believes hamper the newer art from reaching the high standard of which it is capable. One is the lack of scenario writers with imagination; the other the fact that not enough attention is paid to the acting.

On the other hand, as far as the purely mechanical detail of stage setting, with accuracy and care for detail, is concerned, Mr. Arden believes the pictures far surpass the productions of all but possibly one or two legitimate stage producers.

"The average scenario writer is held down by the mechanics of his profession," says Mr. Arden, who is himself a playwright and an author. His play, "The Eagle's Nest," in which he starred on the legitimate stage, was recently produced as a picture. "He loses his vision, the touch which lifts the commonplace situation into the romantic, in matching up scene 26 with scenes 55 and 68.

"The popular demand is changing with the development of the art. The day for painting with a whitewash brush is gone, on the screen as well as on the legitimate stage. The growing demand is for the subtler, more delicate plot. This means that there must be scenario writers to meet the demand. It means that the most competent writers of the country must be recruited to the ranks.

"Necessarily there has developed a new type of acting. It is a subtler, quieter, more intelligent kind that demands great facial and body control. The greatest tendency in acting for the screen is to overact; not underact. There are no great fundamental differences in acting for the speaking and silent drama. It is only a difference in degree. The tempo must be slower and the gesticulation less violent when playing for the screen, because quick action before the camera appears jerky when projected.

"I think, however, that not enough attention is given to the acting. The part of the players is too often made subservient to spectacular effects. Spontaneity and individuality of expression are often killed or discouraged by the director, who is perhaps the only one who knows the complete plot. Oftentimes players go through their roles before the camera, action by action as the director tells them to, not knowing what they are to do next or how they are to do it.

"Endless time and money is spent on the details of the pictures. Local color, atmosphere, setting is purchased with no thought of expense, and the results are truly wonderful. Background, however accurate, is not going to satisfy the audience of the future, nevertheless, and as the art is developed more and more attention will be paid to those features which the camera records with merciless cruelty—acting and facial expression."

MR. KROWS'S BOOK.

Press Agent Gives Some Intimate Glimpses of the Theatre.

Arthur Edwin Krows, who was Winthrop Ames's press representative last season, has had accepted for publication in February by Henry Holt & Co. a book entitled "Play Production in America." The book is said to be the first of its kind, having been written to fill a void inadequately covered by occasional magazine articles and brief references to the business of the playhouse.

It summarizes material gathered during the last ten years, and carries a play through from the period when it is submitted to the producer to that time when it has reached its ultimate place in motion pictures, after successive stages of metropolitan, road, and stock exhibition. It tells how theatres are built and managed; how stages are planned and operated, how scenery is designed, painted, and transported; how stage directors achieve results; how carpenters, property men, and electricians work; how press agents plan and effect their coups, and how audiences are organized and accommodated—always providing an abundance of specific instances drawn mainly from recent or forthcoming American productions.

Incidentally, intimate descriptions will be given for the first time in any publication of some of the most closely guarded secrets of stage effect, together with accounts of some eight or ten important innovations shortly to be made. Profuse illustrations will accompany the text.

MINUTE VISITS IN THE WINGS

ANNA HELD arrived one day last week from Paris, and when the motion-picture men read of her presence in the papers she was immediately besieged with offers to act for the movies. She accepted Oliver Morosco's bid of $30,000 for one picture, and a day or two later the Palace management arranged for her appearance there this week.

Before leaving Paris Miss Held turned over her town residence for use as a convalescent hospital. She has been singing to the wounded men, and, telling of her experience, she said:

"I have been singing to the sick in base hospitals for over a year now, and all of us artistes agree in using only the liveliest, merriest numbers of the music halls. Of old they used to sing sad, sentimental ballads to the poor boys; but the doctors and the singers are both agreed that this is outmoded and not the proper thing. Give them the glad, bright, zippy, zestful things that put joy into their hearts and the ambition to be back on the boulevards with a pretty girl on the arm and the lights of the theatre glittering just ahead.

"I cannot tell you how my poor France is suffering. All the golden youth are at the front. Thousands have given their lives for La Patrie, and thousands more will die. We pay the price willingly, for every man, woman, and child in France is coldly resolved to fight this war out. Not unless France was exterminated would we quit; but, thank God, it is not going to end that way.

"The stage is outwardly dead in Paris. There is no business in the theatres, but the dramatists and the players are very much alive. New plays are being tried out privately in ballrooms, in chateaux, in places where only invitations will admit. Many war plays banned by the censor have been produced in this way. Truly, I have seen some most wonderful dramas that were shown only to the elect and the proceeds of the subscription given to the wounded. When the war is over there will be an abundance of great material for the theatre. The war brings out the best in our race, and the men and women are doing splendid work that has the ring of true humanity. The arts will not die in France. Far from it. They will arise glorious, like a sundawn, and my beloved theatre will be the first of the arts in the new era.

"After Paris, New York seems incredibly gay—so much dancing and flowers and motors and wine and such late hours. In Paris we all retire long before midnight. Here no one seems to think of bed before dawn. I am really dazzled and bewildered by this riot of pleasure."

EILEEN MOLYNEUX of Ned Wayburn's "Town Topics" says that she has at least three good sturdy nationalities in her composition, because her father was French and her mother Irish-English. She pronounces her name "Molynux" and not "Molyno," as most people persist in calling her. She is only 20 years old, and was a leading beauty at the London Alhambra before she came to this country last year. In fact, she was one of the most photographed young women of the United Kingdom before the war.

Miss Molyneux's love for America is quite sincere. She has taken apartments at the Barnard on Central Park West with her chum, Miss Robson, also an English actress, and as the lease has two years to run it is presumed that she has no intention of returning to England, war or no war. The only fault she has to find with America is the frequency of holidays.

"In the first six months of my stay here," she says, "I ran up against a full round dozen holidays in different parts of your big country. It was awfully annoying, don't you know? Stores closed, and dressmakers' shops tight up. In California I ran across a Native Sons' Day, and in Boston a Bunker Hill Day and Patriots' Day, and in other places such holidays as Mr. Washington's natal day and Mr. Lincoln's."

PETER PAGE, the young man who gives an amusing performance in the dual rôles of a dancing master and baseball umpire in Ned Wayburn's "Town Topics" at the Century, is in reality an athletic young man who, before he went on the stage two years ago, occupied the dual positions of dramatic critic and sporting editor of The Lexington (Ky.) Leader. In private life his name is Maurice Peter Brunage, and he comes of one of the old Kentucky French families. He was reared in the Blue Grass region of trotting and running horses and has a national reputation as an expert turf reporter. Every afternoon when there are races in this vicinity young Page can be seen in the paddock or in the grandstand; on matinée days he is fuming and fretting on the Century stage, sending call boys out to get the racing results from the tickers.

It was as dramatic critic of the Lexington paper, however, that Brunage made up his mind that his mission in life was to give the stage a boost. He joined a vaudeville act in Cincinnati two years ago, and made a small-sized hit, but he was unknown in New York until last Spring, when he appeared at the Palace Theatre in a satire on ballroom dancing called "The Red Fox Trot Ball." It was in this that he attracted the attention of Ned Wayburn, who then had "Town Topics" in mind, and he engaged the young newspaper man under a long-term contract. As Mr. Page has become something of a matinée idol it may not be ill-timed to state that he is 23 years old, unmarried, and unengaged.

PEGGY WOOD'S BIG IDEA

A METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE star is the one to which Peggy Wood hopes to hitch her wagon, and while she may never be able to catch up, at least she believes the pursuit will keep her headed in the right direction. The attractive young leading woman of "Young America," who began her career only a few years ago as a chorus girl, was telling of her ambition the other day.

"I may never achieve it," she said, "but my ambition is to be a prima donna at the Metropolitan. Perhaps if I work hard enough some day I may be, who knows? But even if I fail, at least I will be striving to do something big, and will have set a high goal for myself, and that is much better than floundering along from season to season, doing whatever offers. It is so easy to fall into a rut, and so many actresses do it. They are successful in a part and are given another like it. The next year they may get one just as good or not quite so good. And so they go along with no particular aim, and pretty soon they have passed the time in their careers when they might have grown into something bigger.

"Perhaps I may never become an opera singer, but with that as my ideal I think I am liable to go further than I might otherwise. In any event, I shall keep up my singing and shall do some more of it on the stage. A year ago I had no more idea of doing dramatic work than anything. It was when we were playing 'Hello Broadway' at the Astor last Spring that Mr. Cohan said to me one day: 'You know, I think you ought to try dramatic work. There is something in your speaking voice that is very pleasing.' When you have worked for Mr. Cohan you come to have implicit faith in his judgment, so when he came to me later and said he had a fine part for me I took it. And now I am glad I did, for it is something different, and one can't have too much experience.

"Isn't it funny, in the five years of my brief stage career I have never played away from this block in New York. When I wanted to go on the stage Arthur Hammerstein gave me a place in the chorus of 'Naughty Marietta' because he said I would have to have some experience, and that was the best way to get it. 'Naughty Marietta' was done at the New York Theatre, just across the street. Then I went to the Globe and stayed there till last season, having parts in 'The Three Romeos,' 'Over the River,' 'The Lady of the Slipper,' and 'The Madcap Duchess.'"

Miss Wood is the daughter of Eugene Wood, the writer, and he is naturally greatly interested in Miss Peggy's career.

"Father is my most severe critic, and at the same time one of my most helpful ones," she said. "He comes to rehearsals and says: 'I don't like that scene. You don't quite get it. Try it this way.' And very often he's right, and before I get through I have improved it a lot."

QUERIES FROM TIMES READERS AND ANSWERS TO THEM

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

No answers can be given regarding legal or medical matters, card problems, propriety in dress, correctness of English sentences, and values of stamps and coins, nor to questions of a trivial character or of concern only to the questioner.

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered; only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay

Inez de Castro.

"PHANTOM."—In an issue of THE TIMES you mention as one of the principal works of P. C. Comte, an article on "The Burning of Inez de Castro." Will you please tell me who Inez de Castro was, with dates of particular events in her life? Can you tell me something of the de Castro family and its origin?

Inez de Castro was born in the early part of the fourteenth century (the exact date is not known) in Spanish Galicia, and is famous in history and romance as the mistress and probably the wife of Pedro I. of Portugal. Her father was Pedro Fernandez de Castro and her mother was a noble Spanish lady. She was educated at the semi-oriental Court of Juan Manuel, Duke of Peñafiel, with her cousin, the Duke's daughter, Costanza. On the latter's marriage to the young Dom Pedro, infante of Portugal, Inez went with her to the Portuguese Court, and the young Prince speedily fell in love with her. The easy-going standards of the time permitted their life together as an openly accepted thing, and Inez was a great and powerful lady in Lisbon. When Pedro's wife Costanza died in 1345 he might have married Inez if it had not been for the jealousy among the nobles, both in Portugal and Spain, of the rising power of the de Castro family. In 1354, however, Pedro, according to his own statement, did marry Inez, in spite of the nobles' anger. This was so much that it prevailed upon the old King Alfonso to do away with the lady, and in 1355 he and three "familiars" went to the palace where Pedro and Inez lived and stabbed her to death. The story goes that the King himself was melted by the beauty and tears of Inez, and would have drawn back, but the nobles who accompanied him on his errand realized that it was too late for withdrawal, and killed her at once. The Infante immediately raised a formidable rebellion against his father, but was pacified by the exile of the three murderers and a large share of the government of the Kingdom. When Alfonso died, in 1357, two of the three "familiars" were caught and killed with horrible tortures; the third escaped. The story goes that the dead body of Inez, which had been hastily buried immediately after her death in the Church of Santa Clara, was exhumed, robed, and crowned beside the King, with the nobles and ladies of Portugal forced to pay fealty to the "Queen" and salute her dead hand. But the tale cannot be substantiated, and is probably untrue. Inez was buried with great magnificence in Alcobaca, however, after Pedro became King. The late reigning house of Portugal is descended from Inez's brother, Alvaro Perez de Castro.

Essay on Preparedness.

ORR'S ISLAND.—Will you kindly give me particulars as to the $500 prize offered for an essay on preparedness? How long may it be? When must the manuscript be submitted?

The National Security League announced, on Sept. 26, the offer of a prize of $500 by Jules S. Bache, the banker, for the best essay or article, demonstrating the necessity and wisdom of "reasonable preparedness against war by the United States."

The offer was made through the league, and essays must reach the league's offices, 31 Pine Street, by noon of Nov. 1. No article fewer than 500 words will be considered. There is no limitation as to age or sex and all competitors must use a nom-de-plume or number.

School of Chiropody.

CELIA GOLDSTEIN.—The School of Chiropody at 213 West 125th Street is registered by the Regents, and claims to be the only institution of its kind in the world that measures up to the standard of the Education Department of the State of New York. Its clinics for free treatment of the poor are open nightly, excepting Saturdays and Sundays, from 7:30 to 10 o'clock.

Naturalization.

L. E. G.—Will you please answer the following question for me in regard to my naturalization as an American citizen? I came to this country from Paris in 1906, at the age of 18. In 1906 I declared my intention of becoming an American citizen and took out my first papers in Boston. I have been living in the United States all the time since. But I am told by friends that I must take out my first papers again and wait two years before being fully naturalized, as I have waited too long. It is still my bona fide intention to become a citizen. Can you tell me whether I must renew my application?

Under the decision of the United States District Courts for the First and Second Circuits, declarations of intention that are more than seven years old are invalid for petition purposes, and it is therefore necessary to make another declaration. This also answers the inquiry of David Coleman.

The United States Boundary.

G. C. S.—Will you please answer the following questions: How was the Oregon territory settled upon the United States? What agreements or treaties cover the boundaries of Canada and the United States?

The boundary of the United States and Canada defining what is now the State of Oregon as a part of the United States territory was settled by treaty with England in 1846. In 1792 the discovery by Captain Grey of Boston of the mouth of the Columbia River formed the original basis of American claims to possession of this part of the New World. As soon as Jefferson became President of the United States he received from Congress an appropriation for the exploring expedition of Lewis and Clark to the Oregon region, but before the expedition was ready to start the Louisiana Purchase gave the United States possession of much of the territory to be explored, and contiguous possession of the unoccupied and almost unexplored Oregon district. Russia, Spain, England, and the United States were early claimants of the Oregon region, Russia because of the adjacent possession of Alaska, Spain because of the adjacent possession of California, England because of her adjacent possessions and other claims of exploration as well. But in 1818 John Quincy Adams, as Secretary of State, claimed the entire Oregon district for the United States settlement of the argument with England over this was postponed for ten years and the land was left open for occupation to both parties. In the Florida treaty with Spain (1819-21) Adams received a waiver of any claim Spain might have to territory north of the forty-second parallel.

In 1829 the agreement with England for joint occupation was renewed subject to a year's notice. Congress was of the opinion that we could never occupy so inaccessible and "barren" a land, and that we had no right to the region; but in 1844 the Democratic party challenged England by demanding the "sole" occupation of Oregon; there followed the campaign dispute under the slogan of "Fifty-four-forty or fight." But the Governments of the United States and England agreed on a divis on of the disputed territory, leaving to England the district north of the forty-ninth parallel, which was already occupied by Englishmen.

The Maine boundary discussion after the "Aroostook War" carefully defined the northeastern boundary line from a point below Sault Ste. Marie to the forty-ninth parallel. This matter was arranged by treaty with England in 1842.

The Louisiana Purchase boundary in the Northwest was arranged by treaty with England in 1818. The Alaska boundary was fixed by the convention of 1903.

British Dominions.

G. C. S.—I should like a complete list of British possessions and protectorates.

The imperial dominions of Great Britain, as listed in Whitaker's Almanac, are as follows: In Europe—The United Kingdom, Isle of Man, Channel Islands, Malta and Gozo, Gibraltar. In Asia—The Indian Empire, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, Malay States, Federated and others; Hongkong, Weihaiwei, North Borneo, Brunei, Sarawak, Cyprus. In Africa—Cape Province, Natal, Transvaal, Orange Free State, Basutoland, Bechuanaland, Rhodesia, Gambia, Gold Coast, Sierra Leone, Northern Nigeria, Southern Nigeria, Somaliland, British East Africa, Uganda, Zanzibar, Nyassaland, Egypt, Sudan, Mauritius, Seychelles, Ascension, St. Helena. In America—Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Northwest Territories, Newfoundland, Jamaica, Bahamas, Leeward Islands, Windward Islands, Barbados, Trinidad and Tobago, British Guiana, British Honduras, Bermuda, Falkland Islands, South Georgia. In Australasia—New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania, Western Australia, New Zealand, Fiji, Papua, and islands in the Pacific.

Secretary Lansing.

R. D. C.—Will you please tell me what Secretary of State Lansing's politics are?

Secretary Lansing is a Democrat.

Physicians from South America.

R. F. HERES.—Can a doctor of medicine from a South American Faculty practice his profession in the State of New York? If so, under what conditions is he permitted to do so?

A doctor of medicine from a South American Faculty may practice his profession in this State if he passes the examination of the State Board of Examiners and complies with its conditions. Detailed questions should be asked of the Board of Examiners direct.

The Rosicrucian Society.

MRS. M. M.—Will you kindly tell me what the society "Rosae Crucis" is? I have seen references to it, and thought it might be a college fraternity or a society of amateur photographers. In any case, I should like to know what it is.

The Societas Rosicruciana has as its object "the teaching and study of moral philosophy and ethical principles through the exploration of the archæological, historical, and traditional subjects of Rosicrucianism, Freemasonry, Druidism, and other arcane organizations." It is organized in the United States, Germany, France, Spain, and Egypt, and maintains colleges on the west coast of Africa. This also answers the question of E. H. M.

My father, who was a native of Martinique, F. W. I., went to the United States when he was still a very young boy, and made his residence at Aroma, Ill. Some years later he became a naturalized citizen of the States, and when the civil war broke out he enlisted as a volunteer at Aroma and fought in the Northern army till July 22, 1865. He then returned to Martinique, where he got married. I was born then in Saint-Pierre, Martinique, but soon before the volcanic eruption of Mount Pelee I came to Porto Rico, at the age of 18, and held some positions with the Government of this island.

I respectfully beg you to inform me about the following:

1.—Am I or not a legal citizen of the United States of America?

2.—Whom may I address in the Government of that country to have my papers in such a form that I may prove my citizenship?

3.—Are my children citizens of the United States of America?

My father received to his death a pension from the Government of the United States.

All children who are minors when their father is naturalized, or who are born after his naturalization as a citizen of the United States, are themselves citizens of the United States.

The Anglo-Japanese Treaty.

H. G. V.—Will you kindly let me know if there is a termination date to the Anglo-Japanese defensive treaty?

The Anglo-Japanese alliance, signed Aug. 12, 1905, was renewed for ten years under signature of July 13, 1911, with the insertion of a clause that "should either High Contracting Party conclude a treaty of general arbitration with a third power, it is agreed that nothing in this Agreement shall entail upon said Contracting Party an obligation to go to war with the power with whom said treaty is in force."

Votes from Washington.

J. L.—By answering the following question you will oblige a great many people of my acquaintance: Does a resident of Washington, D. C., vote in Washington? If not, where does he vote? If he votes outside of Washington, why is it that a man can live in one location and vote in another?

Residents of the District of Columbia have never had the right to vote there for national officers or on other matters of national concern, since the territory embraced in it was ceded to the United States and became the seat of the Federal Government. Government officials and all Washington residents who are in the employ of the Government are permitted to vote from their last place of residence. Residents of Washington who are not in the Government employ can only vote on matters of local concern in the District of Columbia.

Immigration and Naturalization.

D. S.—Will you please tell me what percentage of the immigrants from England, France, Germany, Russia, and Italy become actually naturalized as American citizens?

The Naturalization Bureau has not compiled statistics relating to the sources of naturalization by nationalities, and it is not therefore possible to supply the information asked.

Alexandra Palace.

H. L.—Will you kindly inform me if Alexandra Palace, London, W., is being used as a place of detention for German prisoners of war? If not, to what use is it put?

Alexandra Palace was put to use early in the war as a shelter for Belgian refugees.

Admission to West Point.

INQUIRER.—I have heard that a college student who has attended college for one year is eligible to be appointed to Annapolis or West Point without examination. Is that true? Would it apply to students from agricultural colleges?

"General Orders No. 38," which answers your question, was signed in the War Department, May 22, 1914; it applies only to the United States Military Academy, not to Annapolis. The order is as follows:

"A candidate for admission to the United States Military Academy from a State, District, or Territory may be excused by the Academic Board from the mental examination for admission upon one of the following conditions:

"1. That he present a properly attested certificate that he is a regularly enrolled student in good standing without condition in any university, college, or technological school accredited by the United States Military Academy, provided that the entrance requirements for the course he is pursuing in such institution require proficiency in subjects amounting to fourteen units of the College Entrance Examination Board, which must include mathematics A1, (algebra to quadratics.) A2,, (algebra, quadratics and beyond,) and C, (plane geometry;) English A (reading and practice) and B, (study and practice,) as outlined by the College Entrance Examination Board. A certificate indicating enrollment at an irregular time or for the specific purpose of obtaining such certificate will not be accepted.

2. That he present a properly attested certificate of graduation from a preparatory school or public high school which is on the accredited list of one of the institutions referred to in Paragraph 1 of this order, provided that he is thus certified to have established proficiency in subjects amounting to fourteen units of the College Entrance Examination Board, which must include mathematics A1, A2, and C, and English A and B, as outlined by the College Entrance Examination Board. A certificate indicating graduation at an irregular time for the specific purpose of obtaining such certificate will not be accepted.

3. That he present a properly attested certificate from the College Entrance Examination Board that he has passed fourteen units of its examinations, including mathematics A1, A2, and C, English A and B, and history A (ancient history) and D (American history and civil government).

Destroying Stumps.

J. D. W.—I have heard that an article appeared in THE TIMES recently, describing a method of destroying stumps by the use of an acid. Can you tell me something of this?

The method to which you refer is German, and is as follows: A hole is bored in the stump, and into it are poured equal parts of nitric and sulphuric acids. After a few weeks the largest stump of hardwood is so eaten by the acids that it is easily crumbled with a pick. This way of destroying stumps is of course considered simpler and safer than the ordinary American method.

Identity of a Flower.

In answer to an inquiry from Keith St. John as to the identity of a small five-petaled, orange-red flower, in shape like the white sandwort, C. A. Cabot writes:

"I think this flower is the pimpernel, or poor man's weatherglass. It is very common on Monhegan Island."

The Wife of an Alien.

INQUIRER.—Please tell me whether the wife of a naturalized American citizen of German birth loses her American citizenship at the death of her husband? She has a child, and has lived in this country since her husband's death.

The citizenship of a woman follows that of her husband. If she remains in this country after her husband's death she retains her American citizenship, but if she wishes to return to her native country and takes up a permanent residence there her American citizenship may lapse.

An Immigrant's Wife.

W. L. K.—May a foreigner leaving his wife in their native land come to the United States and be naturalized as a citizen of the United States while his wife remains in the old country?

There is no statement of law to the effect that a man may not become naturalized as an American citizen while his wife remains in their native land. As a matter of fact, however, applications for citizenship from alien whose wives have remained in the "old country" are usually dismissed by the courts. The reason for this is that in the naturalization of an alien his wife becomes naturalized also, and must therefore, as an American citizen, be admitted to the United States. But since she might be ineligible for admittance, from sickness or some other cause, citizenship is commonly denied an alien whose wife has not already, as he has, passed the examination and inspection of the immigration authorities.

Liverpool Docks.

J. W. B.—Does not the Mersey Docks and Harbor Board operate the Liverpool Docks on behalf of the citizens of Liverpool, who constructed the docks and had the foreshore rights?

The Mersey Docks and Harbor Board operates the Liverpool docks in behalf of the City of Liverpool.

British Government.

A. F.—Will you please tell me who are the present members of the English Parliament? Or if that is too much, will you please tell me who are some of the leading men?

The entire list of the members of the British Parliament, or even of the House of Commons, would be far too long for publication in the Query Column. The House of Commons numbers 670 members, 465 for England, 30 for Wales, 72 for Scotland and 103 for Ireland. In the House of Lords there are 638 members, 3 Princes of the Blood, 2 Archbishops, 21 Dukes, 25 Marquesses, 122 Earls, 45 Viscounts, 24 Bishops, 353 Barons, 16 Scotch Peers, and 27 Irish Peers; the House of Lords comprises the whole peerage of England. Your question as to leaders in British politics and Government is best answered, however, by the publication of the coalition Cabinet, as this was chosen of the leaders of the different parties to form a representative national ministry. The Cabinet is as follows: Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith; Minister Without Portfolio, Lord Lansdowne; Lord Chancellor, Sir Stanley Buckmaster; President of Council, Lord Crewe; Lord Privy Seal, Lord Curzon; Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Reginald McKenna; Home Secretary, Sir J. Simon; Foreign Minister, Sir Edward Grey; Colonial Secretary, Mr. Arthur Bonar Law; India Office, Mr. Austen Chamberlain; War Office, Lord Kitchener; Minister of Munitions, Mr. David Lloyd George; First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. Arthur Balfour; President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Walter Runciman; Local Government Board, Mr. Walter Long; Duchy of Lancaster, Mr. Winston Spencer Churchill; Irish Secretary, Mr. Augustine Birrell; Scottish Office, Mr. McKinnon Wood; Agriculture, Lord Selborne; Works Office, Mr. Lewis Vernon Harcourt; Education Board, Mr. A. Henderson, and Attorney General, Sir Edward Carson.

The Assault on Sumner.

EDWARD A. NICHOL.—Will you kindly tell me who it was that assaulted Charles Sumner? Was it Brooks of South Carolina?

Charles Sumner was assaulted by Preston S. Brooks, a relative of Senator Butler of South Carolina, whom Sumner had assailed in his able, but exceptionally bitter, anti-slavery speech, "The Crime Against Kansas," May 20, 1856. On the 22d of May, as Sumner was sitting writing at his desk in the Senate Chamber, Brooks attacked him with a cane and beat him to insensibility.

Italian History.

Pope Pius IX. was chosen, largely by the Italian Cardinals, in June, 1846, to carry out certain political reforms in what were still the States of the Church. In 1847 he enacted some reforms, and would willingly have stopped there. But Italy was aroused against Austria, demanded a lay ministry, a constitution, and an Italian Federation to war against the Austrian Empire. There were various disturbances in different parts of Italy, and on the 12th of January, 1848, the first of the revolutions of that memorable year broke out in Sicily. There were also disturbances in Naples, and following these came demands for a constitution for Piedmont. March 4, 1848, this demand was granted; and the charter was given which was destined to be the constitution of the future Kingdom of Italy. Later serious revolts broke out in Lombardy, and in Rome the Pope granted one concession after another to the Italians. By this time—1848—there were three main political tendencies in Italy: the union of North Italy, under Charles Albert of Sardinia and an alliance with the Pope and Naples, a federation of the different States under their rulers, and a united republic of all Italy. But all parties were agreed for war against Austria, and on March 29 this war, the first of the wars against Austria, which were not over until 1870, broke out. We have not space to recount the battles and events of this year; it lasted until the Summer of 1849, and left the Austrians victorious in Italy and the Italians determined on union and freedom; to quote the Encyclopaedia Britannica, "The Italian cause had been crushed, but revolution and war had strengthened the feeling of unity, for Neapolitans had fought for Venice, Lombards for Rome, and Piedmontese for all Italy. Piedmont was shown to possess the qualities necessary to constitute the nucleus of a great nation."

The Italians came to realize that they could never hope to gain their liberty without assistance from one of the foreign powers, and they sought aid from Napoleon III., who was really friendly toward Italy, and had personal sympathy for their cause. In July, 1858, it was arranged between Napoleon III. and Cavour that France should supply 200,000 men and Piedmont 100,000 for the expulsion of the Austrians, and that in exchange for French assistance Piedmont would cede Savoy and perhaps Nice to France, and a marriage should be arranged between Victor Emmanuel's daughter, Clotilde, and Jerome Bonaparte. April 20, 1859, Francis Joseph declared war on Italy, July 11 the French and Austrian Emperors and King Victor Emmanuel signed an agreement ceding Lombardy to Piedmont, allowing Austria to retain Venetia with the understanding that it was to be governed by liberal methods, restoring the deposed rulers of Tuscany, Parma and Modena, reforming the Papal States, and making the Pope President of an Italian Federation, which should include Austria as mistress of Venetia.

Napoleon, who had not received the grant of Nice and Savoy because he had not succeeded in driving the Austrians out of Italy, soon opened negotiations for another offensive movement. He once more asked for Nice and Savoy as the price of his consent to the union of the central provinces with the Italian Kingdom of the North. This treaty was signed March 24, 1860. The duchies of Tuscany and Romagna voluntarily annexed themselves to Piedmont, and on April 2, 1860, the new Italian Parliament assembled at Turin. In the Summer of that year Garibaldi conquered Naples and Sicily and declared himself Dictator in King Victor Emmanuel's name. Oct. 29 Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi met, and on Nov. 7 they entered Naples together; Garibaldi gave up his own power into the King's hands, refused the title and other honors that were offered him, and retired to his home. The conquests of the last enemy strongholds followed shortly, and on Feb. 18 the first Italian Parliament assembled at Turin, and Victor Emmanuel was proclaimed King of United Italy. The new nation was recognized by Great Britain within a fortnight, by France three months later, and subsequently by the other powers. But Venetia remained in the hands of the Austrians, Rome was still wanting, and there were many problems to be settled by the new kingdom. The famous Prusso-Italian Alliance was concluded April 8, 1866. June 7 Italy declared war against Austria. This war ended with the cession of Venetia to Italy Oct. 10, 1866. With the fall of Napoleon's power in 1870 and the abstention of the European Governments from interference, Victor Emmanuel took possession of Rome, Sept. 11 Italian troops entered Papal territory. Sept. 20, 1870, the last Papal garrison surrendered, and Victor Emmanuel became King of the entire Italian peninsula. He made his solemn entry into Rome in July, 1872.

Santa Claus.

D. B. L.—Will you kindly print in the Query Column of THE TIMES the origin of Santa Claus and any further points of interest relative thereto?

Our word Santa Claus is a corruption of the Dutch San Nicolaas, and the story of the original saint from whom the name and the custom come is told in the Encyclopedia Britannica as follows: "St. Nicholas, Bishop of Myra, in Lycia, a saint honored by the Greeks and the Latins on December 6. His cult is as celebrated as his history is obscure. All the accounts that have come down to us are of a purely legendary character, and it is impossible to find any single incident confirmed historically. The main facts of his life are usually given as follows: He was Bishop of Myra at the time of the Emperor Diocletian, was persecuted, tortured for the faith, and kept in prison until the more tolerant reign of Constantine, and was present at the Council of Nicaea. It should be observed that this story circumstantially agreed by the historians and that St. Athanasius, who knew all the notable Bishops of the period, never mentions Nicholas, Bishop of Myra. The oldest known monument of the cult of St. Nicholas seems to be the Church of Sts. Priscus and Nicholas built at Constantinople by the Emperor Justinian. In the West, the name of St. Nicholas appears in the ninth century martyrologies, and churches dedicated to him are to be found at the beginning of the eleventh century. It is more especially, however, from the time of the removal of his body to Bari, in Apulia, that his cult became popular. The inhabitants of Bari organized an expedition, seized his remains by means of a ruse, and transported them to Bari, where they were received in triumph on the 9th of May, 1087, and where the foundations were laid of a new basilica in his honor. This was the origin of a famous and still popular pilgrimage. There are nearly 400 churches in England dedicated to St. Nicholas. He is the patron saint of Russia; the special protector of children, scholars, merchants and sailors; and is invoked by travelers against robbers. In art St. Nicholas is represented with various attributes, being most commonly depicted with three children standing in a tub by his side. Of the various interpretations of this, none is absolutely certain. One explanation has been sought in the legend of St. Nicholas miraculously restoring to life three rich youths, who had been murdered, cut up, and concealed in a salting tub by a thievish innkeeper or butcher, in whose house they had taken lodging.

"A legend of his surreptitious bestowal of dowries upon the three daughters of an impoverished citizen who, unable to procure fit marriages for them, was about to give them up to a life of shame, is said to have originated the old custom of giving presents in secret on the Eve of St. Nicholas, subsequently transferred to Christmas Day. Hence the association of Christmas with 'Santa Claus,' an American corruption of the Dutch form, 'San Nicolaas,' the custom being brought to America by the early Dutch colonists."

The Turkey.

READER.—Will you kindly tell me what is the origin of the barnyard turkey, and of its name and when and where it was known for the first time?

How the turkey came by its name has been a moot question for a long time. The fowl is an American bird which was introduced to Europe from the New World, and had nothing whatever to do with Turkey or the Turks. The name turkey, however, was originally applied to the fowl which is now known as the guinea-fowl, and some authors in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries confounded the two species. As both birds became more common and better known, to quote the Encyclopedia Britannica, "the distinction was gradually perceived, and the name turkey became restricted to that from the New World, possibly because of its repeated call-note, to be syllabled 'turk, turk, turk,' whereby it may be almost said to have named itself. The turkey, so far as we know, was first described by Oviedo in his 'Sumario de la natural historia de las Indias,' said to have been published in 1527. The chief point of interest in his account is that he speaks of the species having been already taken from New Spain (Mexico) to the islands and to Castilla del Oro (Darien,) where it bred in a domestic state among the Christians. Much labor has been given by various naturalists to ascertain the date of its introduction to Europe, but after all that has been written it is plain that evidence concurs to show that the bird was established in Europe by 1530—a very short time to have elapsed since it became known to the Spaniards, which could hardly have been before 1518, when Mexico was discovered." There are two kinds of turkey, the North American and the smaller and more brilliant bird found in Guatemala, Honduras, &c. The Northern wild turkey is now almost extinct, and the Southern wild turkey is rare.

The Carpathia.

GEORGE H. FOOTE, Jr.—Will you please tell me the date and day of the Carpathia's sailing for Italy, early in July, two years ago?

The Carpathia sailed from New York for Genoa at 12:10 P. M. Wednesday, July 2, 1913.

A Latin Motto.

INQUIRER.—Please give me the translation of the following, and tell me what language it is—I have seen it written recently: "Esse quarn videre."

The correct form of the motto, which is in Latin, but appears to have been rather illegibly written when you saw it, is "Esse quam videre." It means, "To be is better than to seem," or, in literal translation, "To be rather than to seem."

From the Calendar.

J. B. ROBERTSON.—You will do me and my friends a favor by informing us what day of the week was Sept. 11, 1894.

Sept. 11, 1894, was Tuesday.

Farming in Scotland.

J. CUNNINGHAM.—Would you be kind enough to tell me through your Queries and Answers department how Scotchmen rank among the nations of the world as farmers, and about how many farms there are in Scotland and in England?

Parts of Scotland are fertile and well-cultivated, and there is in various institutions careful study as to the best means for bettering agriculture in the country and making the most of the land's opportunities and the care of the soil. Of the entire area of Scotland, 21.9 per cent. is totally uncultivable. The Central Lowland is, generally speaking, the agricultural centre of the country, although the low-lying land extending around from Aberdeen to Moray Firth is also devoted to agriculture. The southern uplands afford excellent sheep pasture, and the plainland to the south is an exceptionally good dairy region. There is very fertile land in the valley of the Tweed, which is a rich agricultural region. The dryer eastern part of the country is best for agriculture. In the Lothians, Fife, and the Merse of Berwick, the average number of wheat bushels to the acre is the largest in Great Britain. Scotland also boasts fruit districts of importance. Oats, barley, potatoes and roots are extensively cultivated. We have no figures available as to the number of farms in England and Scotland. Agricultural research and experiment in Scotland is carried on by the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland, the Agricultural Research Association of the Northeastern Counties, the Royal Botanic Garden at Glasgow, Mareschal College of Aberdeen University, and the Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College.

Harry Lauder.

W. R.—Please tell me when Harry Lauder first appeared in New York and where; and how many seasons he has appeared in this country.

Harry Lauder's first appearance in New York was at the New York Theatre, on Nov. 8, 1907. He has appeared in this country five seasons.

Anti-Trust Suits.

T. A. M.—Will you please tell me what suits the Government has won against corporations for violating the Sherman law, and if possible the dates of such decisions?

The Government won its case against the Eastman Kodak Company Aug. 24, 1915; in the case of the International Harvester Company a decision for the Government was filed Aug. 12, 1914, and on June 12, 1915, the Supreme Court ordered that the case be reargued in the Autumn of this year; The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company, a coal contracts with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Coal Company were held to be a violation of the Sherman law, June 21, 1915; thirty-six members of the Master Plumbers' Association were convicted, under the anti-trust law, in Des Moines, Feb. 24, 1915; the famous decision against the Danbury Hatters was handed down Nov. 12, 1914, and the seven more famous dissolution decree against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad was filed Oct. 17, 1914; the court awarded triple damages against the American Sea Green Slate Company of Granville, Nov. 6, 1914; a decree granting the relief sought by the Government was entered in the case of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company when it was accused of establishing a telephone monopoly on the Pacific Coast, June 2, 1914; the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local Unions 9 and 134 et al. were permanently enjoined from interfering with the interstate business of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company," Feb. 27, 1914; the Elgin Board of Trade et al. were accused of restraining commerce in butter and butter fats in the Northern District of Illinois, and a decree granting the relief sought by the Government was entered April 27, 1914; in the case of the National Cash Register Company, twenty-nine of the thirty defendants were found guilty of violating the law, fines amounting to $135,000 and jail sentences were imposed, and the case was appealed; Union Pacific Railroad and Trading Company et al. and the Pacific and Arctic Railway and Navigation Company et al., charged with attempts to monopolize wharving and transportation in a district of Alaska, pleaded guilty and were fined, in February, 1914; an opinion was handed down against Isaac Wilding et al., charged with restraining trade in milk in New England, March 23, 1914.

Boccaccio and the Stage.

M. A. A.—Will you please tell me if Boccaccio was ever dramatized, and who was in the cast?

Boccaccio's tales have furnished suggestions for innumerable plays written for the Italian stage and were the origin of many plots and incidents employed in the English theatre from the time of the Elizabethans. The figure of Boccaccio himself, together with several shreds from his stories, was fancifully used in a comic opera called "Boccaccio," by Franz von Suppe. An analogy is the "Contes d'Hoffmann." "Boccaccio" was first presented in this city at the United Square Theatre on May 17, 1880, with Jeannie Winston in the rôle of Boccaccio. An Italian company gave it here within recent seasons. With an English libretto by H. B. Farnie and R. Reece, "Boccaccio" was presented in London for the first time in 1882 at the Comedy.

Race and Ancestry.

H. L.—My great grandparents were born in Posen, Germany, at the time it belonged to Poland. I was also born there, but came to this country in infancy and am an American citizen. Am I of German or Polish descent?

If your ancestors were Polish, rather than German, in racial affiliations, you are of Polish descent.

Bismarck and the Rothschilds.

H. D. K.—Is it not a fact that Bismarck expelled the Rothschild banking house from Germany?

We can find no statement or even rumor to the effect that Bismarck ever expelled the banking house of the Rothschilds, even temporarily, from Germany. The only time that Bismarck ever came into unpleasant relations with the Rothschilds was during the Franco-Prussian war, when he stayed at the country house of a French Rothschild. But this trouble was trifling in character, and Bismarck never did anything to hurt the business of the German Rothschilds. The Frankfort firm was at the height of its importance in the years 1850-1870. In the latter year the head of that branch of the family, Baron Mayer Karl Rothschild, was made a member of the Prussian House of Peers, and after that time he paid very little attention to business, leaving the affairs of the house almost altogether in the hands of his brother, Baron Wilhelm, a very religious man of rather narrow views and no great business ability. Under "Baron Willy," as he was almost universally called, the banking house of the Rothschilds in Frankfort rapidly declined, and when the head of the firm died in 1901 without male heirs, the Frankfort house was discontinued. The house of Rothschild was prominent during the Franco-Prussian war, and the French branch arranged with Bleichröder the payment of the French indemnity.

Lord Northcliffe.

H. M.—Can you tell me something about Lord Northcliffe? Is he an Englishman by birth?

Lord Northcliffe, who was made a Baronet in 1904, and First Baron of the Isle of Thanet in 1905, was born in Chapelizod, County Dublin, Ireland, July 15, 1865. His name is Alfred Charles William Harmsworth, and he is the eldest son of Alfred Harmsworth, barrister, and of Geraldine Mary Maffett Harmsworth, also of County Dublin. He is one of the largest newspaper proprietors in the world, and owns and controls some of the best-known and most influential English papers and magazines. His part in the explosive-shell affair in the war is no doubt too well known to need any repetition. Lord Northcliffe has traveled in this country and has studied the management of newspapers here.

College Athletics.

W. D. HOLMES.—Can a college or university football team play a semi-professional football team a match game without being suspended by the A. A. U.?

A college or university football team can play a match game with a semi-professional team without being suspended by the A. A. U., but it is hardly likely to do so. The A. A. U. has no jurisdiction over college athletes while they are competing on their college teams.

Assiniboia.

W. C. D.—I notice in a recent issue of THE TIMES, in the Queries and Answers department, a statement that there is no province in the Dominion of Canada known as Assiniboia. Then what is that province which is bounded on the east by Manitoba, on the west by Alberta, on the north by Saskatchewan, and on the south by the United States, and of which the capital is Regina?

The part of Canada which is bounded on the east by Manitoba, on the west by Alberta, on the south by the United States, and "on the north by Saskatchewan," is now part of the last-named province. The name Assiniboia was formerly, at different times, applied to two districts in Canada, but now belongs properly to none. The first was the district formed in 1835 by the Hudson's Bay Company, having in it Fort Gary at the junction of the Red and Assiniboine Rivers in Rupert's Land; it ceased to exist when Rupert's Land was transferred to Canada in 1870. The second regions, known until recently as Assiniboia, was a district of the Northwest Territories, given definite existence by an act of the Dominion Parliament in 1875; it extended from the western boundary of Manitoba to the line of 111 degrees west, and from the parallel of 49 degrees north to 52 degrees north; Saskatchewan lay to the north of the district, and in 1905 the two were united, with slightly different boundaries, under the name of Saskatchewan.

Banking Statistics.

C. H. D.—Could you supply a steady reader with the following information: What is the banking power of the world? What is the banking power of the United States? What is the banking power of New York City?

The following statistics as to banks and banking in this city, throughout the United States in general, and in Europe will supply the information you desire: The exchanges of the Clearing House at New York for the year ended Sept. 30, 1914, amounted in rough figures to $89,760,345,000. The transactions for that year were as follows: Capital, $175,300,000; clearings, in exact figures, $89,760,345,971; balances paid in money, $5,125,647,302; average daily clearings, $296,238,762; average daily balances paid in money, $16,926,220; balances to clearings, 5.71. The total exchanges of clearing houses of United States cities, in rough figures, amounted to $163,975,483,971 for the year ended Sept. 30, 1914. The reports of the national banks of the country for the year ended July 1, 1914, was as follows: Number of banks, 7,473; capital, $1,063,978,175; surplus, $[illegible]17,131,40; total dividends, $121,147,096.23; ratio of dividends to capital and surplus, 6.81; ratio of earnings to capital and surplus, 8.39.

The report of the resources and liabilities of the State savings, private banks, and loan and trust companies for the year ended July 1, 1914, was as follows: Number of banks and trust companies—State banks, 14,512; mutual savings banks, 634; stock savings banks, 1,466; loan and trust companies, 1,564; private banks, 1,064; total resources, including loans and discounts, with overdrafts, bonds, securities, banking house, furniture, and fixtures, other real estate owned, due from banks, checks, and other cash items, cash on hand, &c., $15,489,207,260; total liabilities the same, including capital stock paid in, surplus fund, undivided profits, amounts due to banks, dividends unpaid, individual deposits, time savings deposits, notes and bills rediscounted, bills payable, and other liabilities. At the end of the year counted to Sept. 30, 1914, the general stock of money in the United States amounted to a total of $4,037,735,626, of which amount $342,987,430 was held in the Treasury as assets of the Government, and $3,694,748,196 was in circulation.

The latest available statistics from leading foreign countries are as follows, (the figures are for pounds:) Specie on hand, circulation, and deposit and general accounts. Bank of England—gold and silver, 645,359,000; circulation, 35,214,940; deposits and current accounts, 153,039,920. Bank of France—gold, 165,654,000; silver, 25,013,000; circulation, 267,327,000; deposits and current accounts, 53,206,000. Imperial Bank of Germany—Gold, 80,684,000; silver, 2,348,000; circulation, 202,680,000; deposits and current accounts, 124,713,000. Bank of Russia—Gold, 101,184,000; silver, 5,506,000; circulation, 253,357,000; deposits and current accounts, 72,629,000. Bank of Austria-Hungary—Gold, 51,678,000; silver, 12,140,000; circulation, 88,470,000; deposits and current accounts not stated. Savings bank statistics from the United States and the larger European countries will be given if requested.

A Generation.

G. B. S.—Will you please tell me how long a period of time we mean by the word "generation"? I am sure I learned in school that it was about twenty-five years, but I have been told that it is 100 years.

Webster merely defines a generation generally, as "the average life of man, or the ordinary period of time at which one rank follows another, or father is succeeded by child." The Standard Dictionary says: "Commonly estimated at one-third of a century." The Century Dictionary states that "the historical average is commonly reckoned at about thirty years."

Cardinal Mercier's Letter.

S. P. R.—Will you kindly tell me where I can obtain a complete translation of the pastoral letter of Cardinal Mercier to the Belgian people?

Cardinal Mercier's letter to his people has been published in The New York Times Current History of the War.

A Lost Child.

SYMPATHY.—Can you tell me if Jimmie Glass, the four-year-old child who was stolen, has been recovered?

We have no record of the authentic recovery of Jimmie Glass.

Races of the World.

M. L.—Is there a Slavic race? If so, what nations does it comprise? How many are the main races of the world, what are their names, and what nations do they comprise?

The Slavs are one of the chief divisions of the Aryan race. They are divided, as a race, into two leading families, the Eastern and Western Slavs. The Eastern Slavs comprise the Russians, (Great Russians, Little Russians, and White Russians;) Bulgarians, Serbo-Croats, including the Serbians and Montenegrins; and Slovenes in Carinthia, Carniola, and part of Styria. The Western Slav family is divided into the Poles, in Russia, Austria and Prussia, and the Kassubes

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

General Electric Company.

In response to an inquiry as to the number of employes in the General Electric Company as compared with the number of employes in the Krupp Works at Essen, the Secretary, M. F. Webster, sends the following:

"The number of employes in Schenectady is about 15,000; the total employes of the company in the United States about 45,000."

A recent work on the Krupps places the number of employes at Essen just before the war at 85,000, and stated that since the declaration of hostilities the number has been increased to 100,000.

Naming a Boy.

E. C. SMITH.—A nephew bears his uncle's full name. Does he take the title "junior," or is it confined to father and son?

Strictly speaking the "title" is applied only to the direct descent from father to son.

Semitic Race and Language.

JOHN M. MEDDINS.—Which came into existence first in point of time, the Aryans or the Sanskrit language? How many thousands of years ago did Celtic Aryans enter Europe? Is the Semitic race Aryan in origin? If not where did it originate?

Sanskrit is the language which was spoken by the easternmost branch of the Indo-Germanic or Aryan race. It cannot, therefore be said whether the race or the language peculiar to that race is the elder, probably the former. The advent of the Celtic Aryans into Europe is shrouded in mystery. There are apparently not even traditions of their time of emigration. The Semitic race is one of the six races of mankind, and is distinct from the Aryan. The races are Indo-Germanic or Aryan, white, of Europe, America, Persia, India, and Australia. The Mongolian or Turanian, yellow and brown, Asia. The Semitic, white, Africa, Arabia, &c. The negro, black, Africa. The Malay or Polynesian, brown, Australasia. The American Indian, red, North and South American.

The Semites are supposed to be the descendants of Shem—that is, the name originated in this way. The term was not in general use until the first quarter of this century, though it was used in Germany as early as 1781. It is applied to the races akin to the Hebrew, such as Arabian, or Assyrian. Some authorities consider the primitive seat of the race to be Africa, others Arabia, still others the lower Euphrates. The languages form an important family, and are divided into two principal branches, the Northern and Southern. To the Northern branch belong the Assyrian and Aramean (or Syrian), and the Palestinian, (Hebrew and Phoenician.) To the Southern belong the Arabic, and the Ethiopic.

Colonial Possessions.

H. W. R.—Please let me know if Morocco is a French possession or a nation. If French, then when did France gain possession and how? Does Spain still retain Ceuta? Does Germany still possess land in Africa, or has it been taken during the war?

Morocco is an absolute despotism under a Sultan, at present Mulai Yusef. A French protectorate, however, was formally accepted by the Sultan in the treaty of April, 1912 which was recognised by both England and Germany. Since the establishment of the protectorate the Sultan has had to accept the advice of the French Resident General in all matters. The Resident General also holds the appointment of Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the officer in command of the French troops in Morocco is Minister of War. The influence of France and to a certain extent of Spain also, was first recognized by the Algeciras conference in 1906. Ceuta still belongs to Spain.

German Southwest Africa has been conquered by General Botha. The French Minister of the Colonies said recently that German East Africa will soon be the only colony possessed by Germany with the exception of a part of the Kamerun.

Adelaide Neilson and Christine Neilson

A CONSTANT READER.—Will you kindly decide the following wager? S wagers the given name of the great actress Neilson was Adelaide and the singer's name Christine; M that the given name of the actress was Julia and the singer Adelaide. These refer to the artists of about 1878.

Adelaide Neilson was the actress to whom you refer. "Julia" is the name of the wife of the English actor, Fred Terry, whose daughter, Phyllis Neilson-Terry, appeared in this country as Trilby last Spring. Christine Neilson was the name of the famous soprano.

Delta Kappa Epsilon.

A. C. WILLIAMS.—What college fraternity is known as the "Deeks"? Is it Delta Kappa Epsilon? Has it chapters in Columbia, City of New York, and New York University. Where and when founded? How much are dues and initiation fees? Number of members? Are there any restrictions as to nationality and religion of members? Number of chapters?

Delta Kappa Epsilon is familiarly known as the "Deeks." Its total membership is 17,500. It has 43 active chapters and 12 inactive. The number of houses is 43. It was founded at Yale in 1844. Chapter Gamma Beta was founded at Columbia in 1874; Chapter Nu at the College of the City of New York in 1856. There is no chapter at New York University. Well-known members of the fraternity are Robert Peary, Whitelaw Reid, William Hearst, Owen Wister, Arthur T. Hadley, Theodore Roosevelt, Robert Bacon, Henry Cabot Lodge, August Belmont, and J. P. Morgan. Your other questions cannot be answered as the society does not publish such data.

British in the U. S.

E. J. P. sends the following in answer to "W. D. B.": "Of native British in the United States there are 6,677,682 persons, and of British born outside the United States there are 3,363,792, in all 10,041,474."

Commissioned Officers in Our Army.

C. J. F.—Is it possible for a civilian to become a commissioned officer in the United States Army or in the Engineering Corps without going through West Point? If such an appointment can be made, where can I obtain information about it?

"Of about 4,000 officers of the line and Coast Artillery 1,120 are West Point graduates. 1,310 were appointed from the volunteers or civil life, and 370 came up from the ranks of the army. This applies to officers on the active list only, and is taken from The Army Register of 1915."

Further information could possibly be found in The Army Register, or might be obtained upon application to the War Department.

Sumerians.

M. H. B.—Kindly give me any information you can about the Sumerians.

The Sumerians were members of one of the primitive races of Babylonia. They are believed to have been of non-Semitic origin and to have been the dominant race at the earliest time of which there are any records. It was to them that the Assyrians ascribed the origin of Chaldean civilization and writing. Another name for the race is Accadians. The Accadian language was non-Semitic and possibly Ural-Altaic. It was spoken previously to the better known Semitic dialects of the cuneiform inscriptions. The Sumerian seems to be a kindred dialect and to have been in use at the same time in Babylonia.

Moving Pictures.

L. S.—A says the motion picture is an illusion or deception of the eye. B says it is not an illusion. Could you kindly inform us who is right?

Motion pictures depend for their successful operation upon the physiological phenomenon known as "persistence of vision." If, for instance, a bright light is moved rapidly in front of the eye in a dark room, it appears not as a spark but as a line of light. A so-called shooting star produces the same effect. This result is purely physiological, and is due to the fact that the retina of the eye may be considered practically as a sensitized plate of relatively slow speed, so that an image impressed upon it remains, before being effaced, for a period ranging from one-sixteenth to one-seventh of a second, according to the idiosyncrasies of the individual and the intensity of the light. So it will be seen that if a number of pictures are successively presented to the eye they will appear as a single continuous photograph, provided the periods between them are short enough to prevent one of the photographs being effaced before its successor is presented to the eye. If, for instance, a series of identical portraits were rapidly presented to the eye, a single picture would apparently be viewed; or if we presented to the eye a series of photographs of moving objects, each one representing a minute successive phase of movement, the movements themselves would appear to be taking place. This is the principle of moving pictures, so that A wins.

Seven Wonders of the World.

M. D. D.—I claim that the Coliseum of Rome is one of the Seven Wonders of the World, but my friend denies it. Who is right?

Three groups of "wonders," each containing seven, are listed as "Seven Wonders of the Ancient World," "Seven Wonders of the Middle Ages," and "Seven Wonders of the Modern World." The first group comprises Pyramids of Egypt, Pharos of Egypt, Hanging Gardens of Babylon, Temple of Diana at Ephesus, Statue of Jupiter by Phidias, Mausoleum of Artemisia, Colossus of Rhodes. The second group comprises the Coliseum of Rome, Catacombs of Alexandria, Great Wall of China, Stonehenge, Leaning Tower of Pisa, Porcelain Tower of Nankin, Mosque of Saint Sophia. The modern group comprises Wireless Telephone, Aeroplane, Radium, Antiseptics and Antitoxins, Spectrum Analysis, X-Ray. These lists are taken from the World Almanac for 1915.

Evening Schools.

CHARLES T. HARSANY. — Is a young man, a high school graduate, 18 years of age, eligible to teach in the evening schools of New York? How soon after graduating can he teach in high school? For which subject is the highest salary paid in evening school, in high school?

To be eligible to teach in the schools of New York under the control of the Board of Education, applicants must possess licenses. In the evening schools there are teachers of elementary schools who require license (a) to teach a special branch, or bookkeeping, cooking, drawing, English for foreigners, or stenography. Applicants must have (a) a high school education or its equivalent, and the completion of a satisfactory course of study in the special branch, or in methods of teaching, or (b) list of the course of study, one year's satisfactory experience in teaching the subject in which they seek a license, (b) three years' satisfactory experience in teaching. To be eligible for a license to teach manual training they must have two years' experience in teaching the subject. To teach the common branches in evening elementary schools they must have, in order to be eligible for license, (a) graduation from college, (b) same requirements as License No. 1. Teachers in evening schools are paid for each evening's service. Assistant teachers in evening elementary schools are paid $3 per evening; principals, $5; general assistants and heads of departments, $3; teachers in charge where evening elementary has no principal, $4. No person shall be eligible for license in any teaching position in day high school whose age is outside these limits, assistant teacher, 21 to 40 years; first assistant, 25 to 50 years; principal, 25 to 70 years. Age limits for teachers in evening schools are not given in the Manual of the Board of Education from which the above information is taken. The highest paid teaching positions in high schools are $2,850, paid in the twelfth year to assistant teachers, including teachers of cooking, sewing, and physical training; $3,100 paid to first assistants in the thirteenth year; $1,400 paid to laboratory, mechanical, physical, placement and investigation assistants in the eleventh year; $1,300 paid to junior teachers in the fourth year.

Teachers' Salaries.

B. E. L.—Would you please inform me of the salaries for public school teachers in New York City, beginning salary, increase, when, and how much?

It is taken for granted that you mean the salaries of teachers in the elementary schools. There are two schedules given in the Manual of the Board of Education for 1914—one for women and one for men. Women teachers in elementary schools appointed to grades from 7A to 8A inclusive, and in 8B grade when that grade is taught in the same class with lower grade, receive as minimum salary $600 per year, maximum $1,320, rate of annual increase $48. Women teachers in elementary schools appointed to classes in 8B grade receive $936 as minimum, maximum $1,440, rate of annual increase $84.

Male teachers teaching in any grade below the highest, and in the highest when that grade is taught in the same class with lower grade, receive a minimum salary of $900 per year, maximum $2,160, rate of annual increase $105. Male teachers of shop work are also paid in accordance with this schedule. Male teachers in elementary schools appointed to classes in 8B grade receive a minimum salary of $1,500 per year, maximum $2,400, annual rate of increase $150. Male Vice Principals and first assistants are also paid under this schedule. There are different schedules for teachers of special branches. All these schedules are marked "old" in the Manual of the Board of Education.

Salary of English M. P.

FANNY GODDARD.—What is the salary of a member of the English House of Commons?

The Statesman's Year Book informs us that in August, 1911, by resolution of the House of Commons, provision was first made for the payment of a salary of £400 per year to members, other than those already in receipt of salaries as officers of the House, as Ministers, or officers of his Majesty's household. This provision does not extend to members of the House of Lords.

French Academy, Etc.

Professor Georges Bigot sends the following:

"Here is some supplementary information as to the origin of the word boche. The word is an abbreviation or contraction. By contraction, the two words allemand (German) and Caboche (Latin, caput, head; in French, big head, thick head) give the word alboche, just as automobile and omnibus give autobus. Primitively alboche was the slang word to designate the Germans. But the Frenchmen do not like the long compound words, nor the agglutination, therefore 'boche' by the falling of the 'al.' M. Maures Donnay of the French Academy, apropos of 'boche,' writes: 'Boche! It is the noise made by a man too fat, jumping with his big feet in blood and mud, &c. From 'boche' come Bochis, country of the boche; bochisme, method, theory, doctrine of Kultur; and bochisation, a notice likeness to cochonneries from cochon, pig,) to designate all delicatessen made in Germany."

As Professor Bigot is a Frenchman this interpretation of the puzzling term is interesting, but his "primitive" or original application of the word seems to be discounted by the fact that it is found in "La Dictionnaire de la Langue Verte" of 1867 with quite another meaning and only in later slang dictionaries applied specifically to Germans.

Concerning the list of the members of the Academie Française, recently published, Professor Bigot points out that the list as given is not up-to-date. The correct list is as follows: Mejères, Comte d' Haussonville, de Freycinet, Viaud (Pierre Loti,) Lavisse, Paul Bourget, Thibault (Anatole France,) Hapotaux, Lavedan Deschanel, Hervieu, Faguet, Rostand, Masson, Barin, Lamy, Ribot, Barrès, Donnay, Marquis de Légar, Charmes, Jean Richepin, Poincaré, (Raymond,) Prieux, Aicard, Doumic, Prévost, Duchesne, de Régnier, Cochin, Lyautey, Bourroux, Capus, de la Gorce, Bergson. The last three were appointed in 1914, de Régnier the successor of Marquis de Vogüe, de la Gorce of Thureau-Dangin, and Bergson of Emile Ollivier. The last five are still vacant. The Professor calls attention to the printer's error, which turned Mis., the abbreviation of Marquis, into Mme., the abbreviation of Madame, and supplies the following information as to Joseph Bertrand: "Great French mathematician, born in Paris 1822, died in 1900. Was a member of the Académie Française."

Here's How Again!

WILLIAM M. SWEENEY sends the following:

"Supplementing your reply to E. Crossley's query in THE TIMES of Sept. 12 as to the origin of the phrase, 'Here's how!' I would call his attention to a poem by the late Captain Arthur T. Lee, United States Army, entitled 'Hough!' which may be found in his 'Army Ballads, and Other Poems,' Page 155.

"'Hough!—an army sentiment well understood in the Florida war, but although uttered as a toast generally throughout the army at the present time, [1871,] there are but few who know its origin. Coacooche, or Wild-Cat, the distinguished Seminole chief, at the time of his surrender at Camp Cummins, Florida, observing that the officers used certain expressions, such as 'Here's luck!' 'The old grudge!' &c., before drinking, asked Gofer John, a negro interpreter, what they said. John was puzzled, but finally explained by saying, 'It means how d'ye do!' Whereupon the chief, with great dignity, lifted his cup, and, elevating it above his head, exclaimed in a deep, gutteral, and triumphant voice, 'Hough!'

"The word was at once adopted by the officers of the Eighth Infantry and the Second Dragoons, and as a sentiment spread rapidly throughout the whole army."

I happen to know the origin of "Here's how," and if you care to publish it for the benefit of E. Crossley and other readers, here it is: An old army officer and Indian fighter told me some years ago that the "how" in this expression is derived from the chemical derivation of water and whiskey, thus: H(2)OW, and was, of course, prompted by the familiarity of all the soldiers with the Indian salutation "Hau," mentioned in your description, but in reality the expression originated and was used when they toasted each other with a glass of whiskey and water.

Picture Section of The Times.

EDITH F. GRIFFIN.—Will you kindly inform me how I can send a large number of the Photogravure Section of The Sunday Times to the soldiers in the trenches or hospitals? Mine have accumulated owing to illness, so that now there is a pile a foot or so high. They are all smooth and only folded once.

Men in the hospitals are delighted to receive these pictures. You might send them to the American Ambulance, Neuilly, Paris. If you address them to the American Clearing House in Paris, they will be admitted without customs formalities and will be forwarded to any address specified.

"Acclimated."

READER.—In order to settle a controversy, will you be good enough to inform me of the proper pronunciation of the word "acclimated." Is it pronounced in the same way as "acclimation"?

Both the Standard and the Century give the pronunciation as a-kli-mat, the first "a" short, the "i" long, accent on the second syllable, the second "a," as in mate. "Acclimation" is given as ak-li-mashon, the accent on the third syllable, "a" long. Acclimatize is given as ak-li-ma-tiz," accent on second syllable, second "a" short, second "i" long, as in lie.

Birthplace of Columbus.

JOHN MACLEOD.—Christopher Columbus was born in Genoa, Italy, either in 1446 or in 1451.

Scientific Societies.

HENRY ADELSON.—I wish to present my solution of the perplexing problem in plain geometry, how to trisect an angle, to a scientific society for acknowledgment. Will you please let me know to whom I should refer it?

Your solution might be submitted to the Carnegie Institute or the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, or to one of the editors of the American Mathematical Society, Percy F. Smith or L. E. Dickson of the University of Chicago, or B. R. Curtiss of the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill. It might also be presented to the Royal Society, London.

Cost of Battleship Arizona.

E. TRAUNER.—The cost of the United States battleship Arizona is $7,425,000. When completed it will reach, it is said, between $15,000,000 and $16,000,000.

United States Battleships.

E. O. ORRIN.—I see that the United States takes third place of the great navies of the world with eighteen modern battleships. Would it be too much trouble for you to give their names?

The list of dreadnoughts in the United States Navy is given in several works on the world's navies as South Carolina, Michigan, Delaware, North Dakota, Utah, Florida, Wyoming, Arkansas, Texas, New York, Nevada, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania and Arizona. The last are not quite completed. Under the list of predreadnoughts are Oregon, Massachusetts, Indian, Iowa, Kearsarge, Kentucky, Alabama, Illinois, Wisconsin, Maine, Mississippi, Ohio, New Jersey, Virginia, Georgia, Nebraska, Rhode Island, Louisiana, Connecticut, Kansas, Vermont, Minnesota, and New Hampshire.

Fighting Men in United States.

J. F. McKENNA.—Please state how many armed and equipped fighting men, including volunteer units, the United States can put in the field in two weeks. Land forces are meant.

The United States Army in active service comprises fifteen regiments of cavalry, 765 officers and 14,148 men; six regiments of field artillery, 252 officers and 5,513 men; coast artillery corps of 750 officers and 19,019 men; thirty infantry regiments of 1,530 officers and 34,128 men; three battalions of engineers, 1,942 men; the Porto Rico regiment of infantry, 32 officers and 591 men; the staff corps, service school, military academy, Indian scouts, recruits, &c., 7 officers and 10,623 men; provisional force of fifty-two companies of native scouts in the Philippines, 182 officers and 5,733 men. The total number of commissioned officers on the active list is 4,923; the total enlisted strength is 85,965. The law provides that the total enlisted strength shall not exceed 100,000 at any one time. These figures are taken from the World Almanac of 1915.

In the organized and unorganized militia there are general and staff officers to the number of 2,148; regimental and company officers, 7,247; total commissioned, 9,395. There are 113,279 enlisted men. The total organized militia amounts to 122,674 and the unorganized or reserve to 16,004,683. It is impossible to say just how quickly they could be put into the field.

"Gotham," &c.

E. H.—What does New York City's nickname of "Gotham" mean, and when did it come into use? Please give in order of precedence the different titles of English nobility.

The Century Dictionary says that Gotham was originally one of the villages of Nottinghamshire, which was notorious for the blundering simplicity of its inhabitants—"the wise men of Gotham," of whom many ludicrous stories are told. A simple minded person was, from this, called a Gothamist. The term was first applied to New York in 1807 by Washington Irving in Salmagundi.

The Standard adds that the inhabitants of the original village of Gotham are said to have played the fool in order to dissuade King John from passing through their town, and thus causing themselves the expense of entertaining him. Irving is said to have given the nickname to New York from the pretension of its people.

The Encyclopaedia Britannica says that strictly speaking the "nobility" of England are the gentry of England. The titles belonging to the peerage are Duke, Marquis, Viscount, Earl, and Baron. Baronets and Knights are not peers. Children of peers are commoners. The eldest son of a peer of the rank of an Earl and above is usually known socially by the name of his father's next peerage, but the courtesy nature of such titles is clearly indicated in every public and legal document, the phraseology of which is always "John Smith, commonly known as Viscount Blackacre." Younger sons of Dukes and Marquises are entitled to the prefix Lord before their Christian names, and all daughters of Earls, Dukes, and Marquises are entitled to style themselves "Lady" with the Christian name. Younger sons of Earls and all younger children of Viscounts and Barons are entitled to the prefix "Honourable," spelled in English fashion with the "u."

Odd Phrases.

K. M. KENNEDY.—Please tell me the meaning and origin of Gotham as applied to a great city, of the phrase "Tell it not in Gath," and the significance of "A Roland for an Oliver."

For the meaning and origin of Gotham see answer above to E. H. "Tell it not in Gath" means nowadays "Keep it a secret," and is from the Old Testament. Gath was a Philistine city, but is sometimes used to mean "Judah." The reference is found in II. Samuel, 1:20. "A Roland for an Oliver" means tit for tat, blow for blow, an action taken in retaliation by way of matching something said or done by another. It comes from the two paladins of Charlemagne's Court—Roland, the greatest champion of the Charlemagne legends and the hero of the Anglo-Norman "Song of Roland," and Oliver, his brother-knight and rival in exploits. The phrase is said to allude to a drawn combat between them and to have come from the exaggerations of the deeds of these knights by the old chroniclers.

Trade Mark Content.

E. E. HANSEN and E. R. S. write to inform the Query Column that the Detroit Chamber of Commerce "Made in U. S. A. Contest" was decided several months ago. The Iron Age, for either March or April, and Printers' Ink some months ago announced the prize and published the winning design.

Concerning Major Symes.

S. L. MERSHON, author of the book "The Major and the Queen," about which a correspondent recently inquired, sends the following sources of information about the hero of the book. An unfortunate typographical error made the name Lymes and not Symes, the correct form:

"The American Title and Security Company of Richmond, S. I., will satisfy all inquirers as to the historic accuracy of every statement made by me in that book relating to Major Symes and 'the Good Queen Anne' of England. It will sustain by proper proofs from official documents and public records the exalted character, wide influence, and important position held by Major Lancaster Symes in New York colonial affairs. The records in Richmond County, colonial archives and English documents establish the fact that Major Lancaster Symes was the recognized and established owner of nearly one-half of Staten Island."

Paul Revere.

CHARLES J. GOULD.—I should like to know the date and place of capture and imprisonment of Paul Revere and anything else pertaining to this event.

"The True Story of Paul Revere," by Charles F. Getterny, Chapter V., gives the account of the court-martial and acquittal of Paul Revere more fully than it can be given here. He was not "captured" or "imprisoned," but merely confined to his house as prisoner of war on honor for three days. He served in 1779 in the disastrous and disgraceful Penobscot expedition, undertaken by the American fleet, under Commodore Saltonstall, and land forces against the British garrison. The American forces largely outnumbered their foes on land and had an overwhelming advantage in ships, but the lack of discipline among them, combined with the cowardly behavior of the Commodore, resulted in the small garrison holding the siege for twenty-one days against six times their strength. General Lovell in his journal himself says that it was a distressing sight "to see four ships (British) pursuing seventeen sail of armed vessels, nine of which were stout ships, transports on fire, men-of-war blowing up * * * and as much confusion as can possibly be conceived." In the "Siege of Penobscot," by John Calef, the figures are given as thirty-seven American ships, of which twenty-six were burned and eleven captured, the British losing seventy killed and our forces 474. The army had somewhat better success, notably a brilliant charge up the heights, which an officer described as "unequaled since Wolfe." They were not supported by the fleet, however, and at the approach of the British ships Commodore Saltonstall, who had shown timidity all through, turned and fled. On the return of the expedition Paul Revere was charged with disobeying orders and neglect of duty. He was confined on honor for three days and then freed. He wished to bring the matter to trial by court-martial, feeling confident of being able to clear himself, but it was nearly three years before he succeeded in doing so. Then he was finally tried on two charges and acquitted of both. The Massachusetts Archives, Volume 145, the work of John Calef, and General Lovell's Journal give detailed accounts of the affair.

Neutrality of Belgium.

N. E. D.—Did the United States ever sign any paper guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium?

The United States was not party to the treaty of 1839 guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium, but was signatory to the general provision in The Hague Conference which declared the territory of neutral nations inviolable.

Amateur Orchestra.

INQUIRER.—Is there a good amateur orchestra in New York and how can one become a member? "When was Uncle Sam, as popularly represented, first drawn and by whom?

The Young Men's Symphony Orchestra of New York is designed to give free orchestral training to young musicians. Inquiries should be addressed to T. I. Seligman, 1 William Street. The Y. M. C. A. general office, 215 West Twenty-third Street, also maintains an orchestra course. David Mannes, at the Music Settlement, 51 East Third Street, has orchestra classes also.

The original drawing of Uncle Sam is shrouded in mystery. The Query Column has made two recent attempts at light on this subject, but nothing has come of them so far.

The Chanler Lunacy Proceedings.

LAWYER.—Will you tell me what was the date of the institution of lunacy proceedings against John Armstrong Chanler, and can you give me a citation of the case or refer me to a review of the same? Has it ever been appealed?

In February, 1887, John Armstrong Chanler was directed by a Sheriff's jury to be sent to Bloomingdale. In November, 1889, he escaped, went to Philadelphia, placed himself in a private sanitarium, and after examination was pronounced sane. In 1901 he entered suit in Lynchburg, Va., to establish his sanity, and after a long trial was adjudged sane in the eyes of the Virginia court. He was not, however, considered sane by the courts of New York State. In 1908 he began suit in this State, but his appeal was denied. In 1911 he again began an effort to obtain control of his New York property. The case was tried in 1912 and Chanler lost. THE TIMES cannot review the entire case in its Query Columns, but would refer you to newspaper files of the above-named years for further details.

The Nicknames of States.

TIMES READER.—Will you kindly publish in the Query Column what each and every State in the United States is called, as, for example, New York, the Empire State?

The nicknames of the States of the Union, except the few that have none, are as follows: Arkansas, the Bear State; California, the Golden State; Colorado, the Centennial State; Connecticut, the Nutmeg State and also the Land of Steady Habits; Delaware, the Blue Hen State and also the Diamond State; Florida, the Flower State; Georgia, the Empire State of the South; Illinois, the Prairie State; Indiana, the Hoosier State; Iowa, the Hawkeye State; Kansas, the Sunflower State; Kentucky, the Bluegrass State and also the Dark and Bloody Ground; Louisiana, the Creole State and the Pelican State; Maine, the Pine Tree State and the Lumber State; Maryland, the Old Line State; Massachusetts, the Bay State; Michigan, the Wolverine State; Minnesota, the North Star State and the Gopher State; Mississippi, the Bayou State; Missouri, the Bullion State; Montana, the Mountain State; Nebraska, the Tree-planter State; Nevada, the Silver State; New Hampshire, the Granite State; New York, the Empire State; North Carolina, Old North and also the Turpentine State; North Dakota, the Sioux State; Ohio, the Buckeye State; Oregon, the Beaver State and the Sunset State; Pennsylvania, the Keystone State; Rhode Island, Little Rhody; South Carolina, the Palmetto State; South Dakota, the Coyote State; Tennessee, the Volunteer State; Texas, the Lone Star State; Vermont, the Green Mountain State; Virginia, the Old Dominion; Washington, the Evergreen State; West Virginia, the Panhandle State; Wisconsin, the Badger State.

There are no popular nicknames for the States of Alabama, Arizona, Idaho, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Utah, and Wyoming. Most of the States also have well-known nicknames for their inhabitants. The people who live in Arkansas, for example, are jocularly known as Toothpicks. The other nicknames for residents are as follows: California, Gold Hunters; Alabama, Lizards; Colorado, Rovers; Connecticut, Wooden Nutmegs; Delaware, Blue Hens, Chickens, and Muskrats; Florida, Fly-Up-the-Creeks; Georgia, Buzzards; Illinois, Suckers; Indiana, Hoosiers; Iowa, Hawkeyes; Kansas, Jayhawkers; Kentucky, Corncrackers; Louisiana, Creoles; Maine, Foxes; Maryland, Crawthumpers; Massachusetts, Beaneaters; Michigan, Wolverines; Minnesota, Gophers; Mississippi, Tadpoles; Missouri, Pukes; Montana, Bugeaters; Nevada, Sage Hens; New Jersey, Jersey Blues and Clamcatchers; New Hampshire, Granite Boys; New York, Knickerbockers; North Carolina, Tar Heels; North Dakota, Tuckoes; Ohio, Buckeyes; Oregon, Web Feet; Pennsylvania, Pennamites and Leatherheads; Rhode Island, Gunflints; South Carolina, Weasels; Tennessee, Butternuts; Texas, Beefheads; Vermont, Green Mountain Boys; Virginia, Beadles; West Virginia, Panhandlers; Wisconsin, Badgers.

U. S. Battleships.

HARRY JAFFE.—I have heard it stated that if the United States were to build its own battleships it could do so at one-half the present cost. Kindly tell me whether that statement is true.

The United States battleships are built both by contract to outside firms and by the national navy yards, and the cost is practically the same in both instances. If there is any difference, however, it operates in the opposite direction from the rumor reported; the battleships built by the United States at its own navy yards not only do not cost less than those built by contract, but where there is a slight difference the battleships built by the United States usually cost the country a little more.

"Simon Pure."

J. L. C.—Will you please tell me the origin of the expression, "Simon Pure"?

"Simon Pure" was the name of a character in an old comedy by Mrs. Centlivre, called "A Bold Stroke for a Wife," and the origin of the use of his name to signify a genuine article lies in the fact that Simon Pure, in the comedy, was counterfeited by an imposter. The man's name, as "the real Simon Pure" article, passed naturally enough into common usage.

Jewish Soldiers in 1870.

S. STANDER.—Will you kindly answer the following historical question: Is it true that at the end of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, previous to the arrival of the German Emperor at the front to confer honors on the victorious soldiers, those of the Jewish faith were ordered by their commanders to stand behind the lines, as the Emperor did not care to look upon the faces of Jews?

We can find no authority whatever for such a statement. Furthermore, such action on the part of the German Emperor would have been politically inexpedient at that time. Anti-Semitic sentiment in Germany only took active form in 1880.

Colonial Architecture.

JOHN L. DYKEMAN.—I have seen it stated recently that the New York City Hall is one of the three finest examples of Colonial architecture in the United States. Will you kindly tell me what are the other two?

The three buildings which are considered the finest examples of Colonial architecture in the United States are the City Hall in New York, the State House in Boston, and Independence Hall in Philadelphia.

The Calendar.

F. W. HARTLEY.—I should like to know what day Dec. 22, 1864, came on, and also March 20, 1861.

Dec. 22, 1864, was Thursday; March 20, 1861, was Wednesday.

French Church.

A. MARCHANT.—Is there a church in New York known as the "French Church"? There was one so designated about 1770-1790.

The two French churches in New York are the Roman Catholic Church of St. Vincent de Paul at 127 West Twenty-third Street and the French Church of Saint Esprit at 45 East Twenty-seventh Street, Protestant Episcopal.

Founded 1906. Exceptional success preparing pupils for schools, colleges, and Regents. Since organization 89% of college and Regents' examinations have been passed. POSITIVELY ONLY ONE PUPIL AT A TIME WITH A TEACHER saves time for the brilliant and handicapped as well as for the average by enabling them to do at least two years' work in one. All advantages, and more, of class schools, but none of the disadvantages. Instruction accurately fitted to the college or school the pupil purposes to enter. Why be discouraged? Every pupil who has entered the school with the purpose of going to college has accomplished that purpose. PUPILS TAUGHT HOW TO STUDY and how to do one hour's work in one hour's time. Supervised study periods teach pupils to concentrate. Fifteen teachers, each with at least twelve years' experience. Begins September 30. Lessons given at home if desired.

QUERIES ON THE WAR

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered; only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay.

"The Case of Belgium."

S. N.—Will you kindly let me know through the columns of your paper the answer of the Belgian Government to the papers found by the Germans in Brussels, presumably implicating the Belgian Government in some secret plot with England or France, or both?

Belgium's general answer to the German accusations was transmitted to The London Times and published Oct. 23. It reads in part as follows. We have only one regret to express on the subject of the disclosure of these documents, and that is that the publication of our military documents should be mangled and arranged in such a way as to give the reader the impression of duplicity on the part of England, and adhesion by Belgium, in violation of her duties as a neutral State, the policy of the Triple Entente. We ask The North German Gazette to publish in full the result of its search among our secret documents. Therein will be found fresh and striking proof of the loyalty, correctness, and impartiality with which Belgium for eighty-one years has discharged her international obligations. It was stated that Colonel Barnardiston, the military representative at Brussels of a power guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium, at the time of the Algeciras crisis, questioned the Chief of the Belgian General Staff as to the measures which he had taken to prevent any violation of that neutrality. The Chief of the General Staff, at that time Lieutenant General Ducarne, replied that Belgium was ready to repel any invader. Did the conversation extend beyond these limits, and did Colonel Barnardiston, in an interview of a private and confidential nature, disclose to General Ducarne the plan of campaign which the British General Staff would have desired to follow if that neutrality were violated? We doubt it, but in any event we can solemnly assert, and it will be impossible to prove the contrary, that never has the King or his Government been invited, either directly or indirectly, to join the Triple Entente in the event of a Franco-German war. By their words and by their acts they have always shown such a firm attitude that any supposition that they could have departed from the strictest neutrality is eliminated a priori."

Trieste and Trent.

RALPH BAMONTE.—Will you kindly tell me how long Austria has been in possession of Trieste and Trent, and whether these towns were taken by her in war or in peace?

Although both Trieste and Trent are largely Italian towns, having the appearance, and in great degree speaking the language, of cities of Italy, they have never belonged to the Kingdom of Italy, and they were never "taken" by Austria from Italy. Trieste was captured by Venice in 1203, and fought with that city intermittently for 180 years. In 1382 Trieste placed itself under the protection of Leopold III. of Austria; and except in the Napoleonic period (1797-1805 and 1809-1813.) the city has since remained an integral part of the Austrian dominions. From 1719 to 1891 Trieste was an imperial free port. The harbor was blockaded by the Italian fleet in the Summer (May-August) of 1848. During the Italian and Hungarian revolutions Trieste remained faithful to Austria. In 1867 with the adjoining territory it was constituted into a separate crown land. In 1888 Trieste celebrated the 500th anniversary of its union with Austria. It is primarily an Italian town, however, 77 per cent. of its population being Italian; the remaining 23 per cent. is divided into Slovenes 18 per cent. and Germans 5 per cent. The present "Italia Irredenta" movement demands that Trieste be made a part of Italy.

Trent is the capital of the Italian-speaking portion of the Austrian Tyrol. It has the aspect of a thoroughly Italian city, speaks only Italian, and is the centre of the region called "Italia Irredenta" by fervent patriots in Italy. Its history is briefly as follows: In 1027 Conrad II. bestowed temporal rights on the Bishop and transferred the region to Germany; repeated attacks from Venice were finally repulsed in 1487; the Bishop retained temporal rights until 1803, when they passed to Austria. Between the years 1805 and 1814 first the Bavarians and then Napoleon held the region, but it has since belonged uninterruptedly to Austria. The Trentino was formally annexed to the province of Tyrol in 1814.

For Austrian Soldiers.

M. P.—Kindly let me know if I can send clothes and food to relatives and friends in Austria, and how I can send them? Is there a limit to the weight and size of the package one can send? Are Austrian soldiers who have been taken prisoner by the Russians allowed to receive foodstuffs from friends in the United States?

Food and clothing can be sent from the United States to relatives and friends in Austria. There is no duty on such articles. For detailed information as to how the packages should be sent, inquiry may be made of the postal authorities, express companies, and shipping agents. Money, clothing, and foodstuffs for Austrian prisoners in Russia may be sent from this country, and should be addressed for delivery through the Governor of the province in which the prisoner is being held.

Infantry Rifles.

S. S.—Will you please give me some information about the infantry rifle used by the principal countries—designer, calibre, year of adoption, velocity, and maximum range of bullet?

The following statistics are taken from records gathered before the beginning of hostilities:

The French infantry rifle is made by Lebel after a model adopted in 1886, but modified in 1893. Its calibre is .315 inch, its muzzle velocity 2,400 feet per second, its range about two miles. The weight of the bullet is 170 grains. The French rifle is very long—72 inches over all—and is fitted with the old-style triangular bayonet. At the time of its adoption and for some time afterward the French army rifle was the first of the really "modern" infantry guns, but it is by this time an old model.

The English infantry rifle is the Lee-Enfield model, adopted in 1903. Its calibre is .303 inch, its muzzle velocity 2,440 feet per second, its range about two miles. It carries ten cartridges in its magazine and the bullet weighs 174 grains.

The German infantry rifle is the Mauser model, adopted with modifications in 1900. It has a .311-inch calibre, a muzzle velocity of 2,000 feet per second, and a range of three miles. It carries five or six cartridges in its magazine, and its bullet weighs 154 grains.

The Austrian infantry "small-arm" is the Mannlicher rifle, adopted with modifications in 1895. Its calibre is .315-inch, its muzzle velocity 2,800 feet per second, its range three miles.

The Japanese infantry rifle, which is known as the "Japanese Mauser," is the most modern gun of all, its present modification dating back only to 1905. It has a .265-inch calibre, muzzle velocity of 2,400 feet per second, and a range of two and a half miles. Its bullet weighs 161 grains.

The infantry rifle used in the United States Army is the Springfield model of 1903. It has a .300-inch calibre, its muzzle velocity is 2,700 feet per second, and its range 4,900 yards, or about two and three-fourths miles. It carries five cartridges in its magazine, and the bullet weighs 150 grains. Its length is about sixty-two inches over all, and it has the new sword bayonet.

Chest Protectors for Soldiers.

MRS. E. C. H.—Will you please publish directions for making chest protectors for French soldiers?

Directions supplied by the Lafayette Fund for making chest protectors, or men's vests, are as follows: Cast on seventy-two stitches; knit four inches, two plain, two purl; knit nineteen inches plain; knit twenty-four inches; cast off twenty-four stitches; knit twenty-four stitches; knit five inches on each side for shoulder; knit twenty-four stitches; cast on twenty-four stitches; knit twenty-four stitches; knit nineteen inches plain; knit four inches, two plain, two purl; sew up sides, leaving nine inches for armholes; take up stitches around neck; knit four inches, two plain, two purl; do same around armhole.

Ivangorod.

J. W.—Will you please tell me whether the Germans captured Ivangorod?

Ivangorod fell on the same day as Warsaw. Both were captured by the Germans Aug. 5, 1915.

Serbia and the War.

A. H. and S. K.—Will you kindly settle an argument about Serbia and the outbreak of war? A says that Austria was willing to arbitrate with Serbia, but that Germany through her influence prevented it. B says that Austria never offered to arbitrate with Serbia, but that Russia spurred Serbia on to insult Austria, and that Serbia never offered acceptable terms at all. What did happen?

The facts as made known in diplomatic correspondence are as follows: After the assassination of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria at Serajevo, Austria sent an ultimatum to Serbia. This contained eleven articles, and of these eight were accepted by Serbia, one was accepted subject to proof, one was accepted conditionally and arbitration or mediation proposed if reply was deemed unsatisfactory, and one was conditionally rejected. The article which was conditionally rejected read as follows: "Representatives of Austria-Hungary shall assist Serbia in suppressing in Serbia the movement directed against the territorial integrity of the Dual Monarchy and take part in the judicial proceedings on Serbian territory against persons accessory to the Serajevo crime." The article which was accepted subject to proof demanded that all officers and officials guilty of propaganda against Austria-Hungary be dismissed, and the Austro-Hungarian Government reserve the right to communicate to Serbia the names and doings of such officers and officials.

The article, which was conditionally accepted, with the offer of mediation if the reply proved unsatisfactory, required that Serbia furnish the Austro-Hungarian Government with explanations in regard to the utterances of high Serbian officials in Serbia and abroad who ventured to speak ill of the Austro-Hungarian Government after the Serajevo crime." In the diplomatic "conversations" which followed, two things stood out: Russia declared that her interests were inseparably bound up with those of the smaller Slavic power, and that her troops would mobilize on the day that Austria crossed the Serbian frontier; and Germany, while announcing her attitude to be in favor of localizing the dispute, warned the powers in general that she approved of the stand taken by her ally, and that she would tolerate no interference with Austria's "chastisement" of Serbia. Germany demanded of Russia that her alleged mobilization cease, and of France that she make known what her line of procedure would be in the event of a Russo-German war. Neither nation offered what Germany considered a satisfactory reply. On July 28 both Germany and Russia refused the proposal of Sir Edward Grey, the British Secretary for Foreign Affairs, for a meeting of the powers to avoid hostilities, and Austria declared war upon Serbia. July 29 Austria began her bombardment of Belgrade, and Russia, true to her threat, began a partial mobilization. July 30 Germany demanded that Russian mobilization cease. Aug. 1 Germany declared war upon Russia, and Aug. 2 began her march toward France.

Relief for Poland.

H. R.—I have been much confused to receive appeals from two Polish committees of relief. Will you kindly explain for me, and for other readers, whether there are two Polands, and what work the two committees are doing.

There are two committees organized for the relief of the suffering in Poland, and they are both distributing aid in the same country and raising money for the same cause. The American Polish Relief Committee is under the Presidency of Madame Marcella Sembrich, and was organized Dec. 29, 1914. The Polish Victims' Relief Fund was organized the 1st of June, 1915; it was founded by Mr. Paderewski, but he does not hold active office. Former President Taft is President of the fund.

Liability for Service Abroad.

L. D'A.—I left Italy at the age of 18. I am now 26. I have taken out first papers here. Can Italy compel me to return to serve in the army?

M. V. V.—An Italian in my employ, who wishes to become a citizen of this country, fears that unless he returns to serve in Italy he will be liable to imprisonment if he ever returns after the war. Is this a fact?

L. D.—Did the United States warn Italians in this country that unless they return now to serve in the army they may be liable to arrest if they return later?

The Department of State published the following on Aug. 14, 1914:

The Department of State has recently received numerous inquiries from foreign-born persons residing in this country as to whether they may be compelled to perform military service in their native lands, and as to what penalties, by way of fines, confiscation of property, or imprisonment, in case of return, they will incur if they fail to report to the authorities of their countries of origin for military service. Some of the inquiries refer to persons who have obtained naturalization as citizens of the United States, others to persons who have made declaration of intention of becoming American citizens, and still others to persons who have taken no steps to acquire citizenship. The United States is not a party to any treaties under which persons of foreign origin residing in this country may be compelled to return to their countries of origin for military service, nor is there any way in which persons may be forced into foreign armies against their will so long as they remain in the United States. The department cannot undertake to give authentic official information, either, in general, as to the requirements of the military service laws of foreign countries and the penalties provided therein for the evasion of military service, or in particular as to the status and present or future liabilities of individuals under such laws. Information of this kind must be obtained from officials of the foreign countries concerned. The department issues printed circulars concerning the status in their native lands of naturalized citizens of the United States, and these will be furnished to interested persons upon request. It is specifically stated in these circulars that the information contained in them is not to be considered official so far as it relates to the laws and regulations of foreign countries.

The United States has concluded treaties of naturalization with Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Denmark, the German States, Great Britain, Norway, and Sweden. Copies of these treaties may be found in "Treaties, &c., Between the United States of America and Other Powers," and separate copies may be furnished by the department upon request. Under these treaties the naturalization of persons concerned as citizens of the United States and the termination of their former allegiance are recognized, with the reservation in most of them that such persons remain liable to trial and punishment in their native lands for offenses prior to emigration therefrom, including offenses of evasion of military service. The United States holds that no naturalized citizen of this country can rightfully be held to account for military liability to his native land accruing subsequent to emigration therefrom, but this principle may be contested by countries with which the United States has not entered into treaties of naturalization. The latter countries may hold that naturalization of their citizens or subjects as citizens of other countries has no effect upon their original military obligation, or may deny the right of their citizens or subjects to become naturalized as citizens of other countries in the absence of express consent or without the fulfillment of military obligation. More specific information as to the department's understanding of these laws concerning nationality and military obligation may be found in the circulars mentioned above.

It is important to observe that an alien who declares his intention to become a citizen of the United States does not, at the time of making such a declaration, renounce allegiance to his original sovereign, but merely declares that he intends to do so. Such person does not by his declaration of intention acquire the status of a citizen of the United States.

Captured Cities.

X.—What towns over 100,000 inhabitants have been captured in the present war? What were their populations? Who captured them?

An approximate list of towns over 100,000 and their populations is as follows: Antwerp, captured by Germans, population in 1912, 312,884; Brussels, captured by Germans, population 1912, 662,600; Ghent, Germans, population 1910, 167,500; Lemberg, captured by Russians, retaken by Austro-Germans, population 1910, 206,113; Liége, captured by Germans, population 1912, 170,600; Lille, Germans, population 1911, 217,807; Lodz, Germans, population 1910, 415,650; Warsaw, Germans, population 1911, 872,478.

Zeppelin Bombs.

T. B.—I am anxious to know the weight of the bomb which is dropped from an aeroplane or Zeppelin, and if they explode with time fuses or when they strike the ground.

There are many different kinds of bombs dropped from Zeppelins and aircraft. They are divided into two main classes—explosive and incendiary bombs. The explosive ones are divided again into those dropped with no initial velocity, and those propelled with high initial velocity in somewhat the same way as a bullet is propelled from a gun. The first kind of explosive bomb is more used than the second, and explodes upon hitting the ground. In an article on the "Zeppelin Question" by Mr. Prade, published in translation in The Scientific American for April 3, 1915, it is stated that nowhere have bombs been found weighing more than 40 kilos, (108 pounds). "This was the weight," says Mr. Prade, "of the bomb found intact at Yarmouth. * * * Large naval dirigibles which appeared over the English coast certainly had not 1,000 kilos (2,204 pounds) of explosives on board, which is proved by the fact that they did not throw that number, as they would hardly have returned with any unthrown." From this Mr. Prade proves that the bombs do not weigh more than 50 kilos at most, and that each Zeppelin carried at the most 20 bombs.

I should advise everybody who can to try Mr. Harper's physical education. It is good for the body, health and spirits, and I have never come across anyone who is so keenly interested and patient with pupils. All the lessons have greatly benefited me in every way. M. R.

I have taken lessons from Mr. Harper and find myself greatly benefited both in health and appearance. I believe Mr. Harper's system of physical education to be extremely good and of lasting benefit. L. W.

After one week's trial of Mr. Harper's system I am bound to say I think it excellent. I feel more free than I used to and far less depressed mentally. When I get the right muscles into full play I expect never to have to visit a doctor again. This is far, far better than medicine. J. P.

Introductory Low Fees.

I have been practicing My System of

for many years in London, and in order to acquaint intelligent men and women of this country with my system I have decided to make a very low fee for the balance of OCTOBER and for the month of NOVEMBER.

I will, without any charge for consultation, give a few nerve tests and demonstrations, if desired. I will also give a preliminary trial lesson. I am making this offer because my teachings are different from any methods of mental training or physical culture that have been advanced by anyone heretofore. I know that my teachings appeal to the intelligence of any investigator; therefore I have set apart a few hours daily for explaining my methods to those who are interested in securing Nerve Control. A special appointment is not necessary if you call between 11 A. M. and 2 P. M.

500 Charming New SUITS

For Women & Misses

Tomorrow at $13.50

A Great Many of These Suits Are Fur Trimmed.

Had we purchased these suits in the ordinary course of business, we would have had to charge $19.50 to $25.

This sale involves an under-price purchase of 300 Fine Suits from a well-known maker who specializes in tailored suits, and about 200 suits selected from our own stocks.

WE ILLUSTRATE TWO OF THE MANY MODELS.

There are fur-trimmed models and semi-tailored effects. Some are severely plain, with an indescribable air of smartness. (The latter will interest the professional and business woman.)

Every suit man-tailored throughout. Faultlessly made and trimmed with every unique touch that characterizes high-priced garments.

The season's most approved materials are included: WHIPCORD, WOOL POPLIN (plain or striped); SERGE, HEATHER MIXTURES, STRIPED CHEVIOT, TWO-TONE DIAGONALS, CHEVIOTS, TWEEDS AND NOVELTY WEAVES.

All accepted colors. All sizes for women and misses.

Linings of peau de cygne and guaranteed satin.

Do yourself (and us) the justice to see these suits tomorrow. Without a doubt, you'll stay to buy.

LATEST DEALINGS IN THE REALTY FIELD

ACTIVITY IN BAY RIDGE

Bronx Plot Purchased and Financed for Improvement—Good Suburban Transactions.

In the upper part of the old Greenwich Village district, where considerable realty activity has developed lately, an interesting sale was closed yesterday in the new six-story apartment house recently completed at 125 and 127 Washington Place, on the north side between Sixth Avenue and Grove Street. It was sold for the builder, David Lentin, to an investor. The building covers a lot 44 by 97. G. Tuoti & Co. were the brokers.

Harlem Tenement Sale.

The six-story tenement house at 332 East 125th Street, on plot 25 by 135, between First and Second Avenues, has been sold by Joseph Tompkins for Chykal Duke to a Mr. Alterman.

Bronx Sales.

The five-story apartment house at 963 Union Avenue, on plot 45 by 164, has been sold by Samuel Cowen to an investor. He has sold six lots, 150 by 100, on the northwest corner of Lafayette Avenue and Whittier Street for G. Robits, and to a Hebrew school for a synagogue the two-story business building on the east side of Prospect Avenue, 65 feet north of Dawson Street.

The Ensign Improvement Company, Joseph A. Damsey, President, has purchased from the Arnsue Corporation four lots on the west side of Valentine Avenue, 76.5 feet south of 184th Street. The buyers have procured from the New York Title Insurance Company a building loan of $70,000 for the erection of two five-story apartments.

H. A. Douglas & Co. have sold for the Chelsea Realty Company the lot, 26 by 120, on the north side of 181st Street, 60 feet west of Jerome Avenue.

Big Deals in Bay Ridge.

D. F. Murphy has purchased from the Samuel Adams Realty Company fourteen lots on the south side of Sixty-second Street, between Third and Second Avenues, in the Bay Ridge district, near the Crescent Athletic Club grounds.

He intends to improve the property at once with fourteen six-family houses, from plans prepared by Thomas Bennett, architect. All the loans have been placed through C. Courtelyou. Torkel Larsen was the broker in the sale.

A plot 40 by 100, adjoining the new Bay Ridge Theatre, now nearing completion, has been purchased by a builder for improvement with a business structure. The plot is on the west side of Third Avenue, 60 feet south of Seventy-first Street, and was sold by E. J. Hollahan for G. M. & B. L. Sykes.

Brooklyn.

The single family dwelling at 2,150 Sixty-seventh Street, on plot 24 by 100, has been sold by the Alco Building Company to Joseph P. Tolins.

R. A. Schlesing has sold the property at 379 Menahan Street for John Hartling, Jr., to Michael Muller.

Staten Island Sale.

J. Sterling Drake has sold for Benjamin Nielson to Jessie Mary Moore four lots, 100 by 100 feet, on Brook Avenue and Southfield Boulevard, Oakwood, Staten Island.

Capt. Barnard Buys Lawrence Estate.

Augustus Barnard, Captain of Company K of the Seventh Regiment, has purchased from Huntington Adams and his sister, Mrs. Seward Erdman, their country place on Bannister Lane, Lawrence, L. I. The property contains seven and a half acres with a large residence and stable. John F. Scott was the broker.

Long Island City.

Hammond & Fay have sold two lots, 50 by 100, on Heiser Street, for George E. Payne, and for Theron H. Burden to M. Jange two lots, 40 by 100, on the east side of Forty-seventh Street, between Jackson and Park Avenues, Corona.

New Jersey.

The Simpson Merritt Company has sold a 50-foot lot on Cumberland Avenue, Verona, to Walter E. Davenport; a similar one to Joe Woodborne, and ten lots on the same avenue to F. T. Creamer.

Private House Leases.

Shaw & Co. have leased for Kathleen K. Donahue the three-story dwelling at 28 Mt. Morris Park West to Charles A. Doelger.

M. Morgenthau Jr. Company Elects New Vice President.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the M. Morgenthau Jr. Company last week L. D. Woodworth of Rochester, N. Y., was elected a director and Vice President of the company.

DASH ESTATE SALE.

An important and interesting feature of the realty market this week will be the auction sale of 329 lots comprising the Dash Estate, in the lower Bronx section, adjacent to Van Cortlandt Park, Riverdale, and Kingsbridge. The property will be sold under the auspices of J. Clarence Davies and Joseph P. Day on Tuesday in the Vesey Street Salesroom beginning at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. Mr. Day, the auctioneer, in speaking yesterday of the sale, said:

"The location of the Dash Estate lots is not ordinary. Four blocks face on Broadway, fronting on both the east and west sides of the thoroughfare. The major portion of the remaining lots front on streets and avenues immediately adjacent to Broadway, Kingsbridge Avenue, the 238th Street subway station, the 238th Street and East Bronx trolley car line, the Broadway trolley, and the Putnam division of the New York Central Railroad.

"Van Cortlandt Park, with its parade grounds, baseball and football fields, golf links, croquet grounds, tennis courts, lake, and playgrounds, together with the Barnard and Horace Mann School for boys, and the residential colony at Fieldston, are in close proximity to the 242nd Street Station. Forty-seven of the lots are well located for high-class improvements, enjoying picturesque surroundings, in the Spuyten Duyvil Parkway, Fieldston Road, Waldo and Tibbett Avenues, 244th and 245th Streets.

"West of Kingsbridge Avenue most of the lots are below grade and extend to Spuyten Duyvil Road, now being paved and improved with a sewer. In addition to the Spuyten Duyvil Road frontage a number of the lots front on Corlear and Tibbett Avenues, 236th, 238th, and 240th Streets.

PUBLIC HEARING DENIED.

Property Owners Will Fight for Line Across L. I. Meadows.

Residents and property owners of Corona, L. I., who desired to have the street car service of the New York & Queens County Railway Company re-established across the Flushing meadows, and who were supported by Borough President Connolly and Alderman Dujat, have failed in their efforts.

A communication has been received by Borough President Connolly, who presented the petition for a public hearing on the application for a renewal of the service, from Secretary Whitney of the Public Service Commission, stating that the application for a public hearing has been denied.

"The service on this line was discontinued by an order of July 29, 1915, and no sufficient reasons for a rehearing have been presented," read the findings of the commission.

President Connolly said after the receipt of the communication that the matter would not be permitted to rest at this point. He said he will confer with residents of the district and after he learns of their wishes he will take some further action.

New Paving in Manhattan.

Borough President Marks announced yesterday that the following streets are about to be repaved, and he requests that residents on these streets take notice that any desired sub-surface connections for gas, electricity, steam, or water should be made at once, for after the new pavement is laid no cut therein will be permitted for one year except in case of accident. New type signs with this warning are now being placed at the corners of the streets about to be paved.

Asphalt—Arden Street, Nagle Avenue to Sherman Avenue; 161st Street, Fort Washington Avenue to Riverside Drive; Lexington Avenue, Thirty-eighth Street to Forty-first Street; Broadway, west side, 108th to 110th Street.

Granite—Thirteenth Street, Third to Fourth Avenue; Front Street, Whitehall Street to Coenties Slip, and Old Slip to Fulton Street; Fifty-fifth Street, Eleventh Avenue to Twelfth Avenue; Eighteenth Street, Sixth Avenue to Seventh Avenue.

Harlem Apartment at Foreclosure.

The seven-story Gainsboro apartment house on the southwest corner of Fifth Avenue and 120th Street, 100.11 by 136, will be sold at auction in the Vesey Street Room on Nov. 5 by the M. Morgenthau Jr. Company. The sale is due to a foreclosure action by the Baron de Hirsch Fund to recover a mortgage with interest of about $235,000. In addition, there are unpaid taxes. The assessed value of the property last year was $310,000.

Bergen County Realty Meeting.

A meeting of the real estate brokers of Bergen County, N. J., will be held tomorrow evening at the Union League Club, Hackensack, for the purpose of completing the organization of the Bergen County Realty Brokers' Association. The committee in charge consists of John M. Contant, Chairman; Fred M. Fountain, James. W. Mercer, Walter Scott, Alexander B. Roberts, E. B. Westervelt, George Y. Allaire, and Frank Washington Brown.

Factories on Fifth Avenue.

On Fifth Avenue, between Twelfth and Twenty-third Streets, there are 491 garment factories. Fifteen years ago there wasn't any.

NEWARK BUILDING GREAT TERMINAL PORT ON TRACT OF OLD DESERTED MEADOWS

Over $2,000,000 Already Expended, Three Hundred Acres Reclaimed for Industrial Activity and Channel Dredged from the Bay—Facilities for 1,200-Foot Piers.

A STRIKING object lesson of what may be accomplished in reclaiming for useful purposes the great salt meadow tracts in the metropolitan territory was shown last week at the first public inspection of the new terminal site projected for Newark. This development of a large part of the formerly deserted waterfront on Newark Bay is a municipal undertaking and it is one of the greatest pieces of land improvement work ever projected by any city in this country.

The city authorities, the Board of Trade, the Traffic Club, and other organizations of Newark believe that in their hitherto useless meadows they possess the making of a great terminal. Not only is it destined to be a busy shipping centre with excellent dockage facilities, but with its advantages for factories, it also seems likely to become one of the greatest industrial centres in the East, if not in the entire country.

Mayor Raymond of Newark designated last Wednesday by special proclamation as Port Newark Terminal Day, and the crowd of sightseers, engineers, railroad and shipping representatives which flocked to the transformed meadow land gave the semblance of a general holiday to the celebration of the completion in part of the first section of the terminal project.

The visitors were able to walk dry shod over a spendidly filled in area of about 300 acres, the greater part of which could be used today for the erection of industrial buildings. In addition, a new channel has been dredged giving access to the reclaimed tract from Newark Bay. This new channel, which will now admit boats of light draught, will extend inward from the bay 2,500 feet, and will ultimately have a depth of twenty feet at low water. On the bay frontage of the terminal tract facilities have been provided for several enormous piers, 1,200 feet in length, and able to accommodate the largest vessels afloat.

Some idea of the extent of the work already accomplished and the faith of Newark's municipal heads in their city's future commercial expansion may be seen in the fact that close to $2,500,000 has already been spent by the city under a special act of the Legislature authorizing the expenditure of over $3,000,000 in the construction of the first unit.

The City of Newark has acquired title to 1,000 acres of meadow property and as opportunity offers it will all be developed similar to the portion now nearing complete improvement.

James M. Reilly, Secretary of the Newark Board of Trade, in a statement of what the terminal is now and means to be in the future says:

"In the near future it is possible that the Government will recognize the strategical advantages of Newark Bay as an inland harbor for the smaller class of war vessels, in connection with the approved plans for the cutting of a system of intracoastal canals, particularly the canal to connect the Delaware with the Hudson, and it is more than surmise to expect that the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress will continue to favor the development of Newark Bay, because of its importance as a part of the Port of New York, and because of the present-day need of additional wharf facilities to accommodate the increase in maritime traffic.

"The channel depth in Newark Bay has been increased, by appropriations made by Congress within recent years, from twelve to twenty feet at mean low water, and the corps of engineers of the United States Army are now engaged in making surveys under the direction of Congress, to ascertain the cost of dredging the entire area of the bay to a uniform depth of twenty feet; also to ascertain the cost of dredging additional channels along the eastern and western shore to permit of the development of the shore frontage on plans similar to that which is being carried out in connection with the Port Newark Terminal operations now being developed by the city."

In reclaiming the area a fill of six feet above mean low water has been made. Streets and connecting highways will soon be constructed and facilities for sewerage, drainage, water supply, fire protection and transportation are being planned.

On the important subject of railroad facilities, a prime necessity for successful industrial development, Mr. Reilly says:

"In connection with the work going on at the bay front, the work of construction of new arteries for travel from built-up sections is being rapidly pushed to completion, and a municipal railroad, part of which is already constructed, will be connected with the Pennsylvania, the New Jersey Central and the Lehigh Valley systems. It will undoubtedly be extended in the future to the Erie and Lackawanna railways.

"Each city block, as laid out on the plan, has been designed with the idea of meeting the requirements of all sizes and conditions necessary in the location of industrial plants with certain reservations for commercial and terminal uses. These blocks or squares will have an area of about ten acres each, which will be subdivided as small as one-third of an acre in such a way as to afford to each every advantage provided in connection with the general scheme.

"The wider streets will be those running toward the long central dock, and along these will be laid the railway tracks. A portion of the cross streets will be used for factory sidings for plants too small to have tracks or sidings laid within their own buildings. The private factory sidings will be furnished by the city at cost, while the sidings on the cross streets referred to above will be worked along the lines of regular railroad freight stations, receiving and delivering freight without cost, giving an efficient and prompt service.

"A plan for the transportation of labor is included. It is expected the Central Railroad of New Jersey will build a passenger station on the site, which will give service to the centre of Newark, to Jersey City and New York. Arrangements are under way with the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey for an extension of a trolley line to the development."

The general plan has been devised by City Engineer Morris R. Sherred, assisted by James C. Hallock, under the direction of the Board of Street and Water Commissioners, which is now formulating a plan for long-term leaseholds. The rental value, it is estimated, will run from $500 up to $750 per acre.

A condition of the lease will provide that all improvements may be purchased by the city, at its option, at an appraised value, on the termination of the lease, and that all abandoned improvements will revert to the city.

"The City of Newark," concludes Mr. Reilly, "has begun the serious business of telling the industrial world of America what it has to offer in factory sites and in water and rail shipping facilities. And what better argument need be advanced than to merely point out the already congested condition of New York Harbor, where the limit has practically been reached of its dock and shipping capacity and with wharfage charges almost prohibitive?"

PROPERTY OWNERS CONDEMN NEW CONSTITUTION

The United Real Estate Owners' Association has launched a campaign against the proposed constitutional amendments and in a circular letter to taxpayers advises them to vote against all the propositions except that which provides $27,000,000 canal bonds.

This circular letter states that a careful analysis has been made of each and every amendment and cites the following articles in its arguments against the adoption of the Constitution:

"Article III, Section 11. The present Constitution provides that no member of Congress, civil or military officer, or city government officer, who shall be such, or shall have been such within one hundred days prior to election, shall be eligible to the Legislature; this section has been eliminated in the proposed new Constitution; this is a very necessary provision, as it prevents the misuse or the existing office to further the political ambitions of such officeholder.

"Article III. Section 29. This gives the right to the Legislature, which it has not now, of prohibiting manufacturing in tenements; this prevents any woman with dependent children, who cannot go to a factory to work, from taking work home to earn her own and children's livings; such a law would be a disgrace to the State of New York.

"Article V. Section 1. Takes the power from the Legislature to make a budget and gives it to the Governor; this is in favor of absolute monarchy and against Parliaments and Legislatures; this is the United States and not Russia; it is questionable whether this is not a violation of the Constitution of the United States, and that an injunction would lie against submitting the proposed new Constitution to the people.

"Article VIII. Under the guise of 'quickening' law suits, which is necessary, it saddles the people with over $1,000,000 more expenses to pay; make the Judges work longer hours per diem and more months per annum for their present salaries, which are more than high, and justice can be 'quickened.'

"Article IX. Section 2. The present Constitution prohibits the State Controller from borrowing over $1,000,000 in anticipation of taxes; under the proposed new Constitution this $1,000,000 is wiped out and the Controller can borrow any amount; this is most dangerous.

"Article X. Secs. 2 and 3.—This is wholly bad; this means that New York City couldn't tax 'subject matter' unless the same 'subject matter' was taxed in every municipality in this State; suppose New York City financially required an income tax, a business tax, an occupancy tax, an occupation tax, &c., or any of them, and none of the other municipalities financially required such, New York City couldn't get the tax relief it required.

"This article takes the taxation of public service corporations' property from the municipality and gives it to the State; the State could value the New York City realty of such corporations at 25 per cent. of its actual value and levy a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent., while the city's valuation is on a 100 per cent. basis and tax rate 2 per cent.; further, there is no mention made as to whether the State or the city gets such taxes; the implication, however, is that the State does. Preposterous and vicious are these sections.

"Article XI., Sec. 11.—This legalizes New York City debt in excess of the present constitutional debt limit, which may be outstanding on the passage of the proposed new Constitution; it virtually increases the maximum debt limit of New York City about $200,000,000.

"Article XI, Sec. 12.—This is a new section and empowers the Legislature to provide for methods and limitations under which municipal debts may be contracted; only a court could decide what the word 'limitations' means.

"Article XV., (Home Rule Article.)—This article is not broad enough and at the same time is financially far too broad; the present New York City Charter is sufficiently broad to permit the Administration to incur willful and extravagant expenditures for budget and debt purposes; the City is well nigh bankrupt and the realty owners are being financially ruined under the present charter; with further grant of powers 'what the harvest will be' will stagger humanity; the voters of New York City to a man should vote against the proposed new Constitution on account of this article alone; and the voters outside of New York City should also vote against it, as the day may come when their taxes will be increased by inability of the State to collect the city's proportion of a direct State tax; it is questionable whether this article isn't a violation of the Constitution of the United States, and that an injunction will lie against the proposed new Constitution to the people.

"This Association wants in any new Constitution the following:

"The City of New York to be protected against being compelled to pay, through a direct State tax, for up-State local improvements; and that the State shall make its own tax 'subject matters,' valuations thereof and tax rates thereon and not leave such to the municipalities.

"The City of New York to be protected against financial mandatory State legislation affecting the municipality, irrespective of where originating.

"The City of New York to be protected by State control against the City's own extravagant expenditures and unnecessary public improvements; this for the protection of the State itself and of the city's inhabitants.

"The up-State municipalities to be protected against the possibility of having to pay New York City's proper share of a direct State tax by financial inability of the City's tax payers to pay their share of such tax, due to the City of New York having exhausted the taxpaying ability of its people."

APARTMENT ACTIVITY.

Great Leasing Season in Park Avenue Residential Area.

Some interesting facts regarding the leasing activity this season in the east side Park Avenue residential locality were given yesterday by Lawrence B. Elliman of the firm of Pease & Elliman:

"During the six months ended Oct. 1, last," he said, "we have closed 283 apartment leases. During the same period in 1914 we only closed 182 leases, showing an increase of 101 leases, or nearly 60 per cent. We have been asked many times why the apartment business is growing so rapidly. We believe this is due primarily to the fact that as a rule the owners of private houses do not attempt to put them in first-class condition until after the tenant is secured, simply telling the broker that they will do anything within reason for a tenant, while the apartment houses are at all times kept in the best possible condition.

"Out of twenty-six apartment houses of the highest class, of which we are agents, with suites from $1,200 to $9,000 per annum, and containing 601 apartments, fourteen buildings have no vacancies, the leases running from three to five years, and seven of the balance have only one vacancy each.

"The private house market this Fall has shown signs of revival, and if owners would put their houses in as attractive condition as the apartments, with which they have to compete, we believe that there would be comparatively as few vacancies among private houses as there are among apartments."

NEW WASHINGTON MARKET.

Washington Market, completely remodeled and equipped with the best modern and sanitary appliances, will be formally opened tomorrow with a celebration which will be continued with many interesting features during the week. There will be a parade tomorrow morning from the City Hall of the Exempt Firemen, whose former headquarters were at Washington Market. Those invited to speak are Mayor Mitchel, Controller Prendergast, President McAneny of the Board of Aldermen, Borough President Marks, and Commissioner Ralph Folks.

Friday and Saturday will be Market Days and special prices will be offered the public. On these days the Housewives League will give special instructions to housewives how to purchase and save money.

One of the interesting exhibits will be the automatic electric milking of cows, separating cream from milk, churning butter, clarifying milk, filling and bottling cream and milk.

The new market represents a property value of nearly $2,000,000. The property is assessed at $1,200,000, the city has spent in improvements over $132,000 and the merchants on fixtures and new stands nearly $500,000.

In the modernized market every stand is connected with electric light, gas, hot and cold water, sewer, telephone, and refrigeration system.

Apartments Leased.

Acreage Sale at Alpine.

The Payson, McL. Merrill Company and S. Osgood Pell & Co. have sold for Mrs. James B. Reynolds and Miss Alice M. Dike to August J. Dinklage, fifteen acres at Alpine, Bergen County, N. J., situated on the Palisades, directly opposite Yonkers. The land has a frontage of 750 feet on the Hudson Boulevard, with a frontage of over 1,000 feet on the Palisades.

TO SECURE LOWER INSURANCE RATES

Owners Who Obey Fire Prevention Orders Fail to Obtain Benefits.

RISK REDUCED TO MINIMUM

Chief of Fire Prevention Bureau Explains Where Savings May Be Effected.

By reducing the fire risk upon improved real estate, it is but natural to expect that the fire insurance premium should be correspondingly decreased. By compliance with the various orders of the different city departments having to do with reducing fire risk to a minimum property owners should be consequently entitled to lower fire insurance rates.

There is no doubt whatsoever that the Board of Fire Underwriters graduates its rates in accordance with the installation of fire-prevention appliances in various buildings. However, the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests has believed that there is still considerable opportunity for property owners to avail themselves of lower fire insurance rates when they have actually complied with the orders of the Fire Prevention Bureau.

Conferences were held with the Fire Department to ascertain whether any definite plan could be worked out by which property owners would receive the benefit of lower insurance rates. In this respect, the following communication to the council from the Chief of the Fire Prevention Bureau, Joseph O. Hammitt, may be of interest at this time:

"I believe that sometimes property owners who are entitled to reduction in their insurance premiums because of compliance with orders of the Bureau of Fire Prevention do not get this reduction simply because they do not ask for it.

"It would be well to advise every property owner who makes his buildings safer against the possibility of fire, or against the likelihood of the spread from floor to floor, or from one section to another of his building, of any fire that occurs, to take the matter up with his insurance broker and get advice as to the possible effect upon the rate of insurance premium.

"Large reductions in insurance are, of course, granted for sprinkler protection, yet the Fire Department does not feel justified in requiring in most occupancies the full amount of sprinkler protection which would be demanded by the Insurance Exchange for the maximum possible reduction in insurance rates.

"Property owners who are installing sprinklers, in response to orders of the Fire Department, should, and usually do, I believe, take this into consideration. Most of the equipments are now installed in accordance with plans approved both by the Insurance Exchange and the Fire Department; yet there are certainly some cases of sprinkler protection installed in cellars for which a certain amount of insurance reduction would be justified and has not been obtained because the matter has not been properly followed up.

"The time to follow the matter up, of course, is before instead of after the sprinkler protection is installed, because the property owner may find it to his advantage to spend a little more money on the sprinkler equipment, in order to obtain the insurance reduction. Another class of Fire Department orders, compliance with which should justify a reduction in insurance, is the orders for protection or inclosure of vertical shafts, such as stairway, elevator, light, and vent shafts. The purpose of these inclosures, except where intended primarily for the protection of stair exits, is to prevent spread of fire from floor to floor. This is a matter which is of direct bearing upon the insurance risk, whether the shaft is fully inclosed or only provided with trap doors.

"In these cases also the time to take the matter up, from an insurance viewpoint, is before rather than after the order has been complied with, since the Fire Department might accept as compliance with the order a type of trap door or of inclosure that would obtain the maximum insurance credit. A third class of orders that should have a bearing upon insurance rates is the orders for the installation of portable fire appliances. These include everything from water buckets and sand buckets to patented chemical fire extinguishers.

"The Insurance Exchange and the Board of Fire Underwriters do not inspect every risk inspected by the Fire Department. In many cases insurance rates are established by the exchange, therefore, without adequate information such as would be obtained by inspection. I presume that if an application were made in any case for a reduction in rates, the reduction would hardly be granted without inspection. I say that I presume this would be the procedure; the fact is I am not at all thoroughly familiar with the practices of the Insurance Exchange in establishing its rates.

"It should be possible for the property owner to have his interests protected in every case by his insurance broker. I think, however, there must be many occupancies in the city where the insurance rate is lower than if the Insurance Exchange or Board of Fire Underwriters had made an inspection of the premises. Inspections are periodically made by the New York Board of Fire Underwriters of the larger risks in the city."

THE HUNT FOR NEW SOURCES OF REVENUE

Who Is to Provide the Money Required to Meet the Expenditures of the City?

INTERESTING SUGGESTIONS

Numerous Exemptions Permitted to Personalty and Not Allowed to Realty Add to Inequality.

Many new sources of revenue to meet the demands of New York City's constantly growing budget have been suggested and advocated before the Legislative Committee on Taxation now holding sessions in this city.

To the question "Who is to provide the money required to meet the expenditures of the city?" Adolph Boskowitz has made the following answer to the committee:

"The basis of my suggestion is that the expenditures made by the various departments of the municipality are for the benefit of the entire population, poor and rich alike, and that these beneficiaries should all contribute in the form of taxes, so that the annual budget would balance the income and expenditures. The proportion to be contributed by each beneficiary is equitably measured by his gross receipts, from whatever source they may be obtained, and is less difficult of ascertainment than if taxes were assessed on net income.

"A tax (whether called, license, poll, vocation, or income) based on the gross receipts, exceeding say $500 per annum, would not only make contributors of nearly the entire population of five millions residing in Greater New York, but also every individual, firm or corporation, conducting any business or following any occupation or vocation here, regardless of their respective residences.

"The sum total of these gross receipts would be so enormous as to reduce the rate of taxation to a fraction of 1 per cent., possibly one-quarter or one-half per cent. The source from which these gross receipts are derived, whether from realty or personalty, would become immaterial, as there is no justification for making a distinction between the two as to taxability. The mobility of personal property and the reverse of realty has made it possible to burden the latter (to the breaking point) for the benefit of the former, and these conditions always have existed.

"The numerous exemptions permitted to personalty and not allowed to realty also add to this inequality in the taxation of these two kinds of property. A net income tax is objectionable for the same reason. But a tax based upon gross receipts, allowing no exemption whatsoever, would put all on an equitable basis, and each man or woman, firm and corporation, would contribute to the support of the municipality the same percentage based on annual gross receipts, be they large or small, profitable or otherwise.

"That contribution would be so small for each as to prove no hardship either to the laborer or the millionaire, and all classes between these extremes.

"As far as the municipality is concerned all enjoy the same advantages and privileges, available alike to each. The public schools, parks, police and fire protection, water and gas supply, construction and repair of streets, transportation facilities; in fact, every activity of the municipality is shared by every one who resides in the city or comes from neighboring places or States to pursue a business or vocation here.

"Assume that the license, poll, vocation, or income tax referred to is assessed on all gross receipts exceeding $500 and the rate is one-half per cent. Take the clerk or workman earning only $600. His contribution would be 50 cents per annum. The merchant whose receipts from sales of merchandise are $1,000,000, his contribution would be $5,000.

"The lawyer's or physician's receipts from the practice of his profession—$5,000—he would pay $25. And this method could be applied to every business, trade, profession, or vocation of every kind, and even to those persons who follow none of those, but simply reside here and have receipts from any source—a trust estate, legacy, gift, &c.

"Besides the receipts from following their respective business or vocations, many individuals would have receipts from other sources, all of which would be added and become taxable. Even if the rate of taxation were to be 1 per cent., which is improbable in view of the vast sum that would be taxable, the contribution made by each would prove no hardship and in any event would be equitable, because levied for like advantage and benefits enjoyed by each.

"Not only now, but from time immemorial realty, because of its immobility, was selected to, did, and does bear the brunt of the taxation. It is no exaggeration to say that even with the so-called reduction in the assessment of realty (still grossly overvalued especially from the net income point) it still pays 15 per cent. to 25 per cent. on gross income (rents) received and 40 per cent to 50 per cent on the net rents, if there are any. This is equivalent to confiscation in a short period of years, effected by foreclosures, with a deficiency judgment against the mortgagor.

"The ownership of realty is a business conducted for profit, the same as the conduct of a wholesale or retail business, or of any profession or vocation. Where is the business, profession, vocation, or occupation which would permit of a tax similar to that levied on realty that would not lead straight to bankruptcy in a brief space of time. Even the countries now engaged in war, expending $20,000,000 per day, and incurring an annual indebtedness of thousands of millions, have not reached anything like the percentage of taxation levied on realty in New York now and for many years past.

"The fact is that realty, corporations, and the 50,000 residents who paid personal taxes have borne the entire taxation of the city and the remaining 4,000,000 or more contributed nothing.

"It is said they pay indirectly in rents, but the fact is that the vast majority of tenants, whether occupying offices, stores, apartments, or residences, are doing so at less than cost to the owner, who either gets no income at all or only a small percentage even on the depreciated value of his property, and has had to bear the loss of depreciation besides. If original cost is taken as a basis for figuring income, it is nil for the vast majority of realty owners in this city.

"With an assessment of about $11,000,000,000 of realty and personalty owned by the residents of New York, the gross receipts annually of say 4,000,000 would require an average contribution of $50 each in order to produce $200,000,000. But even if the total gross receipts should not exceed the sum assessed as above, and the rate imposed be 2 per cent., the burden would be lifted from the few hundred thousand realty owners and 50,000 who paid on personalty last year and shared with the 4,000,000 who heretofore paid nothing, but whose annual gross receipts exceed $500, as in all equity it should be. If the gross annual receipts exceed the $11,000,000,000, the rate of taxation would be correspondingly reduced, and in either case nobody is paying more than the fair and equitable proportion of taxation.

"The questions of evasion and double taxation would be dealt with by the administrative end of the tax department, as also the machinery for collecting the tax.

"Another important element in favor of the proposed scheme is the immediate transformation of 4,000,000 or more of indifferent into as many interested parties, keen and alert to watch the economic and proper expenditure of their contributions by the municipal administration. Political party lines in municipal matters would be obliterated, as the taxpayer would vote only for such men and measures as promised the best results for the city regardless of the politics of the officials or whether the measures proposed emanated from a non-political, or mixed political, or political source. That administration which conducted municipal affairs for the best interests of the city would be sure of re-election, irrespective of the political party the members of the administration belonged to."

Motion Picture Studio Site.
I have been instructed by a Western Syndicate needing cash to dispose of 32 acres situated at Grantwood, on the western slope of the Palisades, overlooking the Hackensack Valley with view of the Orange Mountains and surrounding country extending for miles. This property has 600 feet frontage on Bergen Boulevard, an 80 foot street, running along top of the Western edge of the Palisades; a depth of 1,800 feet and a rear line of 800 feet. It will be sold in its entirety or cut up in tracts of approximately 200 feet frontage on Bergen Boulevard extending through to the rear line. The property is absolutely unrestricted, with water and electricity at hand, and sewer and gas 200 feet distant. Two trolley lines connect the property with the 130th St. and 42nd St. ferries. This property can be developed for moderate priced dwellings of which there is a shortage at present in this section, or it would be an ideal site for Motion Picture Studio and manufacturing plant. As it must be sold no reasonable offer will be refused and suitable terms made with responsible parties.
No exchange proposition considered. All brokers protected.

WARNS GERMANY OF HEAVIER BURDENS

Helfferich Admits That Financing War's Second Year Is More Difficult.

CAN'T TAX WAR PROFITS NOW

But He Suggests Increasing Tax on Munitions Makers' Incomes at a Later Date.

The Frankfurter Zeitung of Aug. 21 prints the stenographic report of the recent speech in the Reichstag by the German Secretary of the Treasury, Dr. Karl Helfferich, concerning the third German war loan. Dr. Helfferich estimated the cost of the war to Germany at 2,000,000,000 marks ($500,000,000) a month, and admitted that Germany previously had a heavier bill to pay than any other belligerent power; but he added that England had overtaken Germany as the chief spender of the war.

"I need give no reasons for the appropriation," he said, "for the reasons are self-evident. But I desire to present a picture of the economic situation. Through this appropriation the war credit demand rise to 30,000,000,000 marks, ($7,500,000,000.) Our estimates of the war expenses have even been exceeded. That is understandable when we consider that ever new formations must be filled up, that the prices of raw materials have risen, and that the consumption of materials and munitions has increased enormously. The building of roads, bridges, and railroads—all that increases the expenses and mounts up to the monthly sum of 2,000,000,000 marks.

"We must be clear in our recognition of the fact that in the second year of the war it will be in many respects harder to hold out than in the first. Greater sums must be raised to ameliorate distress. For this purpose a further 200,000,000 marks ($50,000,000) is set aside. Every German knew from the beginning why these great sacrifices were made, and he knows it today also, surely, that they are not made in vain. We desire to wage this war to a victorious conclusion, to a peace for which we can be responsible to our own conscience. (Cries of "Bravo!")

Can't Tax War Profits Now.

"We are taking up a new war loan because we do not wish during the war to create new burdens by means of new taxes. Even with the sharpest straining, only a part of the expenses will be covered in this way. Concerning taxes on war profits, the Ministers of Finance of the individual States have come to an understanding, but the time is not yet ripe for Legislative proposals. Only after the conclusion of the war will every one be able to ascertain what the war has brought to him. The Government is convinced that an indisputable reckonging up of war profits is an impossibility as a matter of technical taxation. But it is of opinion, also, that all those who, during the war and in contrast with the great mass of their fellow-countrymen, have been in a position to increase their fortunes to a considerable extent, are also in a position and in duty bound to participate in a greater degree than in times of peace in bearing the burdens of the war. For this purpose there is provided an application of the Imperial tax on increase of fortunes.

"Just how far in individual cases the income during the period of the war will be dealt with in calculating the amount of taxes, is still being studied, together with a series of other questions. There is agreement on the point that the increase of fortunes through inheritance shall be exempt from special taxation. Furthermore, there is unanimity of opinion that in view of the purpose of these taxes, to help lessen the burden of the Empire's war expenses, the taxes can be paid not only in cash, but also in war loans. To be sure, the expectation of taxes on war profits need keep no one from subscribing to the war loan. (Laughter and applause.) That is necessary. A great number of persons have asked me: 'Surely we cannot subscribe to a war loan if later we may be subjected to what is perhaps confiscatory taxation and then must resell the loan with a loss in rates?' Therefore, to dissipate this uneasiness, I say emphatically that the special tax can and should be paid in war loans. (A question: 'At what figure?') Naturally at the nominal rate. If God grants us victory and permits us to shape the peace according to our wishes, then we shall not forget the question of cost, either. ('Very right.')

"Preparations for the new loan have been made and are to be completed at once. Through this loan we must raise the sums which we have spent over and above the 13,500,000,000 marks ($3,375,000,000) already subscribed. In this connection it may be mentioned that the ordinary budget for 1914-1915 has shown a surplus of 219,000,000 marks ($54,750,000.)

Special Inducements for Subscribers.

"Abroad it is still believed that our loans are made through the savings banks. We have an interest in energetically destroying the system of lies that is spread abroad about our financial accomplishments. Our savings banks are so far 20,000,000,000 marks ($5,000,000,000) stronger than at the outbreak of the war. (Hear! Hear!) The liquidity of money has even favored speculation on the Stock Exchange, so that a warning had to be issued. Today all available money belongs to the Fatherland, and war loans are the only loan paper. (Bravo!) In the loans we desire to keep to the old well-tried system. We shall draw upon all the postal institutions of the entire German Empire for subscriptions to the loans. Furthermore, we shall permit small partial loans for subscribers for small amounts down to 100 marks ($25.) We hope, furthermore, by means of several good examples, to win the employers to inducing their employes and workingmen to subscribe for small amounts. We shall make easy the business of subscription for the large subscribers. Besides, we shall this time, as the result of experience with the former loan, issue ad interim notes, so that the subscriber to the loan may soon have something in his hands. We were unable in the second loan to anticipate to what an enormous extent small amounts would be subscribed. Nor must it be forgotten under what difficulties the administration of the Imperial debt works. The work is almost insuperable.

"This time we may try to make propaganda for the war loan even more extensively than on the two earlier occasions. To be sure, we shall not seek to emulate the sensational advertising to which England has had recourse. We can forego that. We do not desire to sink to circus advertising. The German gives to the Fatherland what it needs. Thereby he does not give alms to the Fatherland, but rather is fulfilling a duty. (Great applause.)

"But we desire to utilize the power of propaganda to the full. Clergymen, teachers, and community leaders have helped us bravely, and we must thank them. I count also upon the Reichstag Delegates, so that the patriotic conscience may be strengthened. In the preparation of the loan we shall keep to the straight, simple paths. The 5 per cent. war loan is the best and the best-liked paper in Germany. We shall keep the same rate of interest, but we shall simply choose a higher rate of issue.

"If there is anything that can raise our confidence it is a comparison with the financial conditions and the financial measures of our opponents. The total costs of this enormous war amount, according to accurate estimate, now to $200,000,000 marks ($75,000,000) a day for the six belligerent powers. The monthly war costs thus exceed 8,000,000,000 marks, ($2,000,000,000,) and for the year they amount to more than 100,000,000,000 marks. ($25,000,000,000.) This is the greatest devastation and shifting of values that history has ever seen.

England Spending More than Germany

"I must therefore admit that Germany up to a very few months ago has borne the greatest burdens, and today the total sum is probably greater for Germany than for any other country. But England has now reached the highest point in current war expenses. There the expenses per day seem to have gone beyond 80,000,000 marks, ($20,000,000.) We shall not begrudge this advantage to the Englishmen, to whom the idea of a record means so much. (Laughter.) Of the total war expenses almost two-thirds fall to the share of the coalition of our enemies; somewhat more than one-third falls to the lot of ourselves and our allies. Up to now we have, in common with our allies, raised the expenses through loans. Quite aside from the result of our loans, I wish to emphasize the fact that Austria-Hungary, with its war loan of 8,000,000,000 kronen, ($1,600,000,000,) has achieved a mighty feat. France remains far behind Austria-Hungary. France has accomplished only half of that. Of Russia, Italy, and the other small comrades of the Entente I shall not speak. One should not be cruel, even toward one's foes. (Much laughter.)

"Our war loans have not sunk a single day in their rate, while in England the loans have fallen several points, including even the latest. We bear any financial comparison favorably.

"Nevertheless attempts are made to flood the world with lies in every realm. The Englishmen, to be sure, do not themselves believe what they are trumpeting up and reporting. But it is calculated for the small States and also for France, where the financial situation is certainly not pleasant. There it has recently been asserted that the size of the gold reserve of the German Imperial Bank is due to the fact that we have appropriated the gold of the Austro-Hungarian banks. (Laughter.) Our banks have made easy many a business transaction for our allies, but of gold we did not relieve them. To take gold from one's allies is not the German style; that is British. (Great applause.) The mockery about the status of the German rate of exchange has with time proved unpalatable to our foes, after the sterling rate in New York declined by 5 per cent., and the French values are now worse than the German. Our financial success is based not only upon savings, but rather upon the putting forth of all our energies of work in all realms. In that we surpass our foes. In that they cannot imitate us at a day's notice, even as they cannot imitate our army. ("Bravo!")

"We carry victory within us, and feel the prophecies of victory with double intensity in these days of great decisions. The German people will keep its place in the world and fulfill its mission. (Applause.)"

FOR LONG-TERM MORTGAGES

Financial Institutions to Discuss New Plan at Conference.

A conference of the various financial institutions of New York City interested in mortgage loans will be held in the Chamber of Commerce Oct. 29 at 3 o'clock. The object of the conference is to find a solution of the mortgage situation in this city, and, if possible, have the big loaning institutions agree to issue long-term mortgages, amortized by annual payments.

During the early days of the European war, when the financial stringency in New York City was pronounced, the conditions in the mortgage market were a source of considerable anxiety both to borrowers and lenders. In many instances lenders were required to assume the ownership of property in order to preserve the integrity of their mortgages, notwithstanding the fact that mortgages were originally placed upon the property at two-thirds of the actual market value at the time of making the loan. It was apparent that a difficult problem confronted real estate men. It was during this period that very thoughtful study was given to the principle embodied in a long-term mortgage amortized by annual payments, by the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests. This form of mortgage would encourage thrift on the part of the borrower by requiring him to pay annually a small proportion of his mortgage indebtedness, while it would relieve him from the necessity of raising a large amount of money to pay off the mortgage when it became due. In addition it would give the privilege to small owners of having a mortgage for a period of from ten to twenty years, instead of a short-term mortgage of from three to five years, which must now be renewed at no small expense. This particular form of mortgage has been objected to by some property owners, in that it would be difficult for them to pay off each year a proportion of their mortgage indebtedness. In order that this entire policy may be thoroughly considered, the Advisory Council has called a conference of various financial institutions interested in this subject, as well as brokers and owners.

The following financial institutions have accepted the invitation of the Council to be present at this conference: New York Life Insurance Company, Mutual Life Insurance Company, Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, Equitable Life Assurance Society, Lawyers Mortgage Company, Lawyers Title and Trust Company, New York Title Insurance Company, Union Trust Company of New York, Columbia Trust Company, Equitable Trust Company, Fidelity Trust Company, New York Trust Company, Franklin Trust Company, United States Mortgage and Trust Company, Hudson Trust Company, Central Trust Company, Farmers Loan and Trust Company, Title Guarantee and Trust Company, United States Trust Company of New York, Bowery Savings Bank, Maiden Lane Savings Bank, Excelsior Savings Bank, Union Dime Savings Bank, Emigrants Industrial Savings Bank, Irving Savings Institution, Dry Dock Savings Institution, Italian Savings Bank, Williamsburg Savings Bank, Queens County Savings Bank, Greater New York Savings Bank, German Savings Bank of Brooklyn, East River Savings Institution, Dollar Savings Bank, and the East Brooklyn Savings Bank.

TELLS CITY'S GREATNESS.

Mercantile Association Compiles a New Industrial Index.

Every other person in the United States wears clothes made in New York City, according to an industrial survey of the Metropolitan district by the Central Mercantile Association, some of the results of which were made public yesterday. The survey has been six months in the making and covers 146 typewritten pages filled with maps and tables, showing the commercial advantages of New York over any other city in this country. For instance, it is shown that a manufacturer here can reach seventeen times as many persons for every mile of railroad distribution as he can in the average industrial centre of America.

New York's Metropolitan district contains 7,000,000 persons. For every twelve persons in the United States outside of New York, one lives in the New York City area. New York adds unto itself 100,000 population every year and New York's gain exceeds that of every other city in every decade.

One-fourth of the total banking assets of the United States are in New York. The clearings of New York City banks are nearly 60 per cent. of the total for all the cities of the United States. New York's property values exceed those of Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, and St. Louis combined.

Seventy-seven important foreign lines have terminals in New York harbor and in time of peace a scheduled ocean-going steamer leaves the port every two hours and forty minutes. New York is the most important world port, both in tonnage and value of shipping. Fifty-eight per cent. of the value of all imports and 37 per cent. of the value of all exports of the United States pass through New York harbor. New York harbor has 714 miles of water frontage, and 67 per cent. of the Manhattan waterfront is owned by the city.

The New York Metropolitan district in 1910 had 32,000 manufacturing plants employing 1,000,000 persons, representing an investment of $2,000,000,000 and turning out products valued at $3,000,000,000.

New York produces 10 per cent. of the entire manufactured product of the United States. Approximately one-half the clothing worn in the United States is made in New York. New York has a larger output than Pittsburgh, Boston, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Detroit, Cleveland, and New Orleans combined.

A table of relative fuel costs shows New York in a favorable position. New York's position is very favorable, also, in regard to costs of electric lighting and power. New York has the lowest insurance rate of any American City.

EDUCATION NOTES.

There have been placed as of Oct. 20, 1915, upon the eligible list of women holding licenses as teacher of library practice in evening high schools during 1915-16 the names of the following:

Ursula K. Johnstone, 75; Nannine V. Joseph, 75; Estelle L. Liebmann, 75.

There will be the following cross-country meets: Oct. 30, Morris and Far Rockaway High Schools at Jamaica; Nov. 6, Bryant High School at Jamaica; Nov. 20, Queens Borough championship at Jamaica; Nov. 26, De Witt Clinton at Jamaica, and Dec. 4, city championships, probably at Jamaica.

The Board of Superintendents has requested the Board of Education to approve the plan of the School of Pedagogy of the New York University to make a careful, systematic investigation of children representing the different types of defects in Public School 177, Manhattan.

President Churchill has sent a circular to all the school principals suggesting that during this week they pay such tribute to the memory of the late Dr. Thomas Hunter as will make effective in civic instruction for their pupils his personal qualities and public services.

Frank D. Wilsey, Chairman of the Committee on Buildings of the Board of Education, said yesterday that necessary repairs on the public schools could not be completed if the $50,000 taken from the repairs fund to keep the night schools going was not replaced. He said that there is only $107,000 left in the repairs fund. Of this amount $52,000 is pledged to eight schools in Brooklyn, which are to be remodeled to accommodate the Gary system. This leaves only $55,000 for routine repairs, which is not sufficient.

SING SING 'ALUMNI' TO ORGANIZE SOON

PRISON TRAINING AS ASSET

Employment Bureau Will Recommend Members According to Ossining Work.

The "Sing Sing Alumni Association" is completing plans for a permanent organization. The charter members of the association, who held a banquet at a New York hotel about a month ago in honor of Warden Thomas Mott Osborne of Sing Sing, intend to send out invitations to all graduates of the institution whose addresses can be found, urging them to affiliate with the newly formed association and to share its benefits and social advantages.

Among the benefits, according to an outline of the plans given to a TIMES reporter yesterday, the principal one at the outset will be the "Alumni Employment Bureau." The Alumni Committee in charge of this feature of the association's work will be called upon to keep in touch with manufacturers and business houses generally to find positions for new "graduates" as they leave Warden Osborne's institution and, in case it proves necessary, for older "graduates" who lose their jobs. If the demand for the "graduates" is greater than the supply the would-be employers will be urged to wait for new ones.

Because of the wide variance of training and adaptability of the Sing Sing "graduates," it was explained, the Employment Bureau Committee will have its hands full to find just the right job for each man; it is also recognized that numerous problems will confront the committee. For example, a number of the present members of the Mutual Welfare League in Sing Sing, out of which sprung the idea of an "Alumni Association," to keep the members in touch with one another and Warden Osborne after their departure from their Ossining "Alma Mater," were formerly lawyers in this and other cities. Co-operation on the part of the Bar Association which might lead to reinstatement is not looked for at the outset, at least. Not an insignificant number of the men, too, were better trained as burglars than anything else before entering Sing Sing, but burgling will not be one of the specialties on the "Alumni Association" list. This is where the Sing Sing training will fit the "alumni" for good jobs.

Among the benefits and social advantages to be offered by the new association were named the clubroom which the members proposed to establish somewhere in New York, and the library and writing rooms to be connected with it. On the reading table, of course, The Star of Hope, the periodical now published in Sing Sing, will find prominent place, with other periodicals of the day calculated to be of particular interest to the members. It is also proposed to provide games and other paraphernalia of an up-to-date club, so that the ex-convicts—that is, the "graduates"—will have a place to while away evenings together and talk over the good old "school days."

One of the noteworthy proposals that has met with approval among all of the alumni thus far is an annual banquet, at which the members will have their former jailers as guests of honor.

"Though it may at sound a little strange," Deputy Warden Church of Sing Sing said last night, in the absence of Warden Osborne, "there is a good, sound theory underlying the proposition and it will be well worth watching. Until the 'association' held its dinner in honor of Warden Osborne a month ago ex-convicts were accustomed to hide the fact that they had been in prison as long as they could. When they were found to be ex-convicts they were often discharged, and thus often discouraged and ultimately driven back into crime. These men have decided to make a clean breast of their records before the public and their employers, and to help along the other ex-prisoners who might otherwise fall into the old paths. They will consider their Sing Sing training an asset. The eighteen who dined Warden Osborne had all told their employers that they were ex-convicts, and all of them were making good.

"This is a very significant step in the effort to bring back these men into good standing as valuable members of their communities. With nothing to hide and not only their own reputation but the reputation of all others who frankly admit membership in the 'alumni association' to protect, it can at least be said that the probability of men 'going straight' will be greatly increased."

NEW BANKING OFFICES.

Metropolitan Trust Company's Uptown Branch at 716 Fifth Avenue.

The Metropolitan Trust Company will open its new uptown branch at 716 Fifth Avenue about Feb. 1 next. The building, an artistic two-story structure, adjoins the southwest corner of Fifty-sixth Street, and the lease of the property was recently taken out by the banking concern. The façade of the building will be extensively altered and work is now under way. Holmes & Winslow are the architects. The front will be of white marble in a classic design.

The main banking floor will be 24 feet high, lighted by a large window on Fifth Avenue, and a decorative skylight in the ceiling. The basement will be used for the safe deposit vaults.

The Metropolitan Trust Company, whose main office is at 49 Wall Street, has been established thirty-four years. George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., is the President, Beverly Chew, Vice President, and Edwin F. Rohrebeck, Second Vice President.

Country House Leases.

S. S. Walstrum Gordon & Forman have leased for Nelson Zabriskie his residence at 127 Prospect Street, Ridgewood, N. J., to Capt. Francis Metcalf, and for William Crossley his residence at 51 South Irving Street to G. A. Schmid.

Fish & Marvin have leased the residence of Mrs. William D. Nichols at Scarsborough to Mrs. C. B. Orcutt of Elizabeth, N. J. The property consists of three acres and is very near the Briarcliff Lodge.

New Kind of Telautograph.

A new telautograph or telewriter, an instrument for telegraphic transmission of ordinary handwriting, is reported by Consul General Ernest L. Harris at Stockholm, to have been invented by two Swedish engineers This new apparatus apparently differs entirely from the fundamental principles of other telautographs. Its most characteristic feature seems to be that it can be used independently of the electrical resistance of the line. It can be connected alternately to a long or short line without any adjustment of the resistance, and can consequently be used in connection with the public telephone system. This apparatus has been in practical use for some time in testing purposes, and its manufacture for commercial exploitation has now been started.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

City.

The eligible list for Assistant Fire Marshal is announced. The examination was held May 25. There were 164 candidates. Only sixty-one passed the test. There are four vacancies to be filled at once. Three are in the Fire Marshal's office; the fourth will be a special investigator. The pay is $1,500 a year. Those who obtained a rating of more than 74 are as follows:

W. B. Northrop, 85; J. Cashman, Jr., 84.50; W. G. Copeland, 81.20; F. MacTirnan, 80.10; W. Terbeck, 78; J. A. Tierney, 77.90; E. F. Croker, Jr., 77.20; A. N. Flamm, 77.20; A. Cohn, 77.20; J. Tracy, 77.10; J. Winkler, 77; J. West, 76.50; W. E. Hill, 76; T. Mahoney, 75.90; T. Guinee, Jr., 75.90; F. M. Sexton, 75.60; B. F. Donovan, 75.10; M. Cohen, 74.90; A. McAllister, 74.60; E. Guterman, 74.30.

United States.

The Commission announces for Nov. 2 an examination for senior mechanical engineer, grade 2, for men only, to fill vacancies as they may occur in the Interstate Commerce Commission under the act providing for the valuation of the property of common carriers00, at salaries ranging from $1,800 to $2,700 per annum, with necessary expenses when absent from headquarters in the discharge of official duties. Appointments to these positions will be almost entirely for duty in the field. Competitors will not be assembled for examination, but will be rated on: 1. General and technical education and preliminary or apprenticeship training; 2. Responsible experience and fitness. Applicants must have reached their twenty-fifth, but not their forty-fifth, birthday on the date of the examination. Further information may be obtained from the Commission, Washington, D. C.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

Whereas a petition was filed in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, on the 20th day of October, 1915, by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, praying for a limitation of its liability as owner of the barge P. R. R. No. 267, concerning the loss, damage, injury and destruction occasioned by the barge P. R. R. No. 267 coming in contact with the barge P. R. R. No. 434 on September 14th, 1914; and

Whereas the petitioner filed with the Clerk of this Court on October 20th, 1915, an ad interim stipulation in the sum of $15,500, with interest from September 14, 1914, duly approved, undertaking to pay into Court within ten days after the entry of an order confirming the report of the Commissioner to be appointed to appraise the amount or value of the petitioner's interest in said barge P. R. R. No. 267 and her pending freight, if any, the amount or value of such interest as thus ascertained, or to file in this proceeding a bond or stipulation for value in the usual form, with surety in said amount.

Now, therefore, pursuant to the monition issued out of said Court, to me directed and delivered, I do hereby cite all persons claiming damages for any and all losses, damages and injuries caused by or resulting from the contact of the barge P. R. R. No. 267 with the barge P. R. R. No. 434 on September 14, 1914, to appear and make due proof of their respective claims before H. W. Goodrich, Esq., Commissioner, at his office, 49 Wall Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on or before the 24th day of January, 1916, at 10:30 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, and also to appear before said Court at the Court Rooms thereof on the 24th day of January, 1916, at 10:30 o'clock in the forenoon of that day and answer the petition herein; otherwise they will be defaulted and barred from participation in said stipulation.

Dated, New York, October 20, 1915.

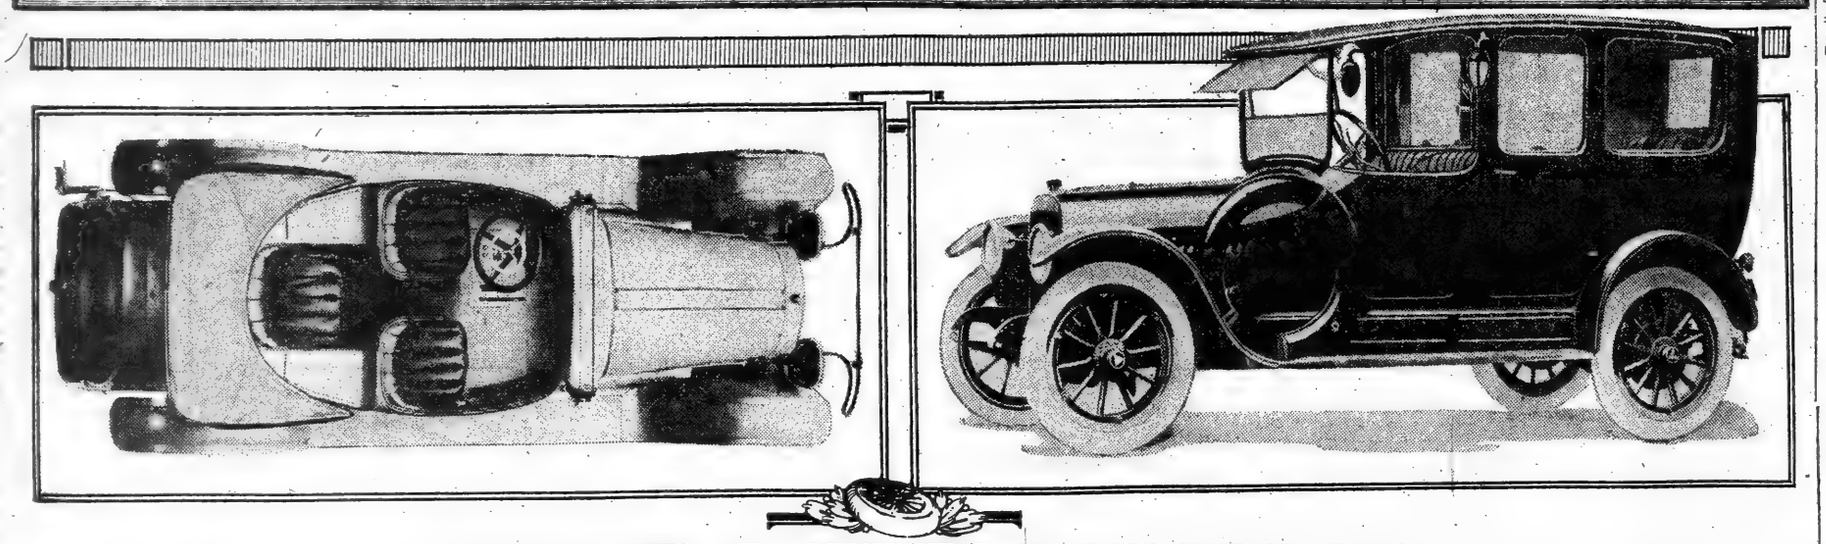
TOPICS OF INTEREST TO THE MOTORIST



A NOVEL ROADSTER AND A LIMOUSINE, EACH OF THE VINTAGE OF 1916.

On the left is the new Marmon roadster of the "clover leaf" or "club" model, seating three passengers. The design gives space for carrying luggage, and the third passenger comes under the protection of the top in bad weather, which is not the case when a rumble seat is used. On the right is a Hudson limousine, one of the five types of closed bodies to be put on view shortly by the local branch of the company. This body may be had in a choice of colors, and is to sell for $2,400.

STANDARDIZATION AIDS QUANTITY PRODUCTION

Important Work of S. A. E. Explained by Zimmerschied, Who Tells Value of Standards in the Manufacture of Automobiles.

At the organization meeting of the Midwest Section of the Society of Automobile Engineers, held in Chicago last week, Karl W. Zimmerschied, Chairman of the Standards Committee of the Society, delivered an address on the value of standards in the manufacture of automobiles. Mr. Zimmerschied expressed the view that the most potent single factor in the brilliant rise of the mechanical industry of America was the almost universal adoption of the principles of interchangeable manufacture, pointing out that there were underlying economic reasons for the opportunities which had arisen continually before us, but that no nation with so few skilled mechanics as ours would ever have taken advantage of these opportunities so adequately without possessing the genius to conceive the idea of assembling things from parts wholly produced by automatic machinery.

He stated that even such genius could not have brought success had the final conception failed to include the masterly yet simple provision that all such automatically produced parts should be so alike as to be perfectly interchangeable from one assembly to another. Given this system in its present stage of development, problems of vast quantity production at remarkably low costs, of easy and rapid assembling, and of inexpensive maintenance become fascinating play. The seeming miracles of such intricate though widespread products as the sewing machine, the harvester, the talking machine, the dollar watch, and the automobile become but the obvious fruits of a natural evolution.

"Interchangeable manufacture has many interesting phases," he said. "We will limit our discussion to only one of them. It is evident that the whole scheme of interchangeable manufacture is based upon the use, conscious or not, of standards—standards of measure, of form, of material quality, of workmanship. It is needless to dwell upon the indispensableness of the fundamental standards of length, mass, time, energy and work. We constantly take cognizance, in one way or another, of these ultimate conceptions of measurement—the purest types of standards.

"Another widely accepted class of standards is that which deals with the elements entering universally into mechanical assembly. Among these are: The sizes in which bar stock and pipe are sold, gauges of plates and wire, pipe and bolt threads, forms of gear, teeth and essential details as to size and form necessary to secure interchangeability of thousands of miscellaneous fittings and tools. The economies resulting from the existence of these standards are incalculable; our modern system of plumbing, for instance, could never have become so nearly universal without the standard pipe thread. More complicated but still familiar standards, which are of marked benefit to the public, are those established by the Master Car Builders, including track gauge, car couplings and hose couplings for brakes. Had these not been accepted generally by all railroads, the present system of through shipment of freight would have been impossible; material in transportation would have necessarily been handled from car to car whenever passing from one road to another.

"In the automobile industry it was soon found that many of the older established standards were inadequate for the more exacting conditions encountered in the building and maintenance of high-duty road mechanisms. Finer threads had to be provided in order to take full advantage of the strength of bolt stock and to prevent loosening of nuts subject to unusual vibration. Later a number of common essentials were standardized as to form, such as yoke and rod ends, carburetor flanges, broaches and taper fittings, flywheel housings, and details of several other units ordinarily made in one plant and assembled with the products of another.

"The examples cited concern almost entirely matters of form. It was found necessary to establish standards of material quality also in a number of instances. On account of the necessity of limiting car weights, the unit stresses increased to such an extent that the ordinary varieties of steel in use had to be regulated more closely as to composition in order to insure greater uniformity and dependability. In addition, new varieties of steel capable of developing much higher strengths than those hitherto employed were standardized, as well as the composition of many non-ferrous alloys. These specifications eliminated the mystery which had surrounded many high-grade alloy steels, with the result that they are now sold competitively to specification instead of at fancy prices under various trade names.

"All of the standards mentioned belong to what might be called the inter-factory type—standards for products which pass from one factory to another—and have been established for the purpose of avoiding confusion between makers and users, and of preventing useless multiplication of such non-essential individual features as add to cost but not to quality. Another type, which can be named internal factory standards, relates only to the internal details of a mechanism, such as the manufacturing tolerances usually specified on detail drawings, character of material used, and workmanship, finish, and appearance generally. The line of demarkation between the two classes of standards specified is not a fixed one throughout the industry, as it is dependent upon how many of the component parts are produced in one factory. An illustration of this can be found in the recent demand for standard dimensions of piston rings and piston ring grooves for the benefit of engine makers who do not manufacture their own piston rings.

"The Society of Automobile Engineers has established first standards of the inter-factory type, harmonizing features of design involved in the attachment of the products of one factory to those of another. In this way remarkable economies are being effected for the industry as a whole, without undue interference with internal factory practice as to workmanship or with those features of design which express the real individuality of different engineers and manufacturers. Economies resulting from the use of such standards are manifested in a number of connections.

"In the drawing room they save much detail work on new designs. By making available to the draftsman certain standard constructions, they not only save the cost of redesigning such details over and over again, but insure greater satisfaction with the final design because the standards have been established by specialists of wide experience.

"The society also endeavors to promulgate information concerning standards in as great detail as is feasible. In addition to the fundamental dimensions, many pertinent data relating to tolerance and limits have been included in the reports of the Standards Committee. For purchasing departments the existence of standard products naturally enlarges the number of possible sources of supply. This is true of sources for not only raw materials, but also the various units entering into the production of finished cars. By making the information concerning the essential details more or less common property of all manufacturers, standards increase the ease with which not materials alone, but units from different manufacturers, can be substituted for each other without necessitating expensive or complicated changes in the design of a car. As between S. A. E. standard products and those which are non-standard, purchasing agents are much more likely to find stocks of standard products ready at hand, and the prices also considerably lower. These conditions make for free competition and consequent reduction in buying costs.

"In manufacturing processes concentration on relatively few standard types makes available to parts manufacturers the well-known economies of quantity production. Even where standards affect only a small portion of a given unit such, for instance, as the broached hole in a universal joint, they make possible the use of standard tools for machining at that point. Savings are also evidenced in the difference between the cost of purchasing reamers, dies, broaches and other tools for producing standard-size holes and threads, and the cost of making special tools. Standardization reduced not only the cost of each tool but the number of tools required as well. If special tools are employed, their usefulness is limited to the operations for which they were designed, whereas standard tools are available for other analogous operations.

"In selling products which conform to S. A. E. standards, the labor is very much less than that required to move special constructions. The statement that a mechanical detail is of S. A. E. standard form or that a material is of S. A. E. specification is prima facie evidence that it is acceptable to the purchaser, and establishes a feeling of confidence without further explanation or argument. The fact that an accessory or part in question can be attached or employed without making any changes from established and standardized constructions, acts as an incentive to an engineer to give the article a trial, rather than as a hindrance to bar its consideration. The existence of standards permits the accumulation of very considerable stocks without the usual danger of being unable to move them, thus making safe a more uniform employment of a factory's capacity, attracting the best class of workmen, and lowering unit costs."

Electric Coupe Demonstrates Ability.

That the electric pleasure vehicle is admirably adapted for suburban runs was demonstrated by a recent run made by Walter Neumuller of the New York Edison Company, from Spring Lake, N J., to Sound Beach, Conn. The distance covered by Mr. Neumuller in this run was 103 miles and the actual running time was four hours and seventeen minutes. The first leg of the trip was from Spring Lake to Central Park West and Sixty-second Street, where the car was given an hour's boost.

To the Owners of Big Motor Cars

The tire upon your motor car is a matter of importance justly entitled to your attention. It bears directly upon the appearance of your car, your personal comfort, your freedom from accident, your surety of arrival without delay.

Its cost is not a consideration. . .

Firestone Non-Skid Tires are fashioned expressly to meet the extreme strains involved in the easy handling of heavy open and closed cars in traffic and tour. They are especially effective on slippery pavements because of the scientific formation of the tread into road-gripping surfaces. Their rugged inner construction renders them as suitable for country as for city driving. No weather condition can minimize any point of their service.

Firestone Non-Skid Tires may be obtained through your present service connection or from any dealer anywhere.

MUCH TIME SAVED BY NEW METHODS OF BODY PAINTING

"Stream Flowing" with Varnishes and Other Modern Applications in the Paint Shop Produce Better Results at Lower Cost.

One of the most modern methods of applying the body finish to automobiles is described in the current issue of Iron Age by George D. Babcock. It is called "stream flowing" and Mr. Babcock says of it:

"This process is the application of liquid coatings by means of a wide flat nozzle through which the coating is forced to flow continuously upon the surface in a wide ribbon-like stream.

"As in all new processes skepticism early took the place of scientific study, and the questions of durability, cleanliness, and brilliancy were long debated before the present practical adoption of the methods. The virtue of these late methods has been proved conclusively for each of the above-mentioned points.

"The protection of the exposed surfaces of automobiles from the elements affecting them has required most intensive study since the beginning of the industry. Different kinds of soils, as well as different conditions of air, do not act alike on protective coatings. The continuous exposure of these coatings on the automobile requires that they be not only perfectly prepared and applied, but selected to resist the special destructive influences.

"Japanning or painting aluminium surfaces presents now no particular problem to secure permanency and luster. Steel and wood have long since ceased to be troublesome. Ten-day rubbing varnishes are dried in four and one-half hours with improved luster, cleanliness, and durability. The flowing of varnishes with the nozzle method leaves a coating as thick as will adhere to the surface.

"Air drying required many coats relatively thin. High temperature drying with humidity control and frequent air change gives better results by a thoroughly oxidized, tough, thick varnish film. After such drying the film does not seem to crack or alligator as do numbers of thin air-dried coats.

"The top outlines of the body are first brushed, to prevent spattering on the interior, and then the wide flowing nozzle is passed over the entire surface until the varnish not only washes off any dirt upon the surface, but flows in a thick uniform coat. The body is then allowed to drip and after a short period of air drying is put into the drying ovens, which are heated and humidified. This varnish coat dries in four and one-half hours. The varnish which drips from the body flows back through a filter into a retainer, and at frequent intervals it is separated by means of a separator.

"This cleanses the varnish and it is used repeatedly, the new varnish being continuously added to that in use. The lead coat is applied with the atomizing air brush. A ventilating hood covers the work to take off the fumes. One hose to the brush leads from the air pressure tank and the other from the liquid finish to be applied. The air brush spray is moved rapidly over the surface and gives a smooth uniform stippled coating.

"Wheels are charged to an air brush hood by means of the rolling conveyor. After the varnish coats are applied the wheels are placed in a revolving dryer, where the varnish is allowed to set by air drying. The uniformity of the coat is maintained by the continuous rotation of the wheels. After air drying, the wheels are heat dried in ovens. Japanning plays an important part in the protective coatings of an automobile. After dipping in the japans, the parts are hooked upon trolleys suspended by brackets from the ceiling and allowed to drip over the pans. They are then run into the drying ovens and baked."

DANES TEST MOTOR PLOWS.

Trial Last Summer Proved Economy Over Horse Plowing.

At the agricultural fair held at Vejle, Denmark, last Summer a demonstration was given of three different motor plows—one manufactured in Denmark, one in Sweden, and one in America. These plows were of the smaller type, suitable for an average-sized farm. Two of the outfits were equipped with 16 horse power engines and one with a 12 horse power engine; their traveling speeds ranged between 1½ and 2 miles per hour. All were of the one-man type. When the necessary attachments are at hand the same tractors can be used for pulling binders. Two of them can be used for thrashing purposes or other belt work without any changes, while in order to do this with the Danish tractor an extended shaft with pulley is required.

No calculation was made at this demonstration, according to the report of United States Consul General E. D. Winslow, stationed at Copenhagen, as to what the cost of plowing per acre would be, but it is clearly evident that power plowing is considerably cheaper than when horses are employed, considering that horses at the present moment are very expensive and that feed and labor are high. At present there are in Denmark quite a few larger plowing outfits at work, and while these smaller outfits seemed to arouse considerable interest among the owners of average-sized farms, it is yet to be seen to what extent they can be sold.

On the left is the new Jeffery four-cylinder touring model, fitted with a high-speed motor with light reciprocating parts. The price is $1,000. On the right is the Briscoe model for 1916, with a wheelbase of 114 inches, which can be had with either a four or an eight cylinder motor, each of 38 horse power, at $750 and $950, respectively.

TO TEST VALIDITY OF SPEED LIMIT

T. N. Rhinelander Plans to Fight Presumption of Careless Driving—Case Begun.

When the motor-cycle policeman of the Township of Oyster Bay, L. I., arrested, on Oct. 10, Thomas N. Rhinelander for breaking the speed limit on the Old Country Road between Westbury and Hicksville he caught a Tartar, metaphorically speaking. Mr. Rhinelander proposes to fight the case against him through as many successive courts as may be necessary, and, incidentally, or perhaps primarily, to test the worth of the section of the motor vehicle law which relates to speed.

At a hearing last week before Justice of the Peace Steinert at Hicksville, and in the presence of representatives of the Automobile Club of America and of newspaper men, it was brought out both by the testimony of the motor-cycle officer under direct examination and his replies on the cross-examination of Mr. Rhinelander, who is a lawyer in this city, that the latter's driving at the time he was arrested did not put in peril the life, limb, or property of any one on the highway. The sole charge against him was that he was driving his machine, for the distance of three-tenths of a mile, at a speed of 36 miles an hour.

Section 287 of the motor vehicle law, however, which Mr. Rhinelander is charged with violating, reads:

"Every person operating a motor vehicle on the public highway of this State shall drive the same in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed so as not to endanger the property of another or the life or limb of any person; provided, that a rate of speed in excess of 30 miles an hour for a distance of one-fourth of a mile shall be presumptive evidence of driving at a rate of speed which is not careful and prudent."

Mr. Rhinelander, who is connected with the National Highways Protective Society and warmly interested in safety on the public roads, does not deny that he was driving at more than thirty miles an hour. He does, however, seek to rebut the presumption in the law that that rate of speed under all circumstances is evidence of careless or imprudent driving. The Old Country Road at the point at which he was arrested, and indeed all the way from Westbury to Hicksville, runs through sparsely settled, open country. The road itself is broad, of smooth surface, and nearly straight, with nothing to impede the vision. During the time the motor-cycle officer was following him he passed but one vehicle.

Under these or similar circumstances he holds that the law's presumption is unjust, or at any rate the construction of that clause in the law which is usually followed by Magistrates. In this case, as in others of a like character, the Magistrate nearly always appears to construe "presumptive" evidence as "conclusive" evidence and to decide against the offender without further ado.

Motorists who have heard of Mr. Rhinelander's intention to try the merits of his contention and discover just what the feature of the law really means are much interested in the outcome of the case.

SALE OF TRUCKS HEAVY.

Estimate of 37,000 in Last Year Made—Many New Contracts.

Because almost every motor truck company in the United States has been running at full capacity for the past year and some have declined to give their output figures there has been little opportunity to make accurate estimates on the year's total output. The most authoritative estimate, made by a man who has confidential relations with most of the manufacturers, is that 37,000 motor trucks were marketed during the preceding twelve months.

An indication of what the coming twelve months will see in the matter of motor-truck production is given by a statement appearing in the current number of The Internal Gear Drive News, the official organ of the Internal Gear Drive Association, with headquarters in Detroit. This statement is that three members of the association who manufacture motor-truck axles will turn out during the coming year in excess of 15,000 axles. This number is based on contracts already in existence in which definite delivery dates are named, and does not include contracts yet to be signed, nor the output of any companies that intend to manufacture their own axles.

GOOD ROADS PART OF PREPAREDNESS

Several States Urge Upon Congress Need for Military Highways.

That military preparedness for defense includes extensive roads construction, viewed from the standpoint of the country as a whole, is made apparent in sentiment which comes from the Atlantic Seacoast, the Pacific Slope, and even the Gulf of Mexico.

Recently the Alabama Legislature unanimously passed a joint resolution, prepared by John Craft of the State Highway Department and assented to by Governor Henderson, which calls upon the President and Congress of the United States "to take such steps as in their wisdom appear to be most expedient to bring about at the earliest possible moment the construction of a national system of good roads." It is set forth in the preamble that "a great war now being waged in Europe demonstrates that a national system of good roads is essential to the successful protection of a country in the event of war."

At the recent Pan-American Roads Congress in Oakland, Cal., among the resolutions adopted was one in which the congress recommended "to the Congress of the United States the advisability of investigating the necessity of building a hard-surface highway along the Pacific Ocean side, from Mexico to British Columbia, and other national highways, to be used as military and commercial highways."

Earlier in the year, at a meeting of the Maine Automobile Association, the Chairman of the State Highway Commission contended that the first Federal money spent in that State should be in connection with a system of roads paralleling the coast, to serve particularly in case of military necessity. At the October meeting of the Executive Board of the American Automobile Association, with President John A. Wilson presiding, a resolution was passed, at the suggestion of Chairman Diehl of its National Good Roads Board, "that the A. A. A. respectfully asks the Congress, in its consideration of Federal aid in good roads to the several States, to bear in mind that highways constructed in seacoast and border States should possess a relationship to the military preparedness of the country which is demanding such widespread attention."

The State and local clubs of the American Automobile Association are calling to the attention of their representatives in Congress this action of the national automobile body, and also asking that a bill shall be passed providing for an annual Federal appropriation, divided among the several States on the basis of area, population, and road mileage, to be supplemented by a like amount of money from the States, and the total to be expended on post and military roads, selected through the co-operation of the respective State Highway Departments.

Tires Scarce in the Netherlands.

Tires for automobiles and motor cycles are now almost unobtainable in the Netherlands. Importations are not one-fourth of the requirements. Whenever any are imported at all they must be consigned to the Netherlands Overseas Trust, which distributes them sparingly direct to consumers, who must bring up and deliver an old tire for each new one received, and who must give a bank guaranty that the tires will not be exported, and in any case no more than six tires will be delivered to one applicant.

Goshen, Ind., Builds Brick Road.

At a meeting of the City Council of Goshen, Ind., held recently after a detailed inspection of the Lincoln Highway, it was definitely decided to permanently improve in hard-surfaced construction this route to a uniform width of twenty-seven feet as far as the electric sign at the main entrance to the city, and twenty-four feet from that point west to the city limits. Brick will be the material used. Grading is now in progress.

POLITICAL AUTO IN KANSAS MUST HAVE TRAILING ROPES

Section 413, Chapter 11a, of the Kansas General Statutes of 1905, relating to automobiles, propounds the following solemn mandate:

"That the term 'automobile' and 'motor vehicle,' as used in this act shall be construed to include all types and grades of motor vehicles propelled by electricity, steam, gasoline, or other sources of energy, commonly known as automobiles, motor vehicles, or horseless carriages, using the public highways and not running on rails or tracks. Nothing in this section shall be construed as in any way preventing, obstructing, impeding, embarrassing, or in any other manner or form infringing upon the prerogative of any political chauffeur to run an automobilious hand-wagon at any rate he sees fit compatible with the safety of the occupants thereof; provided, however, that not less than ten nor more than twenty ropes be allowed at all times to trail behind this vehicle when in motion, in order to permit those who have been so fortunate as to escape with their political lives an opportunity to be dragged to death. And provided further that whenever a mangled and bleeding political corpse implores mercy, the driver of the vehicle shall, in accordance with the provisions of this bill, 'Throw out the life line.'"

SCOTCH LIKE OUR AUTOS.

Success of American Product of Low Price Is Reported.

A representative of an automobile manufacturing company in the United States recently visited Scotland, partly on business, but chiefly to shoot grouse. While staying at a shooting lodge in a northern county he sent to an American friend in Edinburgh, according to United States Consul Rufus Fleming, an account of his exploits on the moors, and added these observations on the automobile trade:

"In my tour of Scotland I find evidences everywhere of the satisfaction our car and—to be entirely candid—other American motor cars are giving to all users. Since the beginning of the war low-priced American cars have been in great demand, and one sees them on almost every road in the lowlands and highlands and islands. They seem to be especially in favor here in the north, where not many people think they can afford to pay more than $1,000 for a car. Moreover, the doctors, Judges, and lawyers have long distances to travel and horses are scarce and 'traps' an abomination, and a reliable motor car of low initial cost is a boon.

"Higher-priced American cars are also securing an important position in the market, and some of these owe their introduction largely to the fact that all American automobiles have been well advertised by the pronounced success of the cheaper cars among every class of buyers, the logic of the case being that a country that turns out durable and dependable little cars must also produce durable and dependable big cars. So you see that we representatives of different types of American machines are helping one another. Of course, the war has tied up several British makers, whose works are now shell factories; but this does not by any means fully account for the advance of American cars in the British markets, as we were going ahead rapidly before the war started. There's nothing like getting a reputation for giving customers the value of their money, and we have that reputation and expect to keep it. So long as we continue to build cars that meet the requirements of the American market we can sell them in Great Britain."

The Standardized Car

It Performs—and Satisfies

A year of proven dependability—power to withstand the pressure of continuous touring under all conditions—has demonstrated the mettle of the 1916 Cole Eight.

It is the car that set the gasoline economy record in the multiple-cylinder field by averaging 20 miles to the gallon of gas. It has an established speed range of from two to more than sixty miles an hour in high. It makes from four hundred to five hundred miles on a gallon of oil. Its perfect balance causes it to grip the road at all speeds. Its lightness (weighing only 3500 pounds road-ready) makes it easy on tires. For hill-climbing it is unparalleled. Though it developes 70 horse power, it is responsive to the slightest touch.

And from the point of refinement, comfort, class and up-to-dateness in its construction and design, the 1916 Cole Eight recognizes no peer.

You owe yourself the opportunity to be thoroughly informed on this car. May we arrange a demonstration?

Studebaker

Seven Passenger
Forty Horse Power FOUR $885

What's the DIFFERENCE?

Many a man who wanted to buy a car has said that to himself as he looked over the 1916 market. What IS the difference? Why does this car cost more than that? What extra POWER or quality or comforts do you get? You must have wondered it yourself, and—

-this is the Studebaker DIFFERENCE in QUALITY

It is the ONLY car ever offered in America or Europe that has decreased its price and at the same time so GREATLY INCREASED its quality.

You know how prices have been reduced in many cases. In this Forty Horse Power Studebaker FOUR, nothing has been reduced but the price. That has been decreased from $985 to $885.

But it has been INCREASED in wheelbase from 108 to 112 inches. It has been INCREASED in capacity from Five to SEVEN passengers. It has been INCREASED in motor from 3¼ x 5 to 3⅜-inch bore x 5 inch stroke. It has been INCREASED in tires from 33 x 4 to 34 x 4 Goodrich.

The upholstery is the finest grade of genuine, hand-buffed, straight-grain, semi-glazed leather on the market. The body-finishing operations have been INCREASED from 20 to 25 in number. The steering-knuckle is forged of chrome-vanadium steel, and high-grade alloy steels have been lavishly used throughout the car. The motor bearings have been made oversize. The radiator, gas passages, propeller shaft, rear axle housing have been increased in size.

Wherever a change in materials was made BETTER materials were used.

And for performance, for long-time service, for economy of operation and for durability with a high re-sale value, this Forty Horse Power Studebaker stands alone in a class of its own. See the car today—judge its DIFFERENCE in quality for yourself.

SMITH'S NON-SKID CANVAS TREAD TIRE construction guaranteed for 5,000 miles but average is 10,000 miles. Two strips of rubberised canvas projecting from the inside of the tread to the outside, makes this tread non-skid all the way through, and also acts as a radiator, preventing the tread from heating, peeling off. Also prevents stone bruises, punctures and blow-outs. It draws easier than tires with knobs on the tread and saves 25% in gasoline. INTERESTING HAPPENINGS IN MOTORDOM

AUTOMOBILE OUTLOOK IS ROSY, SAYS HUGO

Secretary of State Predicts Further Improvements in Car Types, Solution of Fuel Problem, and New Growth.

Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State, who was guest of honor last week at the Troy Automobile Show "Society Night," delivered a short address on a number of subjects of special interest to motorists. He pointed out the tremendous influence of the motor car, declaring that every day made a forecast of its eventual effects all the more difficult.

"There has probably never been such a revolution in the history of locomotion—not even the coming of the railways," he said, "which has produced so few inconveniences and in which the few inconveniences so produced have so quickly begun to be removed. Moreover, the dustless road is not only in sight, but is now known to be only a question of better highway engineering combined with the first outlay of capital necessary for the change from the use of dusty to dustless roads."

In speaking of the Troy exhibit, he declared that every thoughtful visitor who appreciated the niceties of construction found himself surrounded by evidence of the immense care and labor bestowed upon the perfection of details and the wealth of invention brought to bear upon everything automobile.

"The command of the vast resources of modern applied science, moreover," said Mr. Hugo, "has enabled this industry, still young, to develop with remarkable rapidity, but it seems probable that the ingenuity of motor-car engineers will be largely directed into a new channel by the conditions of the fuel market. The industry at present depends upon gasoline, but as the price of this commodity is already double what it was not long ago the problem now, and perhaps the most urgent that the industry has to solve, is to devise satisfactory methods of propulsion by cheaper fuels."

The Secretary said that many writers would lead the public to believe from time to time that the finality had almost been reached in the matter of motor-car design, and that a sort of millennium had arrived in which there was no need of further alterations.

"But this assumption of fact," he said, "is very far from the truth. All the year around and every year, in laboratories, work and drawing shops, motor-car problems are being worked out, new ideas experimented with, and, in fact, most of the leading manufacturers have in mind improvements years ahead now under consideration, for the laying of plans in advance is one of the secrets of the successful manufacturer and designer of today who are bearing a worthy part in its world-wide development.

"If the extraordinary popular interest in motor vehicles be merely a craze, as some think, it is lasting with unusual vitality. As a matter of fact, however, it is something more than that, for we are witnessing a wonderful industrial revolution, as shown by registration statistics in my office, where over 70,000 more cars have been registered so far this year over the same period in 1914. Next year will, no doubt, show a still greater increase over 1915, and the fact that no less than 2,200,000 cars were in use throughout the country during the first six months of the present year further reveals the triumph achieved by the motor car before its fifteenth birthday. It is safe, therefore, to predict that its public use will continue to grow with unexampled rapidity."

NEWS AND NOTES OF THE AUTOMOBILE TRADE

Dr. John W. Beardsley, a practicing physician at Lenawee County, Mich., petitions the court to be adjudicated a bankrupt and thus be relieved of the burden of his debts. Among his assets is his Ford runabout, and he prays that this be considered exempt inasmuch as it is "necessary and indispensable to carry on his practice." It will be interesting to see what opinion the court holds of the Ford car as an indispensable utility necessary to livelihood.

One thousand employes of F. B. Stearns Company, Cleveland, Ohio, makers of Stearns-Knight cars, will receive a comparative increase in salary for a shorter hour schedule. Beginning Oct. 16 the men will work 48 hours a week and receive pay for 55 hours at the rate of time and a half for each hour over 48. The night shift is to get straight time and a half.

In a test recently conducted by the Royal Automobile Club of London, England, a Model 83 Overland touring car covered a distance of 75.5 miles, over a rolling country, on three and three-quarters gallons (Imperial) of gasoline.

At the regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Chalmers Motor Company last week, Paul Smith was elected one of the Vice Presidents of the company. He is Vice President in charge of the sales, service, and advertising departments. Mr. Smith will fill the position held by Lee Olwell, who recently resigned.

Robert Lurie of Robert Lurie & Co., 10 West Sixtieth Street, has secured the Eastern representation of the Metz car. He announces that in the 1916 model the car is much larger, is electrically equipped, using the Gray & Davis system, and has Bosch high-tension magneto. The price is $600.

At the annual meeting of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce held in New York last week the Empire Automobile Company of Indianapolis was elected to membership in the organization. By terms of an agreement recently closed, exclusive distributing rights for the Empire in the metropolitan district are taken by the McFarlan Sales Company. The first cars of the new models have been received, and are now on display at the distributor's salesrooms, 1,678 Broadway. Two models make up the line for 1916—a four-cylinder model which lists at $895 and a light six at $1,095.

Robert Allison of Fort Carbon, Penn., who may be said to have started the American automobile industry on its way to success, was the guest last week of Alexander Winton, President of the Winton Company of Cleveland, and these two pioneers recalled with a great deal of interest the day when they first met. On March 24, 1896, Mr. Allison went to Cleveland to buy a horseless carriage. Mr. Winton gave him a demonstration and Mr. Allison at once enrolled himself as a purchaser. This was the first bona fide sale on the books of the company. The car bought by Mr. Allison was the first of an output of four single-cylinder cars.

STOCK CARS MAKE TESTS.

Speed of 72 Miles an Hour on Track —Mexico to Canada Without Stop.

During the last week the results of two unusual tests of stock cars of different makes have been made public. In a series of tests at the Chicago and Indianapolis speedways, under the official auspices of the Technical Committee of the Automobile Club of America, two Cadillac eight-cylinder cars were tried out for speed and gasoline consumption at various rates of speed. Each of the cars showed a speed of more than 70 miles an hour for an hour's continuous running, one of them making 100 miles in 1 hour 22 minutes 46 seconds, or an average of 72.49 an hour. An interesting relation between gasoline consumption and rate of speed was shown in further trials, as indicated by the following table:

Speed, Miles Per Hour.	Miles Per Gallon.	Speed, Miles Per Hour.	Miles Per Gallon.
24.5	18.3	52.9	10.8
33.9	16.2	62.8	8.8

The other stock car trial already referred to was the feat of driving 2,050 miles not only without stopping the motor but also without stopping the car itself. This was accomplished when a party of five men brought a Chandler light six from Tia Juana, Mexico, to Vancouver, B. C., in five and one-half days. In order that the car might not be stopped for even a second it was driven three miles across the railroad bridge over the Columbia River.

Only 1 Spaniard in 2,000 Owns Car

The Eco de Aduanas, published in Madrid, states that the total number of private automobiles registered in Spain on Jan. 1, 1915, was 10,548. The Province of Madrid led with 2,405 registrations. The population of Spain is about 20,000,000.

CARS SEEN ON SHORT RUN.

Eastern New England Roads Show License Tags from 21 States.

A member of the American Automobile Association whose experiences in touring make him a fair judge of like situations expresses the view that the 250 miles from the east coast of Massachusetts to New York City is a stretch of road used by more cars from other States than any like distance in the country. This opinion was rendered after a recent two-day leisurely trip over that section en route from Boston to the national headquarters of the A. A. A. in Washington.

With a desire really to see the country along the way—not rushing through because of the temptation of the excellent road conditions—he stopped at any place that gave a good view, or that was otherwise interesting. During these stops, and while driving, he made a point of noticing the license plates of the passing cars, but, in fairness to the point of view he had in mind, he ignored all States east of the Alleghanies and north of the Mason and Dixon line.

In going over the list he found represented during those two days, by those touring New England, Arizona, California, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, and Quebec, Ontario.

Undoubtedly these cars were going to or from general tours of New England, thus showing the value of capitalizing scenery and history by building good roads. The two largest touring sections in this country are New England and California. Each has scenery and each has history—so have many other sections of these United States, but nowhere else have these two factors been turned into such large assets by capitalizing them with an embracive and connected mileage of modern roads.

LAST AIR RAID COST 150 TO 300 LIVES IN LONDON

THREE ATTACKS ON OCT. 13

ALDWYCH SUFFERED MOST

Scrap of Shell Hit Tribune Office and Correspondent Narrowly Escaped Death.

The American liner St. Paul arrived yesterday from Liverpool with the first eyewitnesses of the Zeppelin raid over London on Oct. 13. All accounts agreed that the night was clear, that the Zeppelins could be seen plainly when the searchlights shone on them, and that there was no cloud of steam emitted by the airships to hide them from view.

The shells from the anti-aircraft guns fell short of the Zeppelins, it was said, and caused great destruction of property. According to those who timed the visit of the raid, it occupied only seven minutes altogether. There were three to five Zeppelins coming from the city from the northeast, but the squadron split up before reaching the outskirts, and the units took different routes afterward. To show their contempt for the British anti-aircraft guns the Germans returned to London twice on the night of Oct. 13 and got away without receiving serious injury from shells.

Among those who gave graphic descriptions of the raid were Thomas Evarts Adams, Frederick W. Whitridge, and Mrs. Langtry. Several of those who were aboard the St. Paul said the death roll had been far underestimated in the cabled reports reaching New York. They gave various estimates of the number of dead from 150 to 300.

Folkestone Attacked.

The most complete account of the raid was supplied to THE TIMES by a passenger, who did not wish his name used, as follows:

"As far as can be made out there were five Zeppelins engaged in the raid, which ranged from Folkestone on the South coast to Hertford, the county town of Hertfordshire on the north, and as far west of London as Guildford. So far as London itself is concerned, four bombs were dropped in the neighborhood of Aldwych, another fell at the top of Cancery Lane, close by Holborn Viaduct Tube station, and others were dropped in the neighborhood of the Minories.

"The chief damage in London was around the Aldwych. One bomb dropped fifty yards away from the Waldorf Hotel in the middle of the road. The New York Tribune office is at 43 Aldwych, next door to the Waldorf Hotel. Its windows were all smashed, and a piece of shell two inches square drove right through the office, knocking off the stone coping of the window, tearing a hole through a thick curtain, and making a cavity as big as one's fist in the wall opposite. This was just about twenty minutes past 9, and only one man, Mr. Kerney, was present at the time. How he escaped was a marvel, for his chair was just in the line taken by the piece of shell, which, had he been sitting in his chair, would have caught him just about neck high. The probability is that he heard the noise of one of the other bombs dropped in the neighborhood and jumped out of his chair before the bomb fell in the Aldwych. All that he remembered afterward was falling down stairs with the office boy.

"Another bomb dropped by one of the doors of the Waldorf Theatre; another fell close by in Wellington Street, not more than twenty yards away from the Lyceum Theatre. Here it was that the greatest number of casualties in this part of London was caused, several people being killed in a public house in Wellington Street, just beyond The Morning Post offices, which had a great number of their windows blown out. A gas main in Wellington Street was shattered and the gas took fire, the flame continuing until about 9 o'clock the following morning. Throughout the darkness of the night the scene was an extraordinary one, the blaze from the gas main luridly illuminating the surroundings. There were cordons of police holding back the spectators, who numbered thousands.

Strand Theatre Shattered.

"Considerable damage was also done to the Strand and Gaiety Theatres by another bomb, which fell close by one of the side entrances of the former building. That side of the theatre was severely shattered and inside the concussion brought down part of the ceiling. Most of the windows of the Gaiety Theatre opposite were shattered. The dance scene in "The Scarlet Pimpernel" was in progress at the Strand Theatre when the first crash of the bomb was heard. A moment or so later parts of the roof fell in, crashing down into the auditorium itself. A number of people were injured and at least one killed.

"At first there was some panic, which was increased as several hysterical persons began calling out 'fire.' These, however, were promptly silenced by those around them, and almost instantly Mr. Fred Terry appeared on the stage, only dimly discernible through the dense crowds of dust. He success-

BRITISH SUBMARINE SINKS GERMAN CRUISER

Warship of the Prinz Adalbert Class Sent to Bottom in Baltic Near Libau.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 24, (via London.)—A British submarine operating near Libau attacked and sunk a German cruiser of the Prinz Adalbert class, according to official announcement made tonight.

A semi-official statement refers to the cruiser that was sunk simply as the Prinz Adalbert. According to this statement, the cruiser was sunk near Libau by a clever manoeuvre of the British submarine. The cruiser, it is said, formed part of a squadron and was probably charged with a special mission.

The vessel destroyed in the Baltic may have been one of these three German ships.

The Prinz Adalbert, an armored cruiser of 8,858 tons displacement, 393 feet in length, 65 feet beam and 24 feet depth. She was built at Kiel in 1903, had a speed of 20.5 knots, and carried a complement of 504 men.

The Prinz Heinrich, an armored cruiser of 8,759 tons, 396 feet in length, sixty-four feet beam, and twenty-five feet in depth. She was built at Kiel in 1902, had a speed of twenty knots, and carried a complement of 528 men.

The Roon, an armored cruiser of 9,350 tons, 403 feet in length, 65 feet beam, and 24 feet depth. She was built at Kiel in 1905, had a speed of 21.17 knots, and carried a complement of 638 men. The Roon was badly damaged in the battle with a Russian squadron last July. The Russian report said her guns were silenced and that she was set on fire.

Two other vessels of this class have been sunk. They were the Friedrich Karl, sunk by a mine in December, 1914, and the Yorck, sunk by a German mine in the Jahde, Nov. 3, 1914.

10,000 LED TO ENLIST BY MISS CAVELL'S FATE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—The execution by the Germans of Edith Cavell in Brussels is proving as effective an appeal for recruits as the statement issued last week by King George, according to many trained observers.

The Daily News says this morning:

"There is little doubt but that the German court which sentenced Edith Cavell to death has been responsible already for adding 10,000 men to the strength of the British Army.

"Recruiting Sergeants are unanimous in saying that Miss Cavell's heroic end has made an irresistible appeal to those men who needed some strong emotional stimulus before taking up arms, that stimulus which in the early days of the war was supplied by the overrunning of Belgium and the retreat of the British Army from Mons."

MAILED FIST HEAVIER ON BELGIAN TOWNS

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Oct. 24, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—I hear on good authority that since the appointment a few weeks ago of a Prussian cavalry officer as the new Military Governor life in Brussels has been unbearable, the most oppressive regulations have been instituted, and large numbers of people arrested.

The principle of the mailed fist has also spread to Antwerp, where between twenty and thirty persons have already been sentenced to long terms of imprisonment and transported to Germany.

In the villages the same process has been carried out. Lokeren, Rotselaer, and Eltichoe have each been fined 5,000 marks ($1,250) because their authorities had not discovered in the three places a total of sixteen pigeons.

In this connection a remarkable description of the reign of terror in Brussels is contributed to the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant by its Brussels correspondent—and the message is all the more extraordinary because it passed the German censorship.

"For some days past," it says, "the walls here have been covered with placards in such superfluity as has not been seen for a long time. Not only the quantity but the tone and contents of the notices prove that something has altered. What it is precisely is difficult to describe. Perhaps I can indicate it by saying that the iron fist will make itself felt.

"On Oct. 12 there was an order for the surrender of all men who during the war had belonged to the enemy's army and might be hidden here. Not only must the men themselves report, but everybody who knew of their presence was commanded, under threats of heavy punishment, to disclose their knowledge.

"Now the inhabitants are threatened that on the renewal of the visit of the Allies' fliers they will have German soldiers billeted upon them. To the uninitiated the logical connection may not be immediately grasped. It is this: The enemy's fliers have repeatedly chosen as targets buildings in which it was known German troops assembled. It is presumed that the population has made known these buildings to the Allies; therefore the population is held responsible, and, in order that they may be watched more narrowly, soldiers will be quartered in their houses if the fliers come again."

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 24, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—According to the Echo Belge, a rumor is current that 7,000 Belgians, aged from seventeen to thirty-five years, have been removed from Brussels to Germany.

The Journal at first had no confirmation of this report, but at the moment of going to press received this message:

"Last Wednesday it was announced in Brussels that all Belgians of military age had to report themselves at the Commandant's office within forty-eight hours, and that those who did not appear would incur the penalty of execution."

At midnight the Echo Belge received the following:

"The rumor that a large number of young Belgians are going to Germany is confirmed in many quarters, but the exact number is not known. It appears that 1,500 men reported themselves on the first day. They were accompanied by relatives, but these were removed by force by the German soldiers. It is said that these 1,500 have already been taken to Germany."

Kaiser Summons Officials to Report on Edith Cavell

Special Cable to The New York Times.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 24, (Dispatch to The London Daily Express.)—It is said in Brussels that Governor General von Bissing and Civil Governor von der Lancken have been called to the imperial headquarterss to report on Miss Edith Cavell's death.

From a Staff Correspondent.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 24.—Moved by foreign denunciations of the execution of Miss Edith Cavell, out of which he says Germany's enemies are making capital, Dr. Alfred F. M. Zimmermann, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, has granted an interview in which he defends the action of the German authorities in Belgium as necessary to insure the security of the German armies, but intimates that leniency may be shown the other prisoners who have been convicted for offenses similar to those of the British nurse.

Says the Killing Was Necessary.

"It was a pity," said Dr. Zimmermann, "that Miss Cavell had to be executed, but it was necessary. She was judged justly. We hope it will not be necessary to have any more executions.

"I see from the English and American press that the shooting of an Englishwoman and the condemnation of several other women in Brussels for treason has caused a sensation, and capital against us is being made out of the fact. It is undoubtedly a terrible thing that the woman has been executed; but consider what would happen to a State, particularly in war, if it left crimes aimed at the safety of its armies to go unpunished because committed by women. No criminal code in the world—least of all the laws of war—makes such a distinction; and the feminine sex has but one preference, according to legal usages, namely, that women in a delicate condition may not be executed. Otherwise man and woman are equal before the law, and only the degree of guilt makes a difference in the sentence for the crime and its consequences.

"I have before me the court's verdict in the Cavell case, and can assure you that it was gone into with the utmost thoroughness, and was investigated and cleared up to the smallest details. The result was so convincing, and the circumstances were so clear, that no war court in the world could have given any other verdict, for it was not concerned with a single emotional deed of one person, but a well-thought-out plot, with many far-reaching ramifications, which for nine months succeeded in doing valuable service to our enemies to the great detriment of our armies. Countless Belgian, French, and English soldiers are again fighting in the ranks of the Allies who owe their escape to the activities of the band now found guilty, whose head was the Cavell woman. Only the utmost sternness could do away with such activities under the very nose of our authorities, and a Government which in such case does not resort to the sternest measures sins against its most elementary duties toward the safety of its own army.

"All those convicted were thoroughly aware of the nature of their acts. The court particularly weighed this point with care, letting off several of the accused because they were in doubt as to whether they knew that their actions were punishable. Those condemned knew what they were doing, for numerous public proclamations had pointed out the fact that aiding enemies' armies was punishable with death.

"I know that the motives of the condemned were not base; that they acted from patriotism; but in war one must be prepared to seal one's patriotism with blood whether one faces the enemy in battle or otherwise in the interest of one's cause does deeds which justly bring after them the death penalty. Among our Russian prisoners are several young girls who fought against us in soldiers' uniforms. Had one of these girls fallen no one would have accused us of barbarity against women. Why now, when another woman has met the death to which she knowingly exposed herself, as did her comrades in battle?

"There are moments in the life of nations where consideration for the existence of the individual is a crime against all. Such a moment was here. It was necessary once for all to put an end to the activity of our enemies, regardless of their motives; therefore the death penalty was executed so as to frighten off all those who, counting on preferential treatment for their sex, take part in undertakings punishable by

RUMANIA EXPECTED TO JOIN THE ALLIES

Rome Hears Agreement Is Being Reached Between Government and Opposition.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 25.—The Rome correspondent of The Daily Mail sends this message:

"Telegrams from Bucharest state that Rumania is on the eve of taking grave decisions.

"Agreement is on the point of being arrived at between the Government and Opposition in favor of intervention on the side of the Allies."

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 25.—A Cabinet crisis in Rumania is imminent, according to a dispatch to The Daily News from Rome, owing to the resignation of several of the Ministers who oppose Rumania's intervention in the war.

GEN. DIMITRIEFF SEEKS TO OVERTURN FERDINAND

News of Russia's Declaration of War Kept From the Bulgarian People.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

[The Cologne Gazette Dispatches.]

SOFIA, Oct. 23.—The Bulgarian General in the Russian service, Radko Dimitrieff, who is in Rumania, is endeavoring to get into contact with fellow partisans in Bulgaria with a view of instigating a revolution with the aid of the army, as in former years. The Bulgarian Government is well informed regarding this effort and has taken the necessary preventive measures. Dimitrieff was last seen in Kaiagat, across from Vidin.

Should the campaign continue to progress favorably there is no prospects of success for his scheme, as the Bulgarians are unanimously bent on the acquisition of Macedonia.

The newspaper, Mir, supporting the Uszen party interests, says:

"Besides England and France, Italy also has declared war against us. It is believed Russia will not join in this shameful action of her allies. These allies, during a period of fifteen months, have not been able to beat Germany and Austria; thus they are now bombarding the shores of Bulgaria on the Aegean Sea without at all aiding their spoiled protégé, Serbia, and without injuring either us or the Germans."

Most other Bulgarian papers declare that in the bombardment of the Bulgarian shore hardly a single one of the large shells fired had any more effect than the destruction of a few cottages.

COUNTS COST OF WAR AT $45,000,000,000

Banker Shearson, Back from England, Assumes Struggle Will Last 18 Months Longer.

Edward Shearson, head of Shearson, Hammill & Co., bankers, of 71 Broadway, returned yesterday from London on the American liner St. Paul. He had been away since June. He spent most of the time at Ascot, near Windsor.

"The financial conditions are very serious in England," said Mr. Shearson, "graver, I fear, than the London financiers realize. The taxation to meet the cost of the war will be the greatest that any nation has had to bear in the history of the world. By officials in the Government service and men of affairs in England I was told that the war certainly would last another eighteen months. Taking this as a basis for a rough estimate, formed from the expenditure up to date, it will cost the belligerent nations about $45,000,000,000 for the destruction of property, waste, and labor in this war.

"England has done wonderful work, work that never has been equaled before. She has 3,000,000 trained soldiers, perfectly equipped for war, at the present time, and her navy is invincible. There are 1,000,000 British troops in France, 350,000 in the Dardanelles, and 1,650,000 in Great Britain awaiting orders to proceed to the front.

IRISHMEN FLEE HERE; FEAR CONSCRIPTION

The American liner St. Paul arrived here yesterday afternoon from Liverpool with 145 first, 331 second, and 331 third class passengers, among whom were 250 young Irishmen leaving their country to avoid the expected conscription. Several passengers in the cabin were detained by the Immigration Inspectors and sent to Ellis Island for further examination before a special Board of Inquiry.

Among them was Emilio Veraga, a young Peruvian who came over to live with his aunt, Mrs. Juana de Sanders, whose home is at 108 West Seventy-eighth Street. He lacks four days of being 16 years old, which brings him under the immigration law. He was accompanied on the liner by Norbetta Condore, a Peruvian Indian girl 8 years old, who would have been sent to the Immigration Bureau, too, but his aunt came to the pier for her and the Inspector allowed her to land.

Emilio Vergara told the officials that he had left Peru with his aunt Juana two and a half years ago, and had been to school in England. His uncle, who was an American, had died in Peru, and his aunt had sent for him because she was afraid of the Zeppelins in England. The little girl, he said, came from Cuzco, 11,000 feet up in the Andes, where it is always cold, and had been adopted by his uncle years ago, when he was constructing a railroad there. She had gone to London with him and had been staying at a French convent in Golden Square, Soho.

The Rev. J. A. Johnson, Bishop of the African Methodist Church from the Zambesi to Cape Town, was another passenger. He is on his way home to Philadelphia. He said the war had changed conditions in Africa so much that his return home was almost a necessity.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 22, (Dispatch to The London Daily Telegraph.)—Telegrams from a German source state that the King of Serbia has issued the following proclamation:

"Age has taken my arms from me. I, who was elected your King, have no longer force to guide my armies to the war in defense of the Fatherland. I am but a feeble old man who can do nothing but bless Serbia's soldiers, citizens, women, and children. But I swear to you if a new invasion shall bring upon us the shame of being conquered I shall not survive the ruin, but I, too, shall die with the country."

King Peter of Serbia is 71 years old.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 25.—The bombardment of Dedeaghatch caused the death of ten civilians and over a thousand soldiers, and there also were a large number of soldiers wounded, says a dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Athens.

A large proportion of the military casualties, the correspondent adds, were in the barracks which housed the Fortieth Bulgarian Regiment. The barracks was crowded with soldiers, who were preparing for their meal when the bombardment was opened at 1 o'clock with accurately aimed shells, which demolished the barracks, burying the occupants in the ruins.

Troops engaged in digging trenches around the town also suffered very heavy losses.

Fires caused by the exploding shells destroyed the railway station and surrounding buildings, doing enormous damage. It is stated that the entire loss from the bombardment, which lasted four hours, will be several million pounds.

The correspondent says the bombardment was directed by aeroplanes, which flew over the town throughout the afternoon. Twenty warships participated. The Bulgarians are now engaged in preparing defense works on the surrounding mountains.

Porto Lagos was fiercely bombarded by eight warships Thursday and again on Friday.

Uskub Taken by Bulgarians.

It is understood that the Allies plan to make a landing on the Bulgarian coast at Porto Lagos.

The Bulgarians, according to their official report issued yesterday, have reached Uskub, an important junction on the Saloniki-Nish Railway, and have thus placed themselves across the route by which the Allies' reinforcements for the Serbs would travel.

An official announcement issued at Nish on Saturday by the Serbian General Headquarters Staff confirmed reports that the Bulgarians had occupied Kumanovo, on the Nish railroad, about twelve miles northeast of Uskub, and Veles, on the Vardar River, about twenty-five miles southeast of Uskub.

A dispatch to The Times from Athens dated Saturday, however, says:

"A telegram from General Sarrail, Commander in Chief of the French army in the Orient, says the Bulgarians have occupied only a portion of the town of Veles. They are on the left bank of the Varder, which runs through the town. French troops stopped the Bulgarian attack, and the Serbians retired to the hills on the right bank, which they are fortifying. Bulgarian official communication speaks of bad weather having interrupted their progress."

French on Bulgar Soil.

It is announced officially to the French War Office that the French troops operating with the Serbians have captured the village of Rabrovo, on Bulgarian soil nine miles south of Strumnitza.

The Austro-Germans in the north have begun a more vigorous offensive, and have crossed the Danube near Orsova, close to the Rumanian frontier. This brings much nearer the linking up of the armies of the Germanic allies and those of Bulgaria and the opening of the way through Bulgaria to Constantinople. Success, however, is not being achieved without heavy losses, as the Serbian veterans, well intrenched in their mountains, are offering stubborn resistance and are making the invaders pay a big price for every mile of country invaded.

Without the active co-operation of Greece and Rumania, however, the Allies, it is feared here, will not be able to do much for some weeks.

Official Reports of Fighting.

DRIVE SERBIANS BACK IN MOUNTAINS

Gen. Gallwitz's Army, Marching Knee-Deep in Mud, Makes Important Gains.

WOMEN DIE IN TRENCHES

Defenders, Unable to Withstand Withering Fire, Shelled Out of Position After Position.

BY WILHELM CONRAD GOMOLL.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

[The Cologne Gazette Dispatches.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF GENERAL VON GALLWITZ IN SERBIA, Oct. 23.—During the last two days our forces have made highly successful attacks and succeeded in quickening their rapid advance into the Morova valley.

In spite of bad roads, converted by recent rains into muddy slime, into which the troops sank to their knees at every step, the advance on both sides of the Morova valley continued until we had obtained complete command of the valley. As the troops gained ground through the adjacent hilly country lying to the east up to the Miawa valley the front was extended in the direction toward Palanka and Terowatz, with the result of securing an unexpected gain of territory.

In spite of the Serbian resistance our troops were everywhere successful. The central group of the army of General Gallwitz has opened the gate to the south still further. Our positions were advanced north and west toward the mountain district of Ranovac.

It appears that the Serbians sought to make a new stand there with furious energy, with the intention of stopping our further progress.

The mountains at this point are higher and more inaccessible. The right wing of General Gallwitz's army, however, is pushing on irresistibly toward the south from Selevac. It is based on the troops of General Koevess, now vigorously fighting for possession of the Ralja valley, where the advancing forces of the Serbians also fell back. By means of heavy artillery and infantry fire their line was driven back nearly ten kilometers.

The storming of the heights of Slatina during the fighting stands as a wonderful feat of arms, the troops taking this position, lying nearly 300 meters high, after the artillery had poured a rain of shells upon it. They forced their way at the point of the bayonet into the Serbian trenches on the surrounding heights, and also succeded in winning ground on the Kolubara.

The roads of the Morova valley, like those leading from the Pobonawley highlands, are the chief lines of communication leading to Kraguyevac, which for centuries was the centre of Turkish military power.

Fought for Hill Tops, Step by Step.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF GENERAL VON GALLWITZ IN SERBIA, Oct. 22.—Fighting has been renewed in the mountainous country southeast of Posarevec, between the Pek and Miawa Rivers. After the centre of the army of General von Gallwitz in the valley of the Morava had advanced over the Poljana to Wlaschki Dol and taken this place, the left wing pressed on with a strong force between Wlaschki Dol and the little town of Raschkanre, on the Miawa. The advance went forward through a country commanded by many high summits, whose heights range from 200 to 300 meters. They were strongly fortified by the Serbians.

The struggle to gain possession of the hilltops was fought step by step, for the defensive positions of the enemy were

ITALIANS FORCING FOE TO SHIFT MEN

Austrians Said to be Obliged Now to Call Troops from Some Other Front.

DRIVEN FROM SECOND LINE

General Offensive Continues to Gain—1,000 More Austrian Prisoners Taken on Isonzo.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MILAN, Oct. 24, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Magnificent success is attending the offensive that is being pushed along the whole front. The Austrian losses have been very heavy. Preparation for the offensive by three days of artillery fire was most destructive, both to the trenches and the men in them, particularly in the group of Austrian defenses protecting the Col di Lana.

Until the Italian offensive is completed it is impossible to gauge its importance on the future campaign, but it already is evident that the Austrians, almost along the entire length of the front, have been driven from the second line of defenses, which for four months they have been engaged in fortifying. Many of these positions I had the opportunity of observing when visiting the front at the invitation of the Italian Government. The natural difficulties they presented were reinforced by every defensive device known to soldiers. The success of the Italian moves confirms the high estimate my colleagues and I myself made of the value of the Italian Army from the point of view of command, equipment, and, above all, efficiency of soldier as a fighting unit.

It is significant that the Italian advance is of a nature to prevent the Austrians from taking advantage of strategic routes and moving troops from place to place in support of threatened positions and to fill gaps, which are numerous, because, in addition to the heavy losses in killed and wounded in two days, the Austrians' loss in prisoners totals 3,500.

Austria will now be forced to draw upon troops in one of her other fighting fronts or further deplete the watching force kept near the Rumanian frontier.

Italians Take 1,000 Prisoners.

A new and brilliant success has marked our offensive in the Ledro Valley. Our troops penetrated, on the 22d, into Bezzeca Basin, occupied the village and the heights dominating it to the north on the two sides of the Concei Valley.

In upper Cordevole our troops are closing their grip on the difficult defenses of the Col di Lana. Two more field forts were stormed and twenty-five prisoners taken.

In the Rienz Valley, on the night of the 23d, the enemy attempted to attack our positions at a point where the Popena debouches, but was repulsed.

In the Fella Valley fresh actions, turning in our favor, were fought near Pontafel and Leopoldskirchen.

In the Monte Nero zone we completed the occupation of the crest southeast of Mrzli, and repulsed two violent enemy attacks on our Vodil positions. On Monte Sabotino and on Podgora Height, in the Gorizia zone, our troops have taken several trenches by assault.

On the Carso the troops fought all day yesterday both sides showing great determination. Our infantry, undismayed by the deadly effects of the enemy's artillery, advanced impetuously several times to the conquest of the enemy's positions, which, previous to that, had been plowed up by the accurate and effective shelling of our batteries. Our adversary opened a violent and rapid fire from numerous masked field and machine guns, and launched fresh columns in a counterattack.

Important positions were several times stormed, then lost, and restormed, but at evening our troops held securely the ground won on the left wing, east of Peteano, and in the centre, toward Marcottini.

We took 1,000 prisoners, sixteen of whom were officers, together with three machine guns and other war material. This booty marks the success of our arms during a hard day's fighting along the Isonzo front.

BOMB FACTORY IN HIS ROOM

MECHANIC AID ALSO TAKEN

Kept High-Power Automobile and Motor Boat, Always Ready for Fast Service.

A NEW INFERNAL MACHINE

Telescope Device Found in Lodgings, with Supply of Most Powerful Explosive.

The attempt by two Germans to buy ten pounds of picric acid, the chemical which enters into the composition of most high explosives, from a New York firm a few weeks ago resulted yesterday afternoon in the arrest in a wood near Grantwood, N. J., of Robert Fay and Walter Scholz, who are locked up in the Weehawken police station on the charge of conspiracy.

Fay, according to papers found in the apartments which the two men shared at 27 Fifth Street, Weehawken, is a Lieutenant in the German Army. It is said that he took part in the battle of the Marne, and came to the United States last April.

Other documents found in his rooms indicate a connection, according to the Federal Secret Service men and the New York and New Jersey detectives who made the arrest, with the German Foreign Office. What this connection was no one would say last night, but it is intimated that there can be no doubt that he had close relations with Wilhelmstrasse.

Fay is 34 years old and a man of culture and refinement. He speaks English fluently and possesses a striking personality. Scholz is 27 and a mechanic, who has been in this country two years. It is said that he represented himself as Fay's brother-in-law.

Held for Conspiracy.

The two men are held on the charge of conspiracy, and will be arraigned this morning before Recorder Rander in Weehawken. But it is understood that they are believed to have been connected with a recent explosion in a West Shore Railroad elevator in Weehawken, and it is intimated by the detectives that there is reason for connecting them with the series of explosions in ammunition factories, of bomb explosions on board steamers carrying supplies to the anti-German coalition in Europe, which has been a feature of the American export trade in munitions for the last few months.

In the men's rooms, and in a compartment in a West Hoboken storage warehouse which it is said they rented, were found explosives of the highest power, together, according to the police story, with mines fitted out with apparatus for attaching them to the sterns of ships.

The apprehension of the two men began with the activity of Acting Detective Captain Thomas Tunney, in charge of the dynamite squad at New York Police Headquarters, who was ordered by Commissioner Woods some time ago to devote his energies to hunting down the men who have been concerned in the placing of bombs on merchant ships.

Tunney and his men thereupon started a careful scrutiny of every place in Manhattan where high explosives are manufactured, stored, or sold, and every man who came or went, who bought or sold anything, was carefully looked over and investigated. It was some time ago that the two Germans who tried to make the purchase of picric acid came under Tunney's observation. His men followed them when they left the place where they had tried to buy the explosives, followed them across the river into New Jersey, and up to the apartment house in Fifth Street, Weehawken.

Secret Service Joins Work.

For some time after that New York and New Jersey detectives kept a watch on the two. It was discovered, according to the police, that they were in the habit of taking a trolley car to a lonely spot near Grantwood, there to make experiments with explosives, small quantities of which they took with them. After the police had found this out Chief William J. Flynn of the Federal Secret Service was notified, and he sent up two of his men, James Bush and James E. Savage, to take part in the investigation.

Yesterday afternoon Captain Tunney, Detective Lieutenant Barnetz, and several of his men, accompanied by Fifth Deputy Police Commissioner Guy H. Scull and Inspector of Combustibles Healy, crossed over to Jersey and were joined by Bush and Savage, Detective Lyons of Weehawken, and Detective Lieutenant Charles Gillman of Union Hill.

The two men who had been under surveillance left the apartment in Fifth Street about the middle of the afternoon, carrying something with them in a suitcase. They got on a car to Grantwood and one of the detectives took the same car and went along with them.

The others followed in an automobile, keeping as near to the street car as they could, until the two suspects got off, near Grantwood. Then the officers came up rapidly, followed the two into the wood, and made the arrest.

The article which the two had in the suitcase, according to the police, was something believed to be a bomb, made on the model of a telescope. The outer casing was an iron pipe four inches in diameter. Within it was another pipe, and still another, and it is believed that the space between was to have been filled with explosives.

Detailed Map of New York Harbor.

The two men were taken back to the Weehawken Station, where they were still being questioned by the Secret Service men at midnight. Meanwhile others of the party of Federal and local detectives went back to the apartment on Fifth Street and searched there. They say, they found the documents proving the connection of Fay with the German Army and the German Foreign Office. They found also 200 letters in German, mostly addressed to Fay, which are now in the possession of the Secret Service officers and are being translated. And they found a United States Coast Survey map showing New York Harbor with all its docks and piers in great detail.

There was a raised platform in one of the rooms on which were a considerable number of mechanisms of various kinds which the police believe to be intended for the manufacture of bombs. There were also four suitcases containing twenty-five sticks of dynamite and twenty-five pounds of trinitrotoluol, which is one of the highest of known explosives, and is the one used in most high explosive shells. This is more powerful than anything in the outfit of Erich Muenter, alias Frank Holt, the German-American who last July set off a bomb in the Capitol at Washington and later committed suicide in the jail at Mineola, L. I., where he had been confined after an attempt to murder J. P. Morgan.

From information obtained in the observation of previous days and confirmed by papers found in the apartment occupied by the two men the police thereupon went to the Victor Storage Warehouse at 245 Clinton Avenue, West Hoboken, where they found five packing cases which it is said Fay and Scholz had put away there.

Mines to Blow Up Ships.

In these cases, according to the police, were five explosive mines, contained in steel boxes, with attachments which are believed to be designed for fastening the mines to the rudders of steamers. It is the theory of the Secret Service mechanics, who have inspected the mechanism, that the rush of water from the propeller would start a clockwork device which would bring about the explosion of the mine at a certain time.

There were also, according to the police, other bombs which might have been intended for placing inside ships among the cargo to start fires, as has been done several times during the past few months.

Then, after the apartment had been ransacked, the detectives went to Herzog's garage on Main Street, Union Hill, where they found a high-power automobile in Fay's name. It is said to be capable of ninety miles an hour.

In Degan's boathouse, on the Hudson, they found a high-power motor boat, which would have been able to run all over the waters about New York at a speed such as could have been approximated by very few other craft of any description in the harbor.

It is believed that the factory where the men made their explosives was somewhere near Grantwood, and the police are now searching all that neighborhood in the hope of finding some clue which may lead them to the plant.

J. C. Harperson, proprietor of the rooming house at 27 Fifth Street, Weehawken, where Fay and Scholz made their home, said that he knew nothing of the men prior to their appearance at his house about a week ago, when they engaged their rooms. He said he had had no difficulty with them and that they had been quiet and unobtrusive.

Fay Cool Under Grilling.

The two made not the slightest resistance when arrested; Fay, indeed, gave himself up with a quiet smile to the detectives, and remained unruffled after hours of grilling by Secret Service men and the New York and New Jersey police. Deputy Police Commissioner Scull, who himself was formerly in the Secret Service, took charge of the quizzing of Fay and was still at it at midnight.

Despite the statement that Scholz was Fay's brother-in-law, the police are inclined to believe that he was only a subordinate, and that Fay is the principal and the brainy man of the two. Neither of the men would say anything last night, and no clue to their connections in Germany could be obtained, aside from those which the police found in their correspondence.

When it was suggested that a man named Scholz had once had an intimate connection with the personal entourage of Emperor William II. the Secret Service men said that there was no reason to believe that this was the man.

The bombs which have been exploded from time to time this Summer in the cargoes of outward-bound liners carrying munitions of war have been all set off by clockwork, so far as is known, although as a rule no fragments of the infernal machine have been found. But clockwork bombs under water, such as those found in the Clinton Avenue storage warehouse are believed to be, have been used very rarely.

It was some such idea that was conceived by Bushnell, the inventor of the first submarine, who planned to attach mines to be exploded by clockwork to the British ships off the New England coast in the Revolutionary War; and a similar plan was entertained by Robert Fulton when he experimented with submarines in the war of 1812.

But with the development of electrical appliances engineering ingenuity ran more to contact mines or those exploded from the shore by an electric spark, and the clockwork mine as an implement of warfare against warships has practically disappeared.

For the purpose of being fastened under the stern of a merchant ship, however, it seems to be well adapted; the clockwork not starting so long as the vessel is lying at dock, but only being set off by the rush of water from the propeller when the ship steams out to sea.

Find More Bomb Material.

Early this morning, working on admissions which it is said Fay made while being questioned, the police went back to Degan's boathouse, near the West Shore ferries, where Fay and Scholz had kept their motor boat, and found there four wooden boxes lined with tin, eight feet long and three feet square, which contained each about 120 pounds of chlorate of potash. This is one of the ingredients of sugar bombs.

The experiments of the two men in the woods at Grantwood were watched on Saturday night by Detective Murphy and Fennelly of Captain Tunney's squad, who hid in an oak tree and waited till nearly midnight, when the two Germans arrived in their automobile and made various experiments with fulminating caps. There were in the wood a number of shanties, closed up and deserted, formerly used by a fireworks factory. To one of these the two Germans had a key.

Yesterday the two detectives got back to their station in the tree and waited till the Germans arrived and continued their experiments with detonating caps, using materials which they seemed to find of a better quality than what they had previously employed. They were engaged in this when the detectives came on them.

Had Plenty of Money.

Deputy Police Commissioner Scull denied early this morning the report that either of the men had confessed to any crime. He said, however, that Fay had talked very freely with the authorities and that he had made a number of important statements; but that these were of such a general nature that it was impossible to indicate their character.

It is understood that when the men were first arrested, Fay attempted to bribe Detective Lieutenant Barnets to let them go. Fay had about $80 on him when arrested and there was $480 more in his trunk. Both men, it is said, were well supplied with money.

Scholz, since coming to this country, has worked as a farmer, as a salesman for a patened brush, and as a draftsman for the Lackawanna Railroad. Fay admitted that since he came here last Spring he had visited several cities where munitions were manufactured, including Bridgeport, Conn., but denied that he had any illegal purpose in so doing. Fay was in the United States once before, about four years ago, when he visited here with his wife. He is said to have won the Iron Cross for bravery on the Champagne front last March.

While the two prisoners will be arraigned before Recorder Rander at 9:30 this morning in the Weehawken Town Hall, it is believed that there will be no hearing, but that the two will be turned over to the Federal authorities.

BOMBS FIRED MANY SHIPS.

Explosion on Minnehaha Always Blamed on German Conspirators.

There has been an alarming number of fires on board ships in recent months which are thought to have had their origin in incendiary bombs, and bombs and dynamite have been found on other vessels sailing from American ports to Europe. In nearly every case the vessel was carrying munitions or men for the service of the Allies.

One ship fire that caused much speculation and alarm was that on board the Atlantic transport liner Minnehaha off the coast of Halifax on July 7. It was thought that this fire was caused by a bomb placed on the ship by Erich Muenter, alias Frank Holt, who shot J. P. Morgan and later committed suicide in the Mineola jail. Muenter had warned the public that he had placed a bomb on a steamship that would explode on the day on which the Minnehaha fired occurred. Later, however, the theory was advanced that not Muenter himself but conspirators acting with him or independently had put a bomb on the vessel.

The fire on the ship started in hold No. 3 and spread to hold No. 4. While the sailors fought it the ship was steered for Halifax, which place it reached safely on July 9. The fire was finally extinguished with steam. Many passengers on the vessel reported the first warning they had of the fire was a violent explosion.

An earlier fire was that on the French Line steamer Touraine on March 6, 500 miles off the Irish coast. After threatening to destroy the ship, the fire was got under control, while the ship proceeded under her own steam to Harve. The steamer docked in Harve on March 8.

The origin of the fire was never determined, but there were suspicions that a fire bomb had been placed on board the boat. The French Government began an inquiry from which no report has been made as yet.

The fire on board the Touraine was thought for a time to have been caused by Raymond Swoboda, but this charge was later abandoned. Swoboda was recently discharged from prison in Paris and a dispatch from Paris, dated yesterday, tells of his expulsion from France by the Government.

The Fabre Line steamer Sant' Anna, bound from New York from Marseilles with 1,764 passengers, caught fire 1,000 miles off the coast of Halifax on Sept. 13. It was thought at the time that a bomb caused the fire, and this suspicion caused the authorities of the Fabre Line to issue an order that all baggage be examined before being loaded on any of their ships. The Sant' Anna put in at the Asores with the fire still burning in her cargo. It was extinguished there and the ship proceeded to Naples.

The Greek steamer Athinai, which left New York for Greece, caught fire and was abandoned by her crew on Sept. 8. The fire was of suspicious origin. The Captain of the ship was convinced, he said, that it was incendiary.

On July 27, two sticks of dynamite were found on board the White Star Liner Arabic. The vessel later was sunk by a German submarine or a floating mine. The dynamite was found the night before the ship sailed from New York for Liverpool by a detective employed by the line. It was concealed under a settee in the women's retiring room in the cabin accommodation amidships. While there was no fuse, detonator, or wiring attached to the dynamite, its condition made it extremely sensitive to percussion and it was thought that whoever concealed it on the ship intended to return to it later and fix it for explosion.

The French and Fabre Lines have been heavy sufferers from fire bombs on their ships and bombs have been found on many of their boats which did not cause fire. During the month of June fire bombs were found on nine freight steamers chartered by these lines to carry war munitions to Europe. Among the vessels of these lines on which attempts were made by fire bombs were:

The Devon City, sailed for Havre on April 27.

The Lord Ern, sailed for Havre on April 29.

The Cressington Court, sailed for Havre on April 29.

The Sanland, sailed for London on May 1.

The Lord Downshire, sailed for Havre on May 1.

The Strathtay, sailed for Marseilles on May 8.

The Bankdale, sailed for Havre on May 8.

Some of the bombs used on these and other ships were explosive, while other bombs were made of acids, intended to take fire from the heat of the ship's hold.

So certain did it seem at one time that a systematic campaign to destroy ships was being carried on in this country that on July 11 Secretary Daniels directed the Naval Radio Station in Arlington, Va., to flash a warning to all ships at sea to be on the lookout for bombs. The warning was directed particularly to the steamers Howth Head and Baron Napier, which sailed from New Orleans on July 9 with cargoes for the Allies. The Navy Department had received information that explosives had been placed on these vessels. No bombs were found on either.

Fire occurred on July 24 in the British ship Craigside while she was being loaded at her pier at the foot of West Twenty-third Street. Several persons heard an explosion just before the fire, and the theory that a bomb caused the blaze was accepted by the police. More than 25,000 bags of the sugar on the pier and in the hold were destroyed. The damage was estimated at $125,000.

So widespread did the alarm become after the fire that the principal freight shippers of New York joined together and employed ex-Deputy Police Commissioner George S. Dougherty to protect their cargoes. The Cunard Line had previously put into service a staff of special police in gray uniforms and the International Mercantile Marine and the French Line employed private detectives.

An investigation of the repeated attempts to burn vessels leaving this port with cargoes for the Allies resulted in the arrest on Aug. 28 of seven men. Five of the seven were Germans or of German descent, one was a Swede, and the other a Belgian. The prisoners were Michael Matzet, 672 Forty-eighth Street, Brooklyn, a lighter Captain; Sigmund Sjursen, 511 Sixth Avenue, a lighter Captain; Ferdinand Hahn, 337 Seventeenth Street, Brooklyn, a lighter Captain; Richard Millner, 6,914 Fourteenth Avenue, Brooklyn, a lighter Captain; John Peterson of Yonkers, a lighter mate; Jean Styrms of 601 Tenth Avenue, a pier checker, and Abraham Kochelink, 89 Monroe Street, Brooklyn.

Excitement was caused on the night of Sept. 14 when two bottles of sulphuric acid were found on the White Star liner Lapland while she was being loaded with war munitions at the foot of West Nineteenth Street preparatory to sailing for Liverpool the next day. The bottles were found by private detectives employed to search the ship for bombs or other explosives. According to Inspector Owen Egan, the acid might have caused a fire on the ship.

What is believed to have been a plot to blow up the liner San Guglielmo of the Sicula-Americana Line was thwarted by the police just before the vessel sailed for Naples on Sept. 27 carrying many Italian reservists. Eight sticks of dynamite were found on the pier at the foot of Pacific Street, Brooklyn, a short time prior to the sailing of the vessel. It was thought that a German sympathizer had intended to put this dynamite on board the vessel. One of the employes of the line said that a few days before the vessel sailed he caught a man crawling up a hawser of the vessel.

LONG LIST OF EXPLOSIONS.

German Spies Believed at Work Since Beginning of War.

There have been a number of explosions in powder and munitions factories since the beginning of the war which have been attributed to bombs. The number of these explosions has been greater in the months of this year than ever before. Many investigators have suspected that German sympathizers were responsible for these explosions, for they invariably occurred in plants where large orders for the Allies were being filled, but the most rigid investigations have failed to trace the authorship of the explosions to any individuals.

So persistent were the rumors, however, that the explosions were the work of agents, and that, after destroying private plants, the agents would seek the destruction of warehouses of the United States Government, that early last May the Government dispatched special squads of marines from the Brooklyn Navy Yard to guard the depots at Iona Island, near Peekskill, N. Y., and at Lake Denmark, near Golden Dover, N. J.

Previously double guards had been placed at the Springfield Arsenal building and shops at the United States Armory in Springfield. Also extra guards were placed about United States naval torpedo stations and the naval magazine on Roe's Island.

Some of the recent suspicious explosions in private plants were:

At Tonawanda, Equitable Powder Company's plant at Alton, Ill., on April 1 last, more than 5,000 pounds of black powder exploded, killing five men. The company had large orders from the allied powers.

On April 4 last there was an explosion of 500,000 percussion caps stored in the Pompton Lakes Railway depot preparatory for shipment abroad. The caps had been manufactured by the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Company.

On May 10, at Carney's Point, N. J., there was an explosion in the du Pont Company's plant in which six men were injured. The explosion occurred in a building in which powder was being mixed.

On May 15, two explosions destroyed a still house at the smokeless powder plant of the du Pont Powder Company at Carney's Point.

An explosion at the du Pont works at Haskell, N. J., on March 5 destroyed four one-story buildings and killed five men. This plant had been entered by three unidentified men in an automobile a month earlier, and, though no injury resulted, it was closely guarded after that. The cause of the explosion was never learned.

On May 12 there was an explosion of guncotton at the plant of the Anderson Chemical Company in Wallington, N. J., in which one man was killed and another seriously injured.

An operating mill at the plant of the du Pont Company at Carney's Point, N. J., was wrecked by an explosion on May 25. This was the fourth explosion in the same plant within ten days. This series of explosions caused the du Pont Company to take cognizance of rumors that spies were attempting to destroy the plant because it was furnishing ammunition to the Allies, and extra guards were placed about the plant.

In one of the explosions a deep hole beside one of the wrecked buildings indicated that dynamite had been used to cause the explosion, and sticks of dynamite, according to a report, were found about the plant. Also, it was reported that a guard had caught a man carrying fuses in the act of climbing over the high stockade that surrounds the plant. Two men who were suspected because their antecedents were unknown and because they inquired where the high explosives were kept in the plant were dismissed as employes of the company after May 25.

On Aug. 29, there was an explosion that wrecked two black powder mills of the Dupont Company at the Upper Hagley Yards near Wilmington, Del., in which two men were killed.

On the same day there was an explosion at the plant of the American Powder Company at Acton, Mass. The mill had been closed for three days and the police of Acton became convinced from evidence discovered by them that the explosion had been caused with intent to cripple the plant.

On Aug. 3 two United States soldiers and a civilian were killed by an explosion at the United States Arsenal at Frankfort, Philadelphia. The cause of the explosion was never learned.

On Aug. 11 there was an explosion in the plant of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company near Turtle Creek, Penn. The explosion was among shells which had been manufactured for the Allies. Two men were killed.

On the 15 last there was an explosion in the big grain elevator of the New York Central Railroad at Weehawken. The elevator was wrecked, and it was only by the merest accident that none of the large ships at and near the pier was destroyed. Five men were injured. The theory that the explosion was caused by a bomb was advanced at the time, but could never be proved.

When the explosion occurred dozens of the railroad employes were unloading grain-laden freight cars beside the plant. It was 11:15 o'clock in the morning. There was a roar that echoed for hundreds of yards along the Hudson River and a concussion which shook nearby buildings and set the barges rocking at their anchors. A north and south wall of the cupola of the elevator fell away and flames destroyed a great part of the elevator. The damage was estimated at $70,000. The explosion occurred in a bin which had been emptied for cleaning.

These are only some of the recent explosions in munition plants which were supposed to have been manufacturing ammunition for the Allies.

FIRE DAMAGES POWDER PLANT

Du Pont Works at Hopewell, Va., Crippled by Mysterious Blaze.

Special to The New York Times.

HOPEWELL, Va., Oct. 24.—Fire, which was discovered at 10 o'clock tonight in the main plant of the du Pont powder plant, resulted in damage estimated at $125,000. The plant will be severely crippled for perhaps three weeks.

The fire originated in the main power plant of the older division of the works. This building was quickly reduced to a mass of ruins. The fire spread to the auxiliary power plant of the new section of the works, and this plant also was destroyed. Adjoining buildings were damaged. Heroic work by the fire squad of the factory finally told, and at 11:30 the fire was declared to be under control.

The authorities of the company are at a loss to locate the inception or cause of the fire, which had made great headway when discovered. With the exception of one dynamo room used for lighting, that part of the plant was not in use at the time. Watchmen declare that no one except officials or employes had entered the power house during the day. With large contracts for powder and working almost night and day, the plant had been carefully guarded for months, it being realized that, as the bulk of this powder was destined for the Allies, there was danger of incendiarism or the use of bombs by pro-German enthusiasts. The impression tonight is that the fire was due to some other cause.

GERMAN NIGHT ATTACK FAILS NEAR SOUCHEZ

Eighth That Has Been Made in Five Days—French Level German Champagne Trenches.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—A German attack on the French positions in the wood of Givenchy and near Hill 140—the eighth in five days made in the Souchez region—was decisively repulsed last night. Artillery duels were almost continuous today to the south of the Somme, and in Champagne and Lorraine the French batteries leveled some German trenches.

The British and German communiqués today deal largely with aeroplane combats, which have been frequent in the last few days, the former reporting the apparent destruction of a German machine, the latter the capture of a British monoplane and the killing of its two occupants. Verdun and the English camp at Abbéville have been bombarded by German aviators; Ostend and Noyon by those of the Allies.

The Germans again attempted last night an attack on our positions in the wood of Givenchy and on our advanced posts in the neighborhood of Hill 140. Many of the Germans were cut down the moment they left their trenches and the survivors were compelled to return to their positions. During the past five days we have checked the enemy eight times in this region alone.

The artillery struggle remains very active and is almost uninterrupted to the south of the Somme, to the region of Lithons, Canny, and Beuvraignes.

Moreover, our batteries by their efficacious fire have succeeded in destroying some of the enemy's trenches and works in Champagne, to the southeast of Tahure; between the Meuse and the Moselle, to the region of Regnéville, and in Lorraine, near Embermenil and Domèvre.

The communication issued by the War Office tonight reads as follows:

There is nothing to add to the preceding communication.

Sir John French's report says:

During the last three days there has been considerable artillery activity south of La Bassée Canal, but no infantry action other than grenade fighting in the trenches.

On the 22d four of our airmen had engagements in the air, and in each case the enemy's machines were either forced to descend or were driven away. One of the German aeroplanes dived head first from a height of 7,000 feet into a wood just behind the enemy's lines.

On the remainder of the front there was intermittent artillery action and a certain amount of mining and countermining, without any important results.

The War Office in Berlin has issued this report:

Northeast of Souchez enemy advances were repulsed. Detachments which penetrated our positions were immediately driven back.

Enemy aviators bombarded Ostend and the Noyon railroad station, but without result.

In an aerial battle south of St. Quentin an English double-decked machine was brought down, and the pilot and observation officer were killed. German aviators attacked, apparently with successful results, the English camp at Abbéville, northwest of Amiens. Bombs also were dropped on Verdun. Hits were observed.

SIX BULGAR COLONELS SHOT.

ROME, Oct. 24, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Six Bulgarian Colonels, suspected of sympathizing with Russia, have been court-martialed and shot at Sofia owing to the growing anti-war feeling in the Bulgarian Army, especially among the officers who do not trouble to hide their disapproval of the alliance with Turkey.

Besides these exemplary executions the Military Code has been altered and new provisions have been promulgated providing a death penalty for officers, men, and noncombatants who openly express sympathy with the enemy or surrender willingly.

18,210 BRITISH OFFICERS LOST SINCE WAR BEGAN

LONDON, Oct. 15, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The severity of the fighting on the Western front recently is indicated by the officers' casualty lists for the fortnight ended Oct. 11, which show that the British Army lost 383 killed, 946 wounded, and 107 missing—a total of 1,136 in that period. The proportion of killed to wounded is rather higher than of late, and losses among officers of high rank have been severe. Major Gens. Thesiger and Capper, two Colonels, and ten Lieutenant Colonels have been killed or have died of wounds, while two Brigadier Generals are reported wounded and one missing.

Losses of officers since the beginning of the war total 18,210, of whom 5,559 have been killed or died of wounds, 11,115 wounded, and 1,536 missing.

RUSSIA TO BORROW $2,750,000,000 ABROAD

Finance Minister to Reform Whole Fiscal System—Rich Resources for Internal Loan.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 24, (via London.)—An Imperial ukase, issued today, authorizes the Russian Minister of Finance to transact on foreign markets credit operations amounting to 5,500,000,000 rubles, ($2,750,000,000,) and to issue abroad the necessary Treasury bonds in pounds, francs and dollars.

Explaining his plans to a representative of the press, Pierre Bark, the Finance Minister, said the whole fiscal system of Russia would be reformed on the basis of the income tax, which already had been approved by the Duma, and now was under consideration by the Council of the Empire.

All textiles, he said, also would be taxed, which would bring into the Treasury $75,000,000 annually.

Schemes for creating tea, sugar and match monopolies are being worked out.

The question of a 6 per cent. internal loan shortly will be determined, as the Russian money market is rich in resources, the proof of which, said the Minister, would be found in the recent official statement that current deposits in private banks had reached the marvellous total of $2,000,000,000, and that the increase in deposit accounts for the year ended in September amounted to $550,000,000, while the savings bank deposit monthly increase was $25,000,000.

Consul General Snodgrass, at Moscow, in a report which reached the State Department at Washington in September, summarized the various issues of bonds and notes made by Russia for war purposes since the beginning of the war. These were as follows:

BONDS ISSUED AT 5 PER CENT.

Aug. 5, 1915..	400,000,000 rubles	$206,000,000
Oct. 19, 1915..	400,000,000 rubles	206,000,000
Oct. 19, 1914..	12,000,000 pounds	58,000,000
Jan. 13, 1915..	500,000,000 rubles	257,500,000
Jan. 8, 1915..	40,000,000 pounds	194,650,000
Feb. 19 1915..	500,000,000 rubles	257,500,000
Feb. 19 1915..	500,000,000 rubles	257,500,000
April 9, 1915..	400,000,000 rubles	206,000,000
July 1, 1915..	1,000,000,000 rubles	515,000,000

NOTES IN FOREIGN MARKETS.

April 29.....	200,000,000 rubles	$103,000,000
June 23.....	50,000,000 pounds	243,325,000
March 26.....	625,000,000 francs	121,.00,000

The total debt thus incurred since Aug. 1, 1914, was $2,407,880,000. The proposed new credits of $2,750,000,000 would make a total war debt of $5,157,880,000.

PLAN POLISH RELIEF.

Meeting Today to Arrange for Collection of $50,000.

A meeting to organize a campaign for the raising of funds to relieve suffering in the Polish countries will be held in the offices of the American Polish Relief Committee of New York, 14 East Forty-seventh Street, at 4 o'clock this afternoon. Cardinal Farley is patron of the committee and Mme. Marcella Sembrich is its active head. Among the speakers will be Edison Maxim, the Rev. Father William B. Courtenay, Supreme Court Justice Weeks, Mrs. John F. Yawger, and Miss Mabel Wagnalls. It is the purpose of the committee to solicit pledges for contributions in the next two weeks, the amount realized to be announced at a rally on Nov. 6. It is hoped to raise a fund of $50,000.

THERE are several requirements in a well-rounded Board of Directors for a Trust Company or Bank. It is customary for all banking institutions to have directors with desirable business connections.

The directorate should therefore include bankers who are close to the investment world, as well as heads of large industries, merchants and manufacturers who are in a position to forecast the trend of business conditions.

We do not consider it wise to have any one business interest heavily represented on our Board of Directors. The largest stockholder of the Columbia Trust Company holds only a small percentage of its stock. Its Board, therefore, is not controlled by any one interest—but represents a healthy variety of interests.

SAY AIR RAID COST 150 TO 300 LIVES

"'I beg of you to get out as quietly and orderly as possible and to remember that there are women and children present,' he said.

"Instantly the orchestra struck up the national anthem and practically all the large audience stood still and joined in singing the words. At the end they filed out quietly, walking with difficulty over the heaps of plaster which littered the floor.

"The dressing rooms on the top floor of the Lyceum Theatre at one end were devastated, but nobody connected with the theatre received injury.

"The scene in the public house already mentioned, called 'The Bell,' resembled a shambles. It appears that the bars were crowded at the time, and scarcely any one in them escaped without injury. Several people were killed outright—some reports say six. One woman had a leg blown off, and a man lost both an arm and a leg. It was also said that one man was decapitated and that his headless trunk is all that could be found of him.

"In the other parts of London where bombs fell the material damage was relatively slight. In fact, the material damage caused in London by this raid was much less than was caused by the raid of September, when the fire in Wood Street, which burned down Rylands's storehouses and several other establishments chiefly given over to manufacture and storage of dry goods, made a heavy total of pecuniary damage.

Damage in Outskirts.

"Several of the outskirts like Croydon, to the south, and Guildford, to the west, were bombed. Six lives lost and about twenty injured was the toll of the Zeppelin raid on Croydon. A great deal of damage was done to property, but in every case it was a private house and no building which was in any way connected with the national or local Government was touched. In the majority of cases also the sufferers belonged to the working classes.

"Hitherto Croydon has been considered by its inhabitants to be on the verge only of the district threatened by aircraft, and the first appearance of a Zeppelin just after 9 o'clock caused the greatest surprise and sensation in the town.

"The reports of distant anti-aircraft guns was the first notification received of the fact that a raid was taking place, and not many minutes after a Zeppelin was seen flying from the direction of London. It was flying at a very great altitude, and, after passing over Selhurst railway station, returned in the direction from which it came. It dropped no bombs in the neighborhood of Croydon, but as it disappeared in the distance the flash of falling projectiles was clearly seen.

Another Zeppelin Appears.

"Soon after 11 o'clock all was quiet, and the people who thronged the streets were beginning to disperse, in the belief that the incident was over, when a second Zeppelin appeared with startling suddenness from the south, only a few minutes after the authorities had been notified that one was expected. It came in sight, steering along the London & Brighton Railway, and its presence was first made known to the general public by the dropping of bombs. Obviously the railway was its objective.

"The sky was cloudless, but so high was the aircraft that only the keenest eyes could discern it, unaided as they were by any searchlights. There were, in fact, no searchlights or anti-aircraft guns in the district. The engines of the machine were, however, distinctly heard.

"The remarkable feature of the attack, and one which testifies to the great speed of the Zeppelin, was the extraordinary rapidity with which the bombs were dropped over an area which extended well over a mile. The first report was heard at 11:20 P. M., and it was well under a minute that the eighth, and last, bomb was dropped. They were dropped in almost a straight line, and the sound was as of a battery of heavy guns being fired off irregularly. Less than sixty seconds served for an attack which spread death and disaster over a continuous line which crossed the railway diagonally, to form as it were the second line of the letter X. The speed of the Zeppelin was roughly estimated at fifty or sixty miles an hour.

"The first bomb wrecked two houses in Eldridge Road and the next practically demolished another in Beechurst Road. Several people were injured in Eldridge Road, and in the house in Beechurst Road two children were killed. Beechurst Road is close to the railway, and a considerable amount of débris was hurled on to the line, although no obstruction was caused.

Many Caught in Debris.

"Three bombs were then dropped in the Oval Road district, where a tremendous amount of damage was done. The worst sufferers were a row of small houses, which received a double shattering in the sense that they were first devastated by a bomb which fell in the street and then by another which fell immediately in the rear of the road. As the result seven houses have been rendered absolutely uninhabitable. The bomb which fell in the street wrecked the gas main, and huge sheets of flame lighted up the whole neighborhood. The brickwork was cracked from ground to roof—every window and door blown out. Furniture was smashed, ceilings were brought down, and every roof was stripped of slates and tiling.

"Many of the occupants were pinned down by débris and were rescued with difficulty, but only two were killed, an elderly lady, who was killed outright, and a young man, who subsequently died in the hospital. A lad had his arm severed at the shoulder, but is progressing satisfactorily. One man who was in the act of opening his door as the explosion occurred was carried through the house on the shattered door and landed half way up the stairs. He is badly bruised, but is recovering in the hospital.

"The next bomb dropped in the playground of the Oval Road Council school and caused so much damage to the school that it had to be closed. Another fell in the vicinity of the Lesley Arms public house in lower Addiscombe Road and wrecked the house of Dr. Thompson and the front of the public house. A house was damaged severely in Lesley Park Road, and the final bomb demolished two houses in Stretton Road, where two persons were killed.

"A curious fact is that quite recently the Board of Guardians refused by a vote of two to one to insure their property against such events. It was stated that very few private people were insuring, and one member delivered a speech which attracted some notice, in which he declared that he did not think the Germans were so bad as to come to Croydon and injure paupers.

"One Zeppelin evidently took a shot at Woolwich Arsenal, in the neighborhood of which three bombs were dropped. It is believed, however, by those who have studied the route indicated by the various places at which bombs fell that the German aeronaut had no clear idea as to where he was, and that the bombs which fell near Woolwich were merely part of a plan of indiscriminate bomb-dropping. It is argued that had he been aware of the fact that he was over Woolwich he would have let off a far larger number of missiles.

"When seen over London the first Zeppelin appeared to be going south, and, according to the first accounts, made off in a southeast direction. Nevertheless, at Hertford, which is practically due north of London, several bombs were dropped just before 10 o'clock, so that it is concluded that this must have been from the same Zeppelin which came over central London. At Hertford one of the bombs fell on the Conservative Club, killing eight members, one of whom was the town surveyor. Hertford is a quiet county town, and is in no sense a military or munitions centre, except in so far as practically every town and village in this part of England is now a place where troops in training are billeted.

"The raid on Folkestone was perhaps the most successful from a military point of view. Several bombs were dropped on the West Hangar Camp, where some of the Canadians are quartered. Fourteen soldiers were killed and thirteen others wounded, while about forty horses were destroyed.

Advance News of Raid.

"I have been told by men upon whom I can reply that information of an impending raid reached the authorities in London between 5 and 6 o'clock; in any case it is believed that between 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening the report that Zeppelins were on the way was general throughout the central district of London. Among the crowds in the street one heard on every side the question, 'Why can't the Government prevent the Zeppelins getting here?'

"In this connection, it is interesting to note that in a reply given to a question in Parliament by Mr. Asquith as to whether adequate steps had been taken for the protection of Westminster Abbey and other national monuments, Mr. Asquith said: 'It is hoped that the service presided over by Sir Percy Scott will deal effectively with any further attempts at the destruction of property.' This was a reply, and presumably was written before Wednesday night's raid. In any case, the Premier's confidence when I left London did not seem to be shared by the general public.

"Sir Percy Scott, it appears, was in Paris on the night of the raid, or at any rate was not in London. He had gone over to Paris some days before, presumably to study the methods by which the French have kept the Zeppelins off their capital.

"There is certain proof that the authorities were aware of the impending raid about 8 o'clock, for trains coming up to London from the country on the Great Eastern were stopped shortly after 8 o'clock, and a few minutes after 9 o'clock Liverpool Street Station, which is the London terminus of the Great Eastern, was closed to the public, and notice given that all trains out were suspended. In some cases travelers who were due in London between 9 and 10 o'clock did not reach there until 2 and 3 in the morning, having had to wait for hours in the darkness at local stations."

Estimates 300 Killed.

Thomas Evarts Adams, who went to London in connection with a contract to supply motor trucks to the War Department, said that a high official in the Admiralty told him 300 persons were killed in the last Zeppelin raid. Other friends in the Government service, Mr. Adams said, placed the figures between 200 and 300.

An American civil engineer, who was a passenger on the St. Paul and a friend of Mr. Adams, said he was in the Gaiety Theatre on the night of the raid, but did not wish to have his name used because he intended to return to London next Saturday.

"I was sitting in the orchestra stalls," he said, "watching the performance of 'Tonight's the Night,' about 9:15 o'clock, when I heard four explosions, which shook the building and blew out every window in the place. The glass fell in showers on the floor and the sashes were blown into the theatre, with a shower of small stones and dust. There was no panic among the audience, but there was no attempt at music. The first act was nearly over, and the chorus girls were changing their costumes for the opening of the second act when the Zeppelins came along. As the stage and dressing rooms look out on to Wellington Street, they got the full benefit of the explosions and saw a great column of flame shoot up into the air high as their windows when a big gas main was struck by a bomb. The girls were so scared that they ran out of the stage door in very light attire, indeed, and when I reached the spot they were attracting more attention than the Zeppelins.

"All the windows were broken in the Lyceum Theatre, opposite, and in the Morning Post Building, which is at Wellington Street and the Strand.

"The hole made in the roadway where the gas main was struck was a large one, and the firemen were some time in getting the blaze under control. The pavement was smashed up in every direction by the force of the concussion, and even the heavy granite curbstones were broken into pieces by the bombs. One bomb fell in Hatton Garden Holborn, where the diamond brokers have their offices, and went clear through into the cellar, but did not explode.

Raiders Return at Midnight.

"The Zeppelins returned at midnight, passing over Woolwich and Greenwich, and again at 2 o'clock in the morning, but did not do any damage. On Thursday night, Oct. 14, three Zeppelins advanced toward London about 10 o'clock, but were driven away by a squadron of aeroplanes."

The civil engineer went on to say that the Government suppressed all details of the damage done by shells fired from the anti-aircraft guns at the Zeppelins.

"The shells generally went wide of the mark," he said, "but had to fall somewhere. The damage to St. Bartholomew's Hospital on Sept. 8 was chiefly caused by shells from the anti-aircraft guns and not by bombs.

"I saw a woman cut in two in Wellington Street by a huge pane of plate glass that was blown out of a building next to the Lyceum Theatre. The big audience in that theatre had a narrow escape. One of the bombs fell so near that it carried away the big cornice-stone and part of the portico, which fell with a loud crash."

Frederick W. Whitridge, President of the Third Avenue Railway, who went away at the end of July to shoot grouse on the Scotch mobrs, returned on the St. Paul in a serious frame of mind, he said, because so many of his friends had been either killed or injured in the war.

He was in London on the night of Oct. 13 and saw the Zeppelin raid, which he described as "damnable blackguardry." Mr. Whitridge said the number killed, so far as he could ascertain from official circles, was 154, including thirty soldiers.

"I was at the Hotel Ritz in Piccadilly," Mr. Whitridge continued, "dining with some friends when I heard the first bomb explode. It fell some distance away near Somerset House, but there was no panic. There were five Zeppelins altogether in the raid, but they had split up and I only saw one. If Germany is trying to terrify the English by dropping bombs in the streets of London and killing women and children they have a lot of work to do. The people walked about the streets looking up at the raiders, which were about 3,000 feet in the air, and were as calm as a collection of oysters.

"I can tell you of one incident that happened." As he spoke his eyes filled with tears. "A dear old gentleman, a friend of mine for many years, was walking down the street when a bomb struck him on the head and blew him to pieces. He had never harmed any living thing in his whole life. It is a blackguard's job this work of the Zeppelins. A disgusting sort of thing which accomplishes nothing and does not terrify anyone."

Lady de Bathe's Experiences.

Lady de Bathe (Lily Langtry) said she was dining in a restaurant close to the Gaiety Theatre, and heard the bombs soon after 9 o'clock. The concussion shattered every pane of glass in the Strand within two blocks from the Savoy Hotel to Somerset House, once the palace of

GERMANS STORM TOWN NEAR DVINSK

GERMAN POST DESTROYED

Russian Landing on Courland Coast Blocked Attempt to Open Gulf of Riga.

CZAR KEEPS UP ATTACKS

LONDON, Oct. 24.—Illoukst, about fifteen miles northwest of Dvinsk, has been taken by General von Hindenburg, according to tonight's official report from Berlin. The German attempt to seize the Dvina and Dvinsk has been carried on here for several weeks with heavy fighting. Hindenburg reports the capture of 3,000 prisoners when the Russian positions were taken by storm.

The persistence with which the Germans are attacking in this region shows the importance they attach to the capture of Dvinsk and Riga and the line of the Dvina River before Winter sets in.

Northwest of Dvinsk our troops ejected the enemy, with great losses, from his positions at Schlossberg, and took Illoukst by storm. The Russians left 18 officers and 2,940 men and 10 machine guns and 1 mine thrower in our hands.

Army of Prince Leopold of Bavaria: There is nothing to report.

Army of General von Linsingen: Repeated attacks on our canal positions south of Wygonowskoie Lake were repulsed. In a counterattack two officers and over 300 men were taken prisoner. West of Czartorysk enemy positions were taken. Near Komarovo many Russian counterattacks were repulsed, and three officers and 458 men were left in our hands.

Street Fighting in Illoukst.

The Russian communication admits the loss of Illoukst, and adds that it was accompanied by fierce fighting in the streets. Southward from Dvinsk the Russians continue their attacks. The text of the communication follows:

On the western front on the right bank of the lower Aa, north of the village of Kalntzem, (southwest of Riga,) we repulsed the Germans.

In an action near the village of Repe, southeast of Riga, the Germans succeeded in effecting its capture. Near the village of Jaughe, north of Repe, we inflicted enormous losses on the enemy by our sustained fire.

On many sectors of the Riga front the artillery fire has been extremely violent on both sides. On the night of the 23d a Zeppelin threw bombs on many parts of the town of Riga. The military buildings were not damaged.

On the Dvinsk front fighting was renewed yesterday in many sectors. The enemy concentrated his artillery fire with particular violence on the region west of Illoukst, after which he launched infantry attacks. The early attacks were repulsed, but toward the close of the day the Germans succeeded in occupying Illoukst, where, in fierce street fighting, they sustained cruel losses. Furious fighting continues in the Illoukst district.

An artillery action of great intensity raged all day long yesterday near the village of Medun, northeast of Novo Alexandrovsk. East of Lake Pruth and south of Lake Dreswiaty we captured several villages by hard fighting. The Germans, who at first succeeded in entering one of these villages, named Krumple, were driven out at the point of the bayonet. Near the village of Dukli, west of Postava, fighting has been resumed, the village changing hands continually.

In the region of Novo Alexinetz the enemy made several furious counterattacks, all of which were stopped by our fire.

On the Galician front, south of Novo Alexinetz, there has been no change.

CZAR WALKS WITHOUT GUARDS

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

RUSSIAN HEADQUARTERS, Oct. 22, (Dispatch to The London Times.)—The Czar personally gives most of his time to military affairs, leading a life of the greatest simplicity and winning ovations from townspeople each time he appears in the streets, which he very frequently does.

He drives every afternoon without guards or escorts and walks about the country talking with the peasants and others. He is almost invariably accompanied by his son and is apparently absolutely devoted to the heir to the throne.

The Czarevitch, whom I have seen repeatedly, impresses one as a healthy, high-spirited boy of great charm and winning personality.

Since being here I am inclined to believe the talk of a separate peace, which was widely circulated after the fall of Warsaw, never had any basis in fact from the beginning of the war.

RUSSIANS DEMOLISH POST ON RIGA GULF

Germans There Were Trying to Remove Obstructions to Fleet Operations.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 24, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The Russians on the Gulf of Riga sent a landing party ashore on Friday to demolish the German post established in the neighborhood of Cape Domesnäs. The landing was successfully accomplished and the German post no longer exists. One officer and forty-two men were found dead on the field after the fight and the remainder were made prisoners. All German apparatus and stores were taken and either destroyed or removed.

Cape Domesnäs commands the entrance to the Gulf of Riga and the presence there of a German post has nothing to do with military plans of the Germans in Courland. The Germans were there solely for purposes connected with naval movements which the Russians have effectually stopped.

During the week following the naval fight in the Gulf of Riga, the Russian Baltic fleet cruised well away to the west, including German territorial waters, apparently looking for a fight, but not making any attacks themselves. They were, in fact, merely covering certain important operations being carried out at the entrance to the Gulf of Riga which required unimpeded effort and celerity.

When these were completed in the course of a week the Gulf of Riga became impracticable for German naval attempts. It still remains so. The Germans, after a very careful examination from aeroplanes and hydroplanes, and even a Zeppelin, seemed to have decided to attempt to remove the obstruction by working parties from shore. With the Russians in command of the Baltic outside and the Gulf of Riga inside, this is a sufficiently hazardous undertaking. The Russians have no mind to see their work undone, hence the landing party and the destruction of the German post at Cape Demesnäs.

On the advance of the German troops the Russian forces which had been landed at Domesnäs returned to their ships.

RUSSIANS EXPECT TO ADVANCE AGAIN

Crisis Safely Past and Army Is Not Broken, Says Representative of General Staff.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 25.—The Times correspondent at Russian Headquarters sends the following statement from a "high authority representing the General Staff" as representing the opinion of the Russian highest command:

"Notwithstanding his obstinacy in fighting and his persistency in carrying out manoeuvres, the enemy is still confronted by an army which fully retains its strength, morale, and its ability not only to offer a stanch and successful resistance, but to assume the offensive and inflict blows, which has been demonstrated by the events of recent days.

"This affords the best proof that the Austro-Germans have failed to destroy or even disorganize our army. Seeing that they failed in that effort during five months which were most favorable to them, it would be impossible for them to repeat the Galician and Vistula exploits now that the successes of the Allies in the west have complicated the strategical position.

"The crisis has passed favorably for us. We have issued safely from the difficult position in the advanced Vistula theatre, where we were enveloped on three sides, and now stand based upon the centre of our empire unexhausted by the war. It is true that there is still much fierce and determined fighting ahead. There may be movements rearward, but there will certainly be advances also.

"Our army lives in the expectation of a general offensive, and looks with full confidence to the armies of its allies."

CONFIDENCE IN ALEXIEFF.

Russians Consider Him Greatest Military Genius.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 25.—A correspondent of The Times with the Russian headquarters telegraphs:

"The situation in regard to the higher command probably is more satisfactory than it has been since the inception of the war. The opinion of virtually the entire Russian Army is that in General Alexieff we have at our head the highest military ability that Russia possesses. He is a quiet, rather shy man with an enormous capacity for work, and in a crisis directs personally the most important movements."

death. Were special consideration shown to women we should open the door wide to such activities on the part of women, who are often more clever in such matters than the cleverest male spy. The man who is in a position of responsibility must do that, but unconcerned about the world's judgment, he must often follow the difficult path of duty.

Mercy for Others Under Discussion.

"If, despite these considerations, it is now being discussed whether mercy shall be shown the rest of those convicted, and if the life which they have forfeited under recognized law is given back to them, you can deduce from that how earnestly we are striving to bring our feelings of humanity in accord with the commandments of stern duty. If the others are pardoned it will be at the expense of the security of our armies, for it is to be feared that new attempts will be made to harm us when it is believed that offenders will go unpunished or suffer only a mild penalty. Only pity for the guilty can lead to such pardons; they will not be an admission that the suspended sentence was too stern."

Dr. Zimmermann said in conclusion that there was not a word of truth in the report that the soldiers at first refused to shoot Miss Cavell, and then aimed so badly that an officer was forced to give the coup de grace.

"The weakness of our enemies' arguments," he said, "is proved by the fact that they do not attempt to combat the justice of the sentence, but cry to influence public opinion against us by false reports of the execution. The official report before me shows that it was carried out according to the prescribed forms, and that death resulted instantly from the first volley, as certified by the physician present."

SAY FRENCH EXECUTED TWO.

AMSTERDAM, Oct 4, (via London.)—The following inspired telegram received from Berlin by way of Brussels, dealing with the execution of Miss Cavell, is published here today:

"As the foreign press is discussing in an incorrect and exaggerated manner the execution of the Englishwoman, Edith Cavell, for war treason, the circumstances in the case, according to the facts, may again be stated.

"It was proved after a long trial of the sentenced persons that they for some months past had been engaged in assisting Belgians of military age to enlist in hostile armies, and in enabling French and English deserters to escape the country. They had many helpers and had organized branches.

"The Governor General had repeatedly issued warnings against such activity, pointing out that severe punishment for such action was unavoidable.

"The guilty persons were sentenced in a public sitting according to the law, based on the provisions of the imperial penal code and the military penal code for war treason and espionage. No special law exists for Belgium, and no so-called 'usage of war' influenced the verdict of the court.

"The accused for the most part admitted their guilt and acknowledged that they were aware of the severe penalties they were risking.

"Miss Cavell was the principal agent in the plot to enlist Belgians for the Allies. With regard to the assertion that she, in the course of her profession, unselfishly tended other persons it may be pointed out that she earned a living by nursing, charging fees within the means of rich people only.

"Women also have been executed in France, as was instanced in March last, when the German woman, Margarete Schmidt, was executed at Nancy, and in May at Bourges, when the German, Otilie Moss, was put to death.

"The English Government may remember the cruelties committed by Lord Kitchener during the Boer war on women and children.

"Our present enemies do not need to protect their armies against a population and a hostile occupied country, nor are they under the necessity of pronouncing or executing such sentences, for they have occupied so little hostile territory."

DUTCH CARTOON THE KAISER

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 25.—The Daily Express reproduces from the Amsterdam Telegraaf a cartoon showing the Kaiser receiving an officer who reports that Miss Cavell has been executed. The Kaiser replies:

"All right! Now bring in the protest of the American Minister."

Dutch Interceded for Miss Cavell.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—The Havas correspondent at The Hague says that, seconding the efforts of the American and Spanish Ministers in favor of Edith Cavell, the British nurse recently executed in Belgium, the Chancellor of the Netherlands Legation tried to obtain respite for her and the others condemned at the same time.

NO HOUSES LEFT IN SOCHACZEW

PEOPLE LIVE IN TRENCHES

Find in Them Good Shelter, Also Timber with Which to Rebuild Their Homes.

JEWS SEND MESSAGES HERE

Patriarchs Ask American Correspondent to Forward News of Their Families to Relatives.

By JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

SOCHACZEW, Russia, Sept. 26.—So much has happened since my Winter visit to the triangle of death that coming back here has been like coming back to the scene of events that happened generations ago, and I feel as if I were visiting some old battlefield that I had only read about. Once the earth trembled under the cannonade and the beautiful guns that work like watches were gliding and clicking and receiving their bath of oil between shots. Now all I can see is an occasional peasant plowing.

I wonder what has become of all the good, friendly fellows with whom I sat by the fires and ate baked potatoes. Some are on the far side of the Polyesye marshes and some have been sent to the Dardanelles and some are back in France and some are dead.

I remember what pride they took in their trenches and "unterstands" and how they thought up quaint, cheerful names for them, and how the men who were clever at clay modeling used to pass the long days of the field sieges in making statues of the Emperor and Hindenburg and in cutting tablets, which they would letter with the words "Villa Bismarck" or "Unser Heim."

Cemeteries for Mementos.

The pathetic denkmals are crumbling now and the sole mementos of the days the good lads spent in the triangle of death are the little cemeteries, inclosed with fences and gates and archways of white birch, where the German dead lie. Often these inclosures are very prettily fashioned, and in the twilight the white bark of the birches from which they are made gives the effect of delicate tracery in marble.

The cemeteries which the Russian soldiers laid out in the triangle of death are more substantially inclosed. The fences and gates are of heavy, squared timbers, and the national passion for bright colors has been gratified by painting both the inclosures and the grave markers in vivid blues, reds, and greens, which are sometimes thrown into bold contrast by masses of black. In the centre of each plot rises a ponderous cross lettered in Russian with words which Mr. Conger translated thus:

> THEY DIED FOR > CZAR, FAITH,
> AND > FATHERLAND.

In the grass at the foot of this cross lie bottles of heavy glass containing curious symbolical designs fashioned out of bits of cardboard and tinsel and representing crosses and ladders leading to heaven, and angels—all a strange, childlike jumble of emblems, of which I could make nothing. They looked like nursery toys.

There are almost no single graves. Many of them hold at least four bodies, and most of them from six to a dozen. The names of the men sleeping in each grave are carefully lettered in black paint on the cross above it, together with the numbers of their regiments. Poor fellows! The triangle of death was their Valley Forge.

Once, in skirting to the east of the triangle, I passed a string of twenty farm wagons that made a loud rattling as they drew near. The deep wicker wagon boxes were loaded to the top with oblong zinc boxes about the size of a loaf of bread. In them thousands of rounds of small ammunition had been delivered to the Russian soldiers intrenched in the triangle. Once unpacked, the zinc boxes had been thrown aside, and now the farmers were gathering them up in the fields and along the roads.

In spite of its appalling waste there is a good deal of salvage in war. Even the abandoned trenches are a benefaction to the poor peasants, for in them they find much heavy timber, which they use in rebuilding their houses, as well as cords of small stuff which serves them for fires.

Using Trenches for Homes.

And here in Sochaczew, the northernmost point of the triangle, several families are living in "unterstands" and connecting trenches, which the Russians dug into the side of a hill that overlooks the lazy Bzura and is crowned by the ruins of an ancient fortress. This fortress commanded the main approach to Warsaw in the days when fortresses meant something. Now its value is merely pictorial and the Russians had not bothered to use its massive remains as a protection against shell fire, but had dug into the slope of the hill behind it. In these caverns women and children are living in reasonable comfort.

Sochaczew used to house 2,000 families. Now Pompeii is a flourishing capital by contrast, for at least sightseers may be found in Pompeii. But Sochaczew, all unroofed, lies staring up at the unanswering sky and suggests a graveyard that has been visited by a tornado. A few bearded, ringleted Jews, clad in long, black cassocks, shuffle through the market place, and a few Jewish women come to the big iron town pump for water, and then disappear down the long vistas of ruin. It is as though the ancient people had once more taken up their dwelling on the ravished slopes of Jerusalem, and were shouldering again the age-long burden of their people.

Not a whole house in Sochaczew is standing. It is worse than Dinant.

Here the Russian line held for six months, then broke, and the Germans entered the town. Finally there came a night late in July when Sochaczew suffered its last bombardment. The Russians opened on it from the plain. It was their farewell, and it cost the Germans a good many men. Then the Russians stole away to the east.

Immediately the Jewish patriarchs who haunted the market place learned that American correspondents were in their midst they gathered around us to tell their troubles. This they did with relish, but without rancor. It was astonishing to discover that two or three of them spoke English pretty fluently, and that nearly all of them had American addresses at their tongues' ends.

Messages for America.

They wanted us to send off letters to their relatives in America when we got back to Berlin. It seemed to me to be hardly less than an obligatory act of brotherhood to undertake these small commissions, so I wrote down all the addresses that were given me and promised to write the letters. The burden of the messages was always the same: "Tell my son that we are alive." "Mutter und Schwester sind in Warschau. Ich und Bruder sind hier, Und sagen sie mal, gnädiger Herr, dass das Geld der Vater hat nicht. Es is nicht gekommen. Aber sagen sie mal dass die Familie ist wohl."

That was about all they would have to say, and brief as the messages were there were always the proofs of honest, loving family feeling in them. The pointed references to the money that had not come were more than excusable, because all that some of these poor people had to live on was an allowance of 5 kopecks (2½ cents) a day from a Polish relief society in Warsaw, and that was uncertain.

Here come more houseless ones who want letters written to son Samuel and son Moses and Uncle Benjamin and Cousin Solomon in America. Most of the addresses given me are in New York—East Fifty-sixth Street and Ludlow Street and the like of that. It is evident that I could sit here the rest of the afternoon taking down names and street numbers. But I must say good-bye, and I do so amid a torrent of thanks and good wishes.

After all, what a little world it is, and what a friendly world. Moses is going his ways in the hot turmoil of New York, and from this war-worn land his kind reach out their hands and cry to him across the sea, "Thy father is here and the family is well."

often only from 50 to 100 meters apart. The ground between had been carefully prepared with very cleverly hidden trenches, which were also vigorously defended.

After Raschkanre had been taken the battle on the mountains to the east was continued to Ranowatz Kladujnowo. The attack began with a thunderous artillery fire. The entire district was cleared of the enemy. There, as well as on other parts of the front, the heavy artillery was carrying on its work of destruction in preparing for the advance of the infantry. The Serbians withstood the assault only for a short time.

To the west of the Morava Valley the right wing of the army of General von Gallwitz also made a great advance. A large section of the mountain district of Podunawalje has been taken. Troops steadily pressing against the enemy forced him to abandon his positions on the heights southeast of Ripanj, which were exposed to the fire of our heavy artillery. The Serbians had withdrawn in this locality to strongly fortified earthworks, extending about the heights in sharp curves. Every cleft and slope of the heights was used for defense, but, strongly as the Serbians had intrenched themselves, our artillery drove them from trench to trench. The losses they suffered were heavy. Many bodies of women were found in the trenches, as Serbian women are taking part in the national defense.

Having acquired the position on Kolubara, troops of the army of General van Koevess, which was co-operating with the Gallwitz army, reached Spepoljewatz. They drove the Serbians to the south, toward the line of the Boljanitsa.

Today about Hill 410 severe fighting took place. From one of the important heights recently captured the progress of the assault could be easily observed. One could see clearly far south of Ripanj the flash of heavy guns and rising clouds of smoke from the exploding shells, and could hear the deep roar of the cannon echoing and re-echoing between the mountains.

Officers with whom I spoke who had just come from the firing line told me that the attack had everywhere met with brilliant success, with comparatively small loss.

GERMAN-AMERICANS OUT AGAINST WILSON

Massachusetts Hyphenated Convention "Firmly Opposed" to His Re-election as President.

WORCESTER, Mass., Oct. 24.—A convention described as representing forty-six organizations of German-Americans, with a membership of 20,000 in this State, today adopted a resolution "firmly opposing" the re-election of President Wilson.

The meeting was called by John Albrecht Walt, Professor of German Literature at Harvard University and State Chairman of the German National Alliance. The purpose was said to be largely to induce Americans of German descent to take a more active interest in political affairs, and no permanent organization was attempted. Announcement had been made previously that the gathering probably would indorse one of the candidates for Governor at the State election next month, but it was decided not to take such a step.

The resolution, which was adopted after considerable debate, follows:

"Resolved, That we, American citizens, assembled at Worcester, do not desire as an organization to indorse any candidate for Governor, but we believe in the desirability of unitedly discussing the question of the Gubernatorial candidates. We are, however, firmly opposed to the re-election of Woodrow Wilson as President of the United States."

GERMAN DIPLOMATS ILL.

BERLIN, Oct. 24, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—Prince von Buelow, the former German Imperial Chancellor, is confined to his room in Cologne as the result of a slight indisposition, according to the Overseas News Agency. The Prince is making a trip to Baden-Baden and expects to resume his journey tomorrow.

Baron von Wangenheim, the German Ambassador to Turkey, who recently returned to Constantinople after an absence caused by failing health, again is seriously ill, says the Overseas News Agency, and will be unable for some time to continue his work. Baron von Wangenheim is generally credited with having brought about the intimate relations existing between Turkey and Germany.

FOOD SUPPLY AMPLE, BERLIN ANNOUNCES

Government Explains That New Regulations Are Merely to Protect the Poor.

HAS RECORD POTATO CROP

And More Grain Than Is Needed for Live Stock—Women Warned Against Food Riots.

From a Staff Correspondent.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 24.—In response to a request from Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor, Arnold Wahnschaffe, Under Secretary of State, has given out a statement regarding Germany's most pressing problem, the food supply.

The Under Secretary's statement follows:

"The hostile press is trying to convince the world that our enemies' plans to starve out Germany are succeeding, that the Germans with all their livestock are hungering, and, therefore, soon will be forced to make peace.

"The only thing about this talk that is true is that our enemies have cut us off from the importation of all the necessaries of live and, in violation of all international law and all the principles of humanity, are trying to starve out our peaceful and working civil population. Thereby Germany's whole economic life has been changed. The old law of supply and demand no longer holds good, as in times of peace. Government regulation must supplant this law at many points in order to spare the poorer population from excessively high prices. As a matter of fact, we have carried over from the last year's harvest into the new so much grain that we are compelled to let 3,000,000 tons of it be fed to the cattle. We can do this because we know the quality and quantity of our new grain crop.

Record Potato Crop.

"We have also this year such a record potato crop as Germany has never known before in her existence. We had figured on having a good crop of 45,000,000 tons of potatoes, but as a matter of fact we have 60,000,000 tons. To this must be added a surplus of potatoes from the enemy's territory which is occupied by us. In this connection we are not even dependent on Germany for feeding our armies.

"The raising of hogs has in the last nine months had an undreamed-of impetus, which will be further increased by the mammoth potato crop.

"The basis of fact which has caused the foreign press to busy itself with our internal affairs is that the Government is now concerned in unifying and regulating by law all those measures which the local authorities and military Governors have singly promulgated. The rich potato crop will be apportioned throughout the empire by the newly organized Imperial Potato Department, with maximum prices, so that the inhabitants of the cities will get a sure and cheap supply of this most important food.

Regulation of Prices.

"Maximum prices also will be fixed for milk with special consideration for children, nursing mothers, and the sick. For all these cases a supply will be assured by means of municipal milk stores and milk cards. Other measures also will be taken to provide a sufficient supply of meat at cheap prices to the poorer population by means of meat cards or otherwise. To achieve this we must be sparing in the use of meat fats and regulate the consumption in such a way that not only bread and potatoes, but all other forms of nourishment can be get by all who need them, and not only by those who can pay.

"Like so many other battles we have won this, too."

Food Rioters Warned.

BERLIN, Oct. 24, (via London.)—Because of the recent housewives' riots, during which the women in their struggles to purchase butter and other similar commodities broke store windows and doors, the authorities have placarded the east side, the poorer section of Berlin, with scarlet-colored warnings, pointing out the penalties for the violation of the Imperial statutes regarding mobs and rioting, and the regulations of martial law under which Berlin is still governed.

The riot law, the posters point out, provides a minimum imprisonment of three months when a mob openly assembles and acts in violence against persons and property. The leaders and instigators are liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for ten years when found guilty of acts of violence against persons or of plundering, destroying, or damaging property in violation of the rules of martial law.

GERMAN FIRE CONTINUOUS.

English Correspondent Says Their Shell Supply Seems Inexhaustible.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON Monday, Oct. 25.—The Daily Chronicle publishes this dispatch from the British headquarters in France:

"There is, I think, a sense of perplexity in the minds of people at home as to the exact meaning of what is happening and of what is failing to happen here on the western front since the great attack of Sept. 25. Exaggerated hopes of the end of trench warfare and of a continuous advance over the German positions have led to inevitable disappointment and despondency, which finds expression in newspapers and speeches and the gossip of clubs.

"Part of that disappointment is justified. If all the elements of luck had been with us; if every part of the plan of operations had been worked out precisely as intended; if we had been able to bring up more force against the enemy's lines at the critical moment, there is no doubt that we should have gained more ground and better ground than is now ours.

"But, whatever hopes we had of doing more, the enemy has been rudely shocked and seriously disturbed in all his plans by our success. It is not a mere journalistic phrase to say that a sense of panic was created in the German command when, on the morning of Sept. 25, the news came to it that Loos had fallen; that our men were sweeping up to Hill 70; that we were forcing our way from Hulluch, and the French were storming the heights of Vimy.

"They were already heavily engaged by the great French offensive in Champagne, and the success of the British at the same time on their right put an enormous strain upon their defensive organization. What hurt them most was that the initiative had fallen into our hands, thereby upsetting all their plans and internal disposition of troops.

"Yet it is well that people at home should look at all the facts without flinching, and realize that, even when no great actions are in progress, the wasting of our troops goes on increasingly, and our very success is a source of a most terrible toll in life.

"The positions we have to maintain along the new lines of that Hill 70 and the chalk pit to the Hohenzollern redoubt are under continual shell fire. The enemy's artillery is formidable, and their supplies of every kind of ammunition apparently inexhaustible."

Belgium Denies Pope Peace Letter.

Saks Evening Clothes

¶ We personally treat the subject more in the light of a live proposition than a dead issue.

¶ Frankly, there is nothing to it but Saks' when it comes to evening clothes—they are the only daylight on the subject, if a man wants to combine propriety with style and economy with both.

AMERICANS FALL AT FRONT.

Three in Latest Casualty List of Canadian Contingent.

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 24.—The names of three members of the Canadian contingent who came from the United States are given in the casualty list issued by the Militia Department here tonight.

Private Frederick Curry of Buffalo of the Fourth Battalion, who was previously reported wounded and missing, is now believed to have died of wounds. His next of kin is Mrs. G. S. Wharton of Buffalo. Private James Thomas Keith, formerly of the Fifty-fifth Battalion, whose next of kin is Annie N. Keith of Auburn, Me., and Private Charles Louvet, formerly of the Thirty-third Battalion, whose next of kin is Charles Louvet of Detroit, Mich., are mentioned as suffering from concussion.

Germany Seeks Fibre Substitutes.

BERLIN, Oct. 10, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—A special commission on new fibres recently appointed by the Minister of War to find substitutes for jute and hemp, which products have been excluded from the German market, has established an experimental station at Hamburg, where it will undertake experiments on native plants, especially nettles and hop vines. Nettles grow in the German forests in great quantities, and a successful method of making them available for fibres would be a great boon to the country.

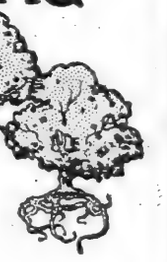
The old story of the Acorn and the Oak with a new twist—



The first Library Bureau unit record desk ever built was of oak! The idea also grew!

It is not a question of material (the L. B. unit record desk is also made of steel), but of purpose. And this desk serves a big purpose in the modern business house.

It is built to assemble card records of all kinds and make them instantly available. Think of it—18,000 to 24,000 cards right under the eye, within arm's reach!

It provides the efficient way of handling a card ledger. Instead of having to stand and grapple with heavy books, the man who keeps your accounts sits at a unit record desk. His work is easier. He does it better, makes fewer mistakes and can handle more accounts.

You don't need a spyglass to see the advantage. Consider what this desk would mean in your office. If you have only a few thousand accounts, you can instal an L. B. card ledger and a unit record desk without disturbing your present office system.

Do this: come to the Library Bureau salesroom and examine the unit record desk. Bring your bookkeeper and get his opinion.

PARIS TALK CLIMAX OF TEN YEARS' WORK

Fifty Telephone Experts Labored Decade on Wireless Apparatus, Says J. J. Carty.

ALL OF THEM AMERICANS

Captain Bullard, Head of Naval Radio Service, Sees Only World-wide Limit to Conversation.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—John J. Carty, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company's chief engineer, who directed the long series of wireless telephone experiments that reached a climax last week in the talk between the American station at Arlington and the Eiffel Tower in Paris, said at the University Club today that this latest scientific achievement was all American.

"The great staff of distinguished scientists and employes of the telephone company who have furnished their brains for the development of the inventions are graduates of American colleges and universities," said Mr. Carty. "We have worked in secret to add this laurel to America's scientific crown. The achievement is American from the ground up. It is rooted in America and will be written on the pages of American history.

"Wireless telephony is the product of American genius, the labor of a staff of American scientists and others. All I did was to direct the work. The men under me did the rest.

"In this wonderful achievement there is glory enough for all. Two of the principal scientists who labored on the problem and whose researches and discoveries were of great value were F. B. Jewett and H. D. Arnold, both young men.

Worked on Problem Ten Years.

"Ten years ago the American Telephone and Telegraph Company decided to test the possibilities of wireless telephony. There are approximately five hundred eminent scientists in the employ of the company. During the last ten years at least fifty of these men have devoted their time largely to the apparatus needed.

"The experiments were conducted for years in laboratories. The Western Electric Company's New York laboratories were the scenes of the primary development. Later, part of the burden fell to the laboratories of the company's plant here in Hawthorne.

"Early last Spring a trial was made by sending a message from the eastern end of Long Island to Wilmington, Del., a distance of 250 miles. This proved successful, and soon afterward towers were erected at Montauk Point, L. I., and on the Island of St. Simon, which is off Florida in the Atlantic. The distance between these two points is 1,000 miles.

"We gathered confidence as the work progressed and made arrangements for receiving stations in Darien, Isthmus of Panama, on Mare Island, near San Francisco, and in Honolulu. Sending apparatus was not placed at these points and has not been established there as yet.

"The sending station has been at Arlington. At all of the stations, however, the work has been under observation for the naval authorities. Messages were sent out from Arlington tower constantly. The first station heard from during this stage was Darien. Several phrases and words were heard distinctly. Darien wirelessed back, repeating the phrases to enable the Arlington men to know of the success of the experiments.

Same Sender for Telegraph and Phone

"A feature of this work was this: The same wire from which wireless telegraph communications are sent out is the wire that sends into the air electrical waves from wireless telephony apparatus. All we had to do then was to send out a message by wireless telephony. It was received at the wireless station by wireless telephony receiving apparatus, which was then disconnected, and wireless telegraph communication immediately established to tell us of our success."

"How would a message be sent by your telephony apparatus?" the interviewer asked.

"There is a common telephone at the base of the wireless towers," Mr. Carty explained. "You enter the building where it's housed and take off the receiver, placing it to your ear. The current that flows through the wire from this telephone has little power. It is not severe enough to more than cause your tongue to tingle, providing power of that strength were applied to your tongue.

"Electrical waves, caused by the sound of the voice as they pass along this wire, reach an electrical apparatus, which is one of the keys to the invention. This weak current is so developed as it passes on and upward that when it runs out along a high tension wire and is shot into the air in the form of electrical waves the voltage would kill a man. This is accomplished by an electrical generator of between fifty and seventy-five horse power; in other words, this apparatus which develops electrical currents that will pass around the globe develops the same horse power as the average automobile driven by a business man.

Waves Go in All Directions.

"The waves are sent out in all directions, and not in a straight line. They reach everywhere. One does not need to know where a ship at sea may be to get into communication with her.

"Messages are received like any ordinary telephone calls. The currents come in contact with a delicate receiving apparatus at the receiving station and are carried into an ordinary telephone receiver.

"The feat of sending a message to Darien was accomplished on Aug. 27 of last year."

Mr. Carty said the tests between Arlington and Paris were being continued regularly, and that since the first announcement of successful transmission further satisfactory reception of speech from Arlington had been reported.

Lloyd Espenscheidt, the company's engineer in Honolulu, who is listening each night at the time of the tests to Paris, reported yesterday that he, together with Rear Admiral Bausch and Lieutenants Lando, Zane, and Green, U. S. N., were able on Friday night's test to hear all the messages from Arlington clearly and distinctly three feet away from the telephone receiver.

BULLARD DESCRIBES METHODS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—In an interview published in The Washington Times today Captain William H. G. Bullard, Superintendent of the Naval Radio Service, described his experiences in talking by wireless telephone from Arlington, Va., to the Eiffel Tower in Paris, and explained the principles upon which the new system of long-distance conversation was based. He saw no reason why the conversations could not be continued around the world. When he was asked how it felt to talk across the Atlantic, Captain Bullard said:

"While I am familiar with the land telephone and wireless telegraphy, I must admit that it thrilled me when these two agencies were connected so as to make conversation from one continent to another possible. It was an epochal demonstration, and I am glad to have the opportunity of talking to a man in Paris. I asked for his name and received it. I passed the time of day with him, and inquired about the weather. The conversation was just as distinct as if we had been talking over a local telephone."

Asked what was the secret of the success of the attempt to establish communication with Paris by means of the human voice, Captain Bullard replied:

"The recent completion of the transcontinental land telephone line gave the telephone engineers the idea, I believe. It is chiefly a question of electric current to create the electric waves to transport the sound.

"It was found the electric current in a wire became too weak to perform its function after a certain distance. Four 'booster' stations were established between New York and San Francisco to boost the current when it began to grow too weak to convey the vibrations on the diaphragms in the telephone. The result was the current never grew inadequate to create the necessary waves.

"The engineers evidently figured that they could save wire expense and other charges by having these booster stations supply the current to wireless stations, which would create the necessary waves on which to superimpose the vibrations made by the human voice on the diaphragm."

"How is the human voice conveyed across the Atlantic Ocean?" he was asked.

"It is not exactly true that the human voice goes across the Atlantic," replied the Captain. "What happens is this: a strong current of electricity creating electric waves is constantly going out from the antenna, consisting of three towers of 600 feet high and wires connected with a 100-kilowatt dynamo; these waves serve as a conveyor for vibrations of the air. Each word, syllable, and letter causes different vibrations of the air, and vibrations also differ according to the pitch, the lowering, or raising of the voice."

"How are these vibrations transmitted?"

"When a person talks into the telephone he causes the diaphragm, or metal disk, to vibrate against carbon granules. This causes corresponding vibrations on the electrically charged wire. The result is that the vibrations are communicated to the end of that wire at the top of the tower, where the vibrations are thrown out on the electric waves which are constantly being discharged. These vibrations caused by the human voice ride the waves as far as the strength of the electric current will carry the waves."

How the Receiver Works.

"How is the message received and how are the vibrations translated into language?"

"When the sending waves begin to weaken the receiver at the other wireless station attracts them to a group of wires. These receiving wires gather in all the vibrations conveyed by the electric waves and analyze all the vibrations, sending them down to the ear of the man with the receiver, who hears exactly the conversation which was released by the original speaker.

"It is easy for any one to understand that the human voice makes sounds which vibrate the air. It should be easy to realize that these vibrations can be transmitted through an electrically charged wire, and, although I do not know with what ease it can be comprehended, it is very simple to convey these same vibrations, violently agitating the atmosphere, over electrical waves maintained by a powerful dynamo. That is how the human voice, or the sound of it, can be heard from Arlington to Paris."

"What do you think of the probabilities of talking around around the world by wireless telephony?" he was asked.

"The human voice can girdle the globe with the same ease that it was heard across the Atlantic Ocean. It is just a question of building wireless towers and maintaining electrical waves in the direction the messages are to be sent."

Sees Only Mechanical Limits Now.

"What is the principle which makes this possible?"

"Neither the land telephone nor wireless telegraphy is new, but the discovery that they can be combined is new and solves the problem of communicating with any part of the universe. The northern, southern, eastern, and western limits to which the human voice, or the sound of it, can be transmitted is the most northerly, southerly, eastern or western wireless tower or land telephone. We know the principles and agencies. All we need is the mechanical apparatus."

"What is the arrangement by which the land telephone is linked with wireless?"

"All that is necessary to complete the operation is to throw a switch in the wireless tower. Then the conversation, instead of stopping at the base of the wireless tower, is sent to the top of the tower, thrown on the electrical waves, and continues to its destination."

Captain Bullard said he and the other naval officers and corps of operators at the Arlington tower were always willing to lend their aid to any inventor whose prospectus of an invention showed that there was a good chance of his contributing something new to the wireless world. He stated that within the near future several other tests similar to the wireless telephony experiments made last week would be conducted at the Arlington tower by different companies and inventors.

PARKER DEFENDS BLOCKADE

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 24.—The Atlanta Constitution has received the following letter from Sir Gilbert Parker in reply to an editorial attacking Great Britain's use of sea power in regard to American trade.

Editor Constitution: In your issue of Sept. 12 an editorial appears commenting upon the pamphlet called "The Spectre of Navalism," by Mr. Julian Corbett, which I sent to you for your consideration. I have read the article carefully, and it appears to me that you have mistaken Mr. Corbett's interpretation of the words, "the freedom of the seas."

In Mr. Corbett's view, the freedom of the seas does not mean that in time of war there shall be no blockade, no contraband, and that ships of all belligerent and of all neutral nations shall pass to and fro on the ocean as in time of peace. If that means the freedom of the seas in your view, or in the view of many Americans, I am afraid it would not be received by your executive Government as one possible to put into practice.

The only weapon which the United States possesses to preserve her honor in peace and war, apart from the moral influence of her people, is her navy. Would the United States, if she went to war tomorrow with Spain or any other country—and I only quote Spain because there was a Spanish war not so long ago—agree to that freedom of the seas which would make her navy powerless to exercise one of its most important functions—to lay its hand on material which would increase the offensive and defensive power of the enemy?

Her navy is her only available weapon, as she has not an army for expeditionary purposes. When she desires to enforce her power in Mexico she does it with battleships. Would she, at war with any nation on earth, deprive herself of those powerful weapons, which hasten the end of a war, blockade, and contraband?

The freedom of the seas preached by Germany is advocated to protect her from her own naval weakness. England's natural weapon as an island power is her navy. America's natural weapon as a power in an insular position is a navy. Is either prepared to forego that agency, which the United States so freely used in her civil war? It would be yielding to nations with great land forces that which is the effective offset to such power. Naval power in blockading merely does at sea what the siege of a city does on land.

TO PUT WAR VICTIMS ON AMERICAN FARMS

Society Proposes to Furnish Ten-Acre Tracts to Those Fitted to Till Them.

4,600 ACRES OF LAND GIVEN

Families of Which Women Are the Heads Sought—No Place for the Helpless Wounded.

The task of providing homes in the New World for European families made destitute by the war and who have some knowledge of agriculture is being undertaken by the Friends of Childhood, an international society founded by Miss Caroline Dawes Appleton of the Holland House upon her return from Europe about a year ago.

The colonization here of Scottish, Belgian, Italian, French, and Montenegrin families and those of other nations skilled in agriculture would not only give food and hope to many needy persons, but would also benefit the regions in which they settled, by the introduction of Old-World farming methods, those associated with the society believe.

About 4,600 acres of land in the South have been given to the society, and many other gifts of land are expected. These tracts are to be sub-divided into five- and ten-acre plots, each equipped with a comfortably furnished house, a mule, a cow, chickens, and farming implements. Plans for bringing the needy families here and supplying funds to give them a start are under way.

The colonization project was discussed yesterday at the Holland House at a Scottish tea concert, the first of a series of affairs to be given this Winter. Scottish songs were sung, the bagpipe furnished music with the tea, and Scotch shortbread, and the program ended with "Scots Wha' Hae" and "The Star-Spangled Banner." J. C. Haig of the Royal Scots Committee, Edinburgh, made the chief address. Miss Marion London, Bradley Knoche, and James McG. Brown sang.

Among those who attended were Mrs. J. Elliott Langstaff, founder of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the British Empire in the United States; Miss Adelaide Johnson, sculptress; Mrs. Belle Armstrong Whitney, creator of the fashion show which bears her name; Miss Georgiana Brown, educator and charity worker; Mrs. Enoch R. Vedder of Capri, Mrs. Walter A. Gallagan, officer in several women's clubs; the Rev. Dr. P. J. Cavanagh, and Miss Florence Schofield of Paris, who made an address on conditions in France.

The largest tract of land thus far obtained by the Friends of Childhood for its colonization project is in North Carolina, near Wilmington. It will make seventy farms of ten acres each. The other large settlement is to be near Waldensia, Tenn., where there are 390 farms of ten acres each.

The families to whom this land is to be allotted are to be chosen by agents of the society in Europe. Transportation is being arranged from Europe and plans for transportation in this country are nearly completed. M. V. Richards, Industrial Commissioner of the Southern Railroad; Hugh McRae, a North Carolina banker, and S. Davies Warfield of the Southern Development Company are among those who have shown interest in the work and have conferred with representatives of the Friends of Childhood concerning details. Theodore Marburg, former Ambassador to Belgium, also favors the plan.

Families of which women are the heads are those chiefly sough by the agents of the society, for the idea is to enable them to support themselves until the children are educated. Men who have been wounded are not to be brought here unless they are able to perform or direct agricultural tasks. The farms are to be given over to their use, with the privilege of buying whenever they are able.

Among those who have contributed to the fund are Charles G. Dawes of Chicago, Lady Irma Brukevitch of London, Mrs. Adamson Stewart Appleton of Paris, Captain Bora Michkovitch of Nish, Serbia; Albert Edward Dunn, M. P.; Mrs. Henry Villard, Mrs. Walter H. Gahagan, Francis H. Bergen, Francis C. Bishop, T. B. Regan, J. Charlton Rivers, Edward H. Crandall, and Mrs. John Milholland.

URGES VIVIANI TO ACT.

Temps Wants Him to Remove "Impedimenta" from the Cabinet.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—"The Duty of the Government" is the heading of a leading article printed today in the Temps, which discusses the situation confronting the Cabinet brought on by the Balkan policy and aggravated by the resignation of Théophile Delcassé from the Foreign Ministry.

The Temps says the hour for manly resolutions has struck. It admits that a change in the Ministry at this time would be a grave eventuality, but declares that a feeling of uneasiness being apparent, it would be better frankly to remedy it, and that it would be puerile to deny its existence.

Premier Viviani, the newspaper contends, must assume sufficient authority to relieve the Cabinet of recognized impedimenta and to harmonize the combination in the Ministry. In view of the political situation in the Balkans, which, the Temps says, it full of traps, it is necessary to foresee all possible eventualities, disagreeable as they may be.

The Temps says the Government's responsibility is great. The important thing is to act, not to know who will act. The newspaper concludes:

"Is the Government of today capable of action with the promptitude and vigor demanded? We earnestly hope so. If not, we await with confidence the Government of tomorrow."

To Honor Ogden's Memory.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 24.—The memory of Robert Curtis Ogden, who died on Aug. 6, 1913, is to receive tribute from his friends at a large public meeting to be held in Richmond on Nov. 26, when Mr. Ogden's early associates will commemorate his devotion to the cause of education in the Southern States, and will describe the growth of the work he started. The meeting is part of a plan proposed by ex-President William H. Taft, Ambassador Walter H. Page, Commissioner of Education P. P. Claxton, and seventy-five other leaders in national and educational affairs to erect a memorial to Mr. Ogden in the form of an auditorium building at Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.

tion. The army of General von Gallwits has taken the southern bank of the Jasenica River near Palanka. Further east it has reached the Rakinac line north of Petrovac-Ranowac, in spite of very violent resistance on the part of the Serbians. The number of Serbians buried by our troops testifies to the heaviness of the losses suffered by the enemy.

The Danube has been crossed near Orsova, and Slava Besija Hill won. Three officers and seventy men were taken prisoner.

The army of General Boyadjieff has captured a Russian munitions store near Prahovo on the Danube, northwest of Negotin, and has occupied the western bank of the Timok River. Of the other sections of the Bulgarian Army there is nothing to report.

Vienna Tells of Successes.

An Austrian War Office communication dated Saturday says:

Southeastern War Theatre: The army of General Koevess yesterday broke into the Kosmaj position, west of the road from Belgrade to Arandielovatz, which was consolidated as a fortress. The German forces advancing through the Morava Valley ejected the enemy from the heights north of the lower Jasenica. Near Orsova the Austro-Hungarian and German forces captured mountain positions on the southern bank of the Danube and Fort Elizabeth, near Tekia.

The Serbians on many points of their shaken front, in dissolution and dispersed, are retreating everywhere in a southerly direction, the Allies pursuing. Near Vishegrad Austro-Hungarian troops dislodged the enemy from the heights east of the Drina. The Bulgarian First Army's advance has made further progress near Negotin and on the middle Timok and southeast of Kniashevats.

In the Timok Valley our troops have reached the left bank of the Timok River, between Kniazevac and Zajecar. Fighting continues for possession of the town of Kniazevac.

In Macedonia our troops after a violent battle have captured the greater part of the town of Uskub. Fighting here continues.

On the other fronts our troops continue on the offensive. There has been no change.

A subsequent dispatch from Sofia, dated Saturday, announces the capture of Uskub has been completed.

The following official statement, delayed in transmission, given out on Friday by the Serbian War Office, shows how fiercely the Serbians are contesting the advance of their foes:

The enemy [Bulgarian] on Monday night was repulsed with heavy losses from Vrschka Tohuka. Prisoners state that troops which previously advanced to attack this place suffered such losses that they had to be replaced. Enemy detachments which crossed the Timok at several places near Rogilevatz and Bregovo were repulsed Monday from the positions which they occupied. An enemy column descended the Krallevo Selo, but after a fight was driven back to the frontier.

East of Kniasyvatz our troops recaptured positions in the line Matchak-Orsova - Cmava - Gradinska - Tchuka. Two attacks desperately made by the enemy on Turuche Livade, on the right bank of the Nichava, were repulsed. By a counterattack an enemy detachment was put to flight at Vlaohka Planina, on the left bank of the Nichava. Near Vlassinsko and Blato the enemy made vigorous attacks, which were repulsed.

In new regions actions are proceeding on the positions at Negoritchane and Veles. There were actions on the northern front in the direction of the Morava Tuesday. Our troops held the positions.

In the direction of Belgrade fighting is proceeding north of Ralja. There is no change elsewhere on this front.

Another official communication issued by the War Office Friday says:

On the 21st fighting continued along the northern front in the direction of the Morava. Our troops hold positions on the right bank of the Mlawa River. Near Startcheva our troops drove the enemy out of their lines. In the Belgrade section the fighting continues without change of position.

On the eastern front at Kniasyevatz, the enemy, disposing of large forces, attacked again our position at Natchak, and carried it after a determined bomb attack, but with a counterattack we won back the position.

On the right bank of the Memchava our troops recaptured a position at Tourska Livrade and Batonchan which the enemy had taken in the morning. On the left bank of the Michava fighting is going on at Vlatchkoi and Planina, and also south of Vlassina, Blata, and near Kumanovo, where the enemy has concentrated important forces. Toward Krivolak the battle has been joined by the French troops, who are fighting with us.

Turkish Troops Aiding Bulgars.

Bulgarian forces on the Aegean shore have left for the Northern Serbian front, according to a message to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Athens. These troops have been replaced by five Turkish divisions, which are now charged with the defense of the Bulgarian coast. Reliable information, the dispatch adds, places the strength of the Bulgarian forces on the Serbian front at seven divisions, of which four are operating in the region of Pirot and Kniazevac.

A dispatch to Reuter's from Athens says that at the request of the Bulgarian authorities the foreign Consuls have left Dedeaghatch for the interior.

WEATHER HINDERS ADVANCE.

But Berlin Is Certain That Allies Are Too Late to Save Serbia.

BERLIN, Oct. 24, (via London.)—The Serbian campaign, according to all information reaching Berlin, is progressing favorably for the Central Powers, although the operations are retarded by bad weather, and, like the section south of Belgrade, by the exceedingly difficult topography of the country.

The German, Austrian, and Bulgarian forces are reported to be gaining ground everywhere without interruption. The mention in Saturday's statement from the German General Staff that the troops of the Central Allies had crossed the Drina River near Vishegrad shows that the Teutonic forces are operating on Serbia's western front, a fact which heretofore had not been suspected. This almost completes the circle of the armies carrying out a general corral against the Serbian forces.

While all reports indicate that the Serbians are fighting with splendid courage and show great skill in utilising the irregularities of the country's topography, still, it is stated, they are unable to cope with the superior numbers and stronger artillery of the forces operating against them on all the fronts.

While the plans of the Entente Allies are being closely watched here, it is generally assumed that they are too late to save Serbia. Also the belief is expressed that Bulgaria is throwing its greatest strength into the Vardar Valley in order to prevent a junction of the Entente forces with the Serbian troops, and that the Bulgarians are amply able to hold the valley against any force which the Entente Allies will be able to bring into action before the collapse of Serbia.

Dr. Stephen Steiner, the Lokal Anzeiger's correspondent at German Southeastern Headquarters, reports that he finds the Serbians unable to summon the moral force to withstand the fearful effect of the German and Austrian artillery. He states that the Serbian artillery is much inferior to that of the Teutons and is of insufficient quantity. The successes of the troops of the Central Allies, he says, thus far have been achieved by splendid artillery preparation for the attacks, and their losses in men have been correspondingly small.

The Serbians are following the tactics of the Russians in the latter's retreat in Poland and are carefully husbanding their artillery, says Dr. Steiner. Their guns are placed in positions well behind the fighting lines and are retired quickly at critical junctures, leaving the infantry to bear the brunt of the attack.

NO BULGAR-GREEK ENTENTE.

Denial That Greeks Are Occupying Doiran and Gievgeli.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—An authorized statement made public in Athens today, says the Havas News Agency, denies categorically the reports current in the Balkan capitals that an understanding exists between Greece and Bulgaria.

ATHENS, Oct. 24. — A semi-official note to the press denies categorically reports in Austro-Hungarian newspapers that Greece is occupying Doiran and Gievgeli to protect Saloniki, or is occupying any other portion of Serbian territory.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—A semi-official statement, issued at Athens and telegraphed here, denies "the German report that the Greek representative at Petrograd had a long conversation with the head of the Balkan Affairs Department, and that the latter used threatening language and spoke of a blockade of the coasts of Greece by the Entente powers."

TELLS OF FLEET'S ACTIVITY.

Russian Report of Bombardment of Bulgar Coast.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 24.—The Russian Naval Department has issued the following communication:

On the afternoon of Oct. 21 a squadron of British and French warships and the Russian cruiser Askold bombarded the Bulgarian coast, directing their fire on observation posts for batteries that had recently been erected, and the port of Dedeaghatch. Their fire appears to have caused great destruction in the ammunition stores, military magazines, and other buildings. The station and railway bridge were also bombarded. The enemy did not reply.

On the same day a detachment of the allied fleet, led by the Askold, bombarded the military establishments at Porto Lagos.

ITALIANS GETTING ANXIOUS.

Press Urges the Government to Hurry to Serbia's Aid.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 21.—Slight signs showing that the Balkan war tends toward Albania rather than to South Serbia gives Italy a more direct interest in the conflict; therefore the press is demanding what the Government intends to do, and urging it not to lose precious time in discussion.

The papers frankly acknowledge that the first phase of the Serbian war is lost to the Allies, but consider that if the latter with Italy move quickly they may make good this loss.

CYPRUS A GIFT TO GREECE?

Mark of Appreciation for Services Rendered, London Paper Says.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 25.—Although it has been generally taken for granted here that the British offer of the island of Cyprus to Greece was made on condition that Greece enter the war on the side of the Entente Allies, The Daily Mail's Athens correspondent declares, no conditions were attached to the transfer.

"It has been recognized in political circles," he adds, "ever since Great Britain acquired Cyprus, that it would be ultimately handed over to Greece. Moreover, the Allies already owe Greece far more than that for services rendered. The present time, in fact, was evidently considered an opportune moment for expressing in a substantial manner the Allies' thanks to Greece for the great facilities she afforded the Allies and putting free passage though Saloniki at their disposal. The gift is also handed over as a slight earnest of future cessions if Greece actively joins the Allies."

KILLINGS HERE INCREASE

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich., Oct. 24.—Seven persons, six of them members of one family, were killed outright this afternoon at Fraser, five miles from here, when a fast Grand Trunk passenger train struck an automobile driven by William Stoldt. The dead were flung along the tracks for a quarter of a mile. Stoldt, mortally hurt, was taken to a local hospital.

The dead are Mrs. Rachel Stoldt, Avon Township, 44 years old, wife of William Stoldt; their children, Pearl, 17 years; Esther, 15; Hazel, 12; Mabel, 10, and Martha, 6 years old, and Miss Minnie Engel, 47 years old, sister of Mrs. Stoldt.

The train which hit the auto is not scheduled to stop at Fraser. Two witnesses say that the whistle was sounded for the crossing. Stoldt, if he saw the train coming, was probably under the impression that it would stop at the station and that he was in no danger in making the crossing, or he may not have noticed the train's approach until he emerged from behind a house and grove of trees which obstructed the view of the tracks. At any rate, he drove the auto on the tracks directly in the path of the locomotive. The train was a few minutes behind time, and was going at a high rate of speed. The automobile was hit squarely in the middle. The front wheels were hurled through the fence of the cattle guard. The rear wheels were carried nearly a quarter of a mile and flung beside the tracks. Other parts of the auto were found in a field several hundred feet from the right of way.

THREE DIE IN AUTO UPSET.

Car Skids on a Railroad Crossing and Hits a Tree.

WICKFORD, R. I., Oct. 24.—Three persons were killed and two were seriously hurt tonight when a touring car in which they were riding skidded in going over a railroad crossing at high speed, struck a tree, and then overturned. The dead are John Priestly and Mrs. Rose Ann Greenwood of Pawtucket and Mrs. John Whitney of Providence. The severely injured are Mrs. Annie Fowler, Pawtucket, who may die of her injuries, and Whitworth Greenwood of Pawtucket. The driver of the automobile, Edward Fowler of Pawtucket, escaped with minor injuries. The members of the party had been to Narragansett Pier for the day, and were on their way home when the accident occurred.

BOY KILLED; BROTHERS HURT

Auto Runs Down Children, Hand in Hand, in Fifth Avenue.

Three boys walking across Fifth Avenue at Twenty-sixth Street late yesterday, hand in hand, were struck by an automobile. They were taken to Bellevue Hospital, suffering from possible broken bones and other serious injuries. The three brothers were Julius Gaug, 11 years old; Vincent, 9 years old, and Matthew, 15 years old, of 314 East Twenty-sixth Street. Julius died at 8 P. M.

The children had been to a moving picture show and were returning home. Crossing Fifth Avenue they became confused at the traffic and stepped backward into the path of an automobile, owned by John and Felix Brogolia, 1404 Fourteenth Avenue, Brooklyn, and driven by George Morton, 174 West Seventy-fourth Street. The children were thrown fifteen feet. Patrolman Parke of the West Thirtieth Street Station carried them to the automobile and hurried them to Bellevue Hospital.

Thrown Against Seat in Broadway Collision.

Louis A. Breglia of 600 West 178th Street, is in Washington Heights Hospital, suffering from a concussion of the brain, contusions of the head and face, and shock, as a result of an automobile collision yesterday afternon at Broadway and 169th Street.

Mr. Breglia was riding with his son, Dr. John A. Breglia, in St. Nicholas Avenue. When they reached 169th Street Dr. Breglia's sight of Broadway was obscurbed by a machine coming porth. At the same time a third automobile, driven by Helmuth Kranich of 314 West Eighty-first Street came west along 169th Street and hit the Breglia car.

Dr. Breglia was thrown out of the car and escaped serious injury, but his father was thrown against the seat and struck on his head. Mrs. Kranich, who was riding with her husband, was cut about the fact from flying glass and suffered from shock. Both cars were damaged.

AUTO KILLINGS INCREASE.

Lax Law Enforcement Partly Responsible, Highway Protectors Say.

In a statement issued yesterday, authorized by George P. Le Brun, Secretary of the Legislation League for the Conservation of Human Life, and Edward S. Cornell, Secretary of the National Highways Protective Society, attention is called to the fact that 142 persons have been killed by automobiles in New York City in the first nine months of this year, a considerable increase over the 128 automobile killings of last year. The reason for the increase, the statement says, is the failure of the District Attorney's office to prosecute "reckless automobile drivers."

"For the 142 homicides," the statement says, "not an indictment has been found; not one guilty driver has been punished. Of the 142 homicides only twelve have been presented to the Grand Jury, and six of the twelve were dismissed. Yet there were twenty-two cases among the 142 in which Coroners' juries found the drivers guilty of negligence. Many of these killings were manslaughter in the second degree, according to Section 1,052 of the penal law. Similar cases in New Jersey, Connecticut, and Illinois have resulted in indictments for manslaughter and severe jail sentences, and in those States automobile fatalities are not so many as here."

Appended to the statement is a list of seventeen killings in which Coroners' juries found the drivers guilty of negligence. The list follows:

CATHERINE MAHER, 60 years old, struck on Dec. 25, 1914, at Second Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street. Died on Jan. 6, 1915. Automobile driven by Samuel Brandwein.

PATRICK LENNY, 30 years old, killed on Jan. 14, at Fifty-seventh Street and Tenth Avenue. Automobile truck driven by Arthur J. Stahl.

RAPHAEL JACOBS, 12 years old, killed on Jan. 13, at First Avenue and 121st Street. Automobile truck driven by Morris Dichel.

MIKE LIFRIERI, 8 years old, killed on Jan. 19, at 109th Street, near First Avenue. Automobile driven by Joseph Naples.

JOHN HURLEY, 10 years old, killed on Jan. 15, in front of 1,822 First Avenue. Automobile truck driven by Daniel F. Keough.

EDWARD JONES, 9 years old, killed on Feb. 10, at Fifth Avenue and Sixty-third Street. Automobile driven by Fred Veach.

JOHN REDLING, 10 years old, killed on Feb. 20, in Eighty-sixth Street, near First Avenue. Automobile driven by Salvatore Ventre.

GEORGE H. HARRIS, 52 years old, struck on Jan. 27, at 124th Street and Amsterdam Avenue. Died on March 16. Automobile driven by Louis Gruter.

SAIDIE MICHAELSON, 12 years old, killed on April 8, at 110th Street and Lenox Avenue. Taxicab driven by Charles H. Richter.

WILLIAM GILMORE, 3 years old, killed on April 19, in front of 144 West Fifty-fifth Street. Automobile driven by August Rohr.

VERADINO DONDICCO, 65 years old, killed on April 12, at Canal and Mott Streets. Automobile driven by Joseph King.

WEDELIN BOLLWEEER, 55 years old, struck on April 27, in Forty-second Street, near First Avenue. Died on May 1. Automobile driven by William L. Oretta.

GEORGE CHARLES, 49 years old, struck on May 5, at Forty-first Street and Eighth Avenue. Died on May 18. Automobile truck driven by Fred Struth.

CHARLES J. WALCOTT, 61 years old, killed on May 10, at Fifty-third Street and Eighth Avenue. Automobile in tow of car driven by Charles Crow.

JOHN DOYLE, 33 years old, killed on May 24, at Delancey Street and the Bowery. Automobile truck driven by Patrick Manning.

JAMES DONOHUE, 15 years old, killed on June 3, in Central Park West, near Sixty-third Street. Automobile driven by Elliott Kohn.

The statement estimates that, if the present rate of killings continues to the end of the year, automobiles will have killed more than 200 persons in Manhattan in 1915.

FORM SUGAR-TEST SQUAD.

Dr. Taylor and U. of P. Students Trying to Disprove Diabetes Theory.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 24.—A Professor of Physiological Chemistry and sixty-five first-year medical students of the University of Pennsylvania are placing themselves on a sugar diet and undergoing blood tests in order to disprove the present "sugar" test for diabetes and pituitary gland ailments. These experiments, which are being conducted by Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor, Benjamin Rush, Professor of Physiological Chemistry in the University Medical School, are the result of numerous unnecessary operations for pituitary gland diseases in the University Hospital. In many instances an operation revealed the total absence of any trace of diabetes or pituitary gland afflictions, in spite of the almost certain indications of the sugar test.

Induced by a desire to determine more accurately the relative amounts of sugar that may be given to normal and diseased persons without a subsequent manifestation in the blood, Dr. Taylor began conducting experiments. The first of these were upon dogs whose pituitary glands were injured in such a way as to make the animals sluggish. Certain amounts of sugar were then fed to the dogs, but, despite the fact that they were known to be diseased and ought therefore to have exhibited traces of sugar in the blood, blood tests revealed no traces of sugar.

Dr. Taylor then began experimenting upon himself, consuming from seven to ten ounces of sugar a day, making frequent blood tests to discover just what amount of sugar it was necessary to consume before the blood would reveal its presence. Last week he told a class of first-year medical students in physiological chemistry of his experiments and asked for volunteers from the class for personal experimentation. There were eighty-four men in the class, and about sixty-five promised to undergo the sugar tests. They are now being placed on a sugar diet of from seven to nine ounces.

WILSON ATTENDS CHURCH

Accompanied by His Fiancee—Mrs. Galt Engages a Social Secretary.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—President Wilson, for the first time since the announcement of his approaching marriage, occupied his pew at the Central Presbyterian Church this morning. He was accompanied by his fiancée, Mrs. Galt, and his eldest daughter, Miss Margaret Wilson. This afternoon was devoted to a long motor ride. Mrs. Galt later joined the family dinner party at the White House.

Mrs. Galt and different members of her family lunch or dine daily at the White House, while on several occasions each week the President is her guest at her home. Miss Helen Woodrow Bones usually accompanies the President when he dines with Mrs. Galt, who is using these occasions to present her relatives and close personal friends. The dinner company rarely numbers more than eight, frequently only six.

Mrs. Galt has engaged as her social secretary Miss Edith Benham, daughter of the late Rear Admiral A. E. K. Benham, U. S. N. Miss Benham took up the work of social secretary shortly after the death of her father. The former Ambassador from Russia and Baroness Rosen, the former Ambassador from Great Britain and Mrs. Bryce, Mrs. Theodore P. Shonts and her daughters, and the late Mrs. Duncan McKim have been patrons of Miss Benham. The early marriage of Miss Isabella Hagner, whose resignation from the post of social secretary at the White House is expected to take effect this week, places Miss Benham in what her friends believe to be the line of succession to this coveted post.

MELLEN CONTINUES HIS EVIDENCE TODAY

DIVIDED UP NEW ENGLAND

"Corsair" Agreement Was Made on Yacht of the Late J. P. Morgan.

Charles S. Mellen, ex-President of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, will once more be on the stand today in the trial of the Government's prosecution of William Rockefeller, Lewis Cass Ledyard, and nine other New Haven Directors in the Federal District Court on the charge of having violated the Sherman law in trying to monopolize the transportation facilities of New England. He has been testifying concerning what happened while he was the Second Vice President of the road, and it will probably take him two more days to complete that part of his evidence.

The most important matter that he has as yet talked about was the capture of the New York & New England Railroad by the New Haven, when it seemed likely that it would become part of the New York Central system. The main outlines of that have already been put in evidence, but the Government contends it will show more clearly yet the aims and methods of the defendants.

Mr. Mellen will be asked about the first Corsair agreement, which was so called because it was drawn up on the yacht Corsair, belonging to the late J. P. Morgan. This was the result of the competition of the New York Central and the New Haven, and was an agreement between them as to the division of business, so as to prevent the fights which had up to that time characterized the railroad business of New England.

An example of this was told late Friday by Mr. Mellen. The New Haven had formed an arrangement with the President of the Connecticut River Railroad, an important stretch of track from the strategic point of view, for the purchase of its control. Mr. Mellen was actually sent up to take possession of it. In a week, however, he was ordered to return to New Haven and hand the railroad back. The action of the President had been overturned by the stockholders, and the sale of the line to the New Haven was canceled. The result was that the Connecticut River Railroad became part of the Boston & Maine system, and did not pass into the control of the New Haven until that company acquired the Boston & Maine.

TO ROUND UP ARMY PLAN.

President Will See Chairman Hay Today and Chamberlain Later.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—Final work on the army plan which will be presented to Congress at the next session will be done this week. Secretary Garrison's program, which has been approved in its general outlines by President Wilson, will be discussed by the President tomorrow with Representative Hay, Chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, and probably later in the week with Senator Chamberlain, Chairman of the Senate committee.

Chairman Hay had his first conference with the President soon after the program was completed by Secretary Garrison, and it was understood that he had not approved all of its details. He has been working on the subject since, and is understood to be ready to tell the President just what he thinks should be done.

Senator Chamberlain, in published interviews, has approved the main details of Secretary Garrison's plan, and is committed to spending more money for the army than before. He is now on his way East from his home in Oregon, and has been invited by the President to confer with him as soon as he arrives.

44 SEIZED IN GAMBLING RAID.

Two Detectives Pen Score of Men in Corner of a Room.

Detectives Gaffney and Fansulo, dressed like tramps, were in Williamsburg before daylight yesterday morning looking for an Italian wanted for a stabbing affray. In the back room of an Italian saloon at 3 Withers Street they heard suspicious noises from an adjoining apartment. Forcing their way in, they found forty men playing cards, with a good deal of money on the tables.

Many of the men got out through the windows as the detectives drew their revolvers and displayed their shields; but twenty men were detained in a corner until the reserves from the Bedford Avenue Station took them away.

From one of the men the police got information which led them to raid a restaurant at 43 Manhattan Avenue, where twenty-four more men were arrested on a gambling charge.

All the men were arraigned yesterday morning before Magistrate Dodd in the Manhattan Avenue Court and held for a hearing this morning. None of them could furnish bail, and the Bedford Avenue Station in consequence was crowded last night.

Teacher Dies of Injuries.

Miss Sarah Flynn, 51 years old, a teacher, of 110 West 123d Street, died yesterday in St. Luke's Hospital of injuries inflicted last Wednesday night at 120th Street and Broadway, where she was knocked down by a taxicab owned and operated by Albert J. Ellis of 32 Erickson Avenue, East Elmhurst, L. I. Ellis was arrested and charged with felonious assault.

ARREST TWO AFTER LONG SUBWAY CHASE

FAKE "ROLL" WAS THE BAIT

Police Say Prisoners Preyed on Drunken Men in Early Morning Hours.

After a nine-block chase in the subway, during which several shots were fired, John Raymond of 15 West Eighty-ninth Street was arrested shortly after 4 o'clock yesterday morning by subway detectives, and, with Harry Brown of 1,655 Madison Avenue, was held under $2,500 bail on a charge of stealing a roll of bills from one of the detectives while he was feigning sleep. According to the subway detectives, the men are members of a band which preys on drunken persons.

The alleged robbery occurred on the platform of the 125th Street and Lenox Avenue subway station, where Stephen J. Sullivan, an Interborough detective, was lying on a bench. Sullivan and Albert Buchanan, another detective, had gone there as a result of many complaints of robbery in the subway from persons who admitted they had been drinking. While Sullivan pretended to be asleep Buchanan waited at the other end of the platform. Sullivan had in his pockets a roll of stage money, with a real one-dollar bill, marked, on the outside.

According to the story the detectives told at the West 123d Street Station before Magistrate Appleton, the prisoner known as Brown came to the station about 4 o'clock and went through the detective's pockets. He took out the roll of bills, Sullivan asserts, and passed it to Raymond.

Sullivan seized Brown and called for help from Buchanan. The other detective meanwhile had concealed himself in the ticket booth, and when he started to Sullivan's assistance he was delayed by trouble with the lock. Before he reached Sullivan Raymond had jumped on to the tracks and was running downtown.

Buchanan followed, and, drawing his revolver, ordered Raymond to stop and fired six shots, but Raymond ran on. When he reached the 116th Street Station he sprang upon the platform and started for the street, with Buchanan 75 yards in the rear.

As soon as Sullivan realized that Raymond was starting down the tracks he ran to the ticket booth and, still holding Brown a prisoner, telephoned to the 116th Street station. He got into communication with the ticket agent just as Raymond got on the platform. The agent ran out, but Raymond knocked him down and sprang up the stairs. Patrolman Kunkel was standing in the street, but he thought that Raymond was merely a man in a hurry until he heard the ticket agent's cry of "Stop thief!"

Kunkel gave chase and caught Raymond at 116th Street and Fifth Avenue. The roll of bills was not in his pockets, and it was not found in Brown's pockets. Later it was picked up on the platform of the 125th Street station near the place where the robbery occurred.

Both men were arraigned before Magistrate Appleton in Harlem Court and held for the Grand Jury on charges of grand larceny. According to the police, both men have criminal records and Raymond was only recently released from Elmira, where he was sent for picking pockets. Both men denied they had robbed Sullivan.

APPEAL TO THE PRESIDENT.

Merchants' Association Says Hudson River Is Polluted.

The Merchants' Association has appealed to President Wilson for assistance through the Secretary of War for the enforcement of the contract between the Bronx Valley Sewer Commissioners and the United States Government, which provided for the elimination of the pollution of the Hudson River, in a statement to the President taken to Washington by Edward Hatch, Jr., President William Fellowes Morgan of the association wrote in part:

"When you were Governor of New Jersey the municipalities of that State situated on the west bank of the Hudson River, opposite the mouth of the sewer then under construction by the Bronx Valley Sewer Commission, petitioned you to intercede to prevent the pollution of the Hudson River. A suit instigated by this association was entered in the United States Supreme Court by the Government. A stipulation was entered into in the case, whereby the Commissioners formally and of record agreed to the construction of a purification plant, which stipulation rendered intercession on your part unnecessary.

"Acting in good faith upon the stipulation and relying upon its fulfillment, the United States withdrew the suit. The Commissioners actually acquired a site for such a plant, but beyond that point nothing has been done in spite of the stipulation therefor. The agreement made with the United States Government has been violated by the Commissioners, and the poisoning of the river by the raw sewage continues in increasing volume."

VOORHEES VICTIM OF PLOT?

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—That Franklin R. Voorhees, who was killed in his Hyde Park home last night, was not murdered by robbers is the belief of Albert E. Starkie of Aurora, who was export manager in the brokerage office of Mr. Voorhees.

"I am positive that Voorhees was the victim of an international plot," said Mr. Starkie tonight. "I have every reason to believe that he was killed by agents of the Germans or Allies. The theft of his diamond pin was simply to cover up the crime. Our firm has been supplying both the Germans and the Allies. We have been expecting trouble."

"Has anything occurred in Mr. Voorhees's office to strengthen your theory?"

"Yes, two weeks ago we detected a stranger eavesdropping at our door," said Mr. Starkie. "He had disappeared when Mr. Voorhees stepped into the hall. We were all suspicious about the man's actions. Mr. Voorhees remarked that his actions were peculiar."

PRISON WORK GROWS.

Salvation Army in America Makes Annual Report.

The prison work of the Salvation Army in America during the last year included 8,600 religious meetings in jails and penitentiaries, at which there was a total attendance of 416,466 convicts. Of this number there were 31,561 prisoners with whom the Salvation Army workers prayed, and 6,987 who professed conversion. The results of the prison work of the Salvation Army are shown in the annual report on that phase of the army's activities, just issued under the title, "Brighter Day." The prison work was extended into 324 institutions for criminals, as compared with 271 the preceding year.

The work was conducted by 2,000 officers and many hundreds of subordinate workers. From the prisons the Salvation Army won 91 soldiers and 19 recruits. Meals, beds, clothing, tools, and transportation were given to 4,238 prisoners, and among all the prisoners 12,650 visiting hours were spent by the army's workers.

"It is almost as though a new era had dawned," says Commander Eva Booth, "for, although our prison work had its genesis as far back as 1885, the development during the last decade far exceeds all that of the two decades preceding."

The report shows that libraries were established in 22 prisons. For men released from prison the Salvation Army maintains 224 industrial homes and shelters, with a combined capacity of 10,460 persons, and for women 34 rescue homes, with a capacity for 1,200.

OLIVE WHITMAN SPONSOR.

Governor's Daughter Will Name the Naval Militia's Hydroaeroplane.

Miss Olive Whitman, the daughter of Governor Whitman, will name the first of the hydroaeroplanes presented to the Naval Militia of this State by the National Aeroplane Fund next Monday, from the ship Granite State, lying at the foot of West Ninety-seventh Street.

Commander Charles L. Poor, head of the Naval Militia, will accept the machine, which is a 100 horse power Curtiss model, of the type used by the United States Navy, and which was presented by Glenn H. Curtiss through the National Aeroplane Fund. After the christening, Ensign Lee H. Harris, who has received a course of instruction at the Curtiss school, will take the machine for a short flight.

In addition to Governor and Mrs. Whitman, Mayor and Mrs. Mitchel, Major Gen. Leonard Wood, Captain Mark L. Bristol, Director of Naval Aeronautics; General Dyer, General Eddy, Adjt. Gen. Stotesbury, Major Gen. O'Ryan, Commodore Forshaw, and Admiral Usher will be present. Alan R. Hawley, President of the Aero Club of America; Henry A. Wise Wood, Vice President, and Henry Woodhouse, a Governor, will represent the club. Glenn H. Curtiss will also be present.

The acquisition of this hydroaeroplane will place New York in the position of being the only State having aviation corps in both the National Guard and Naval Militia.

WINTER BATHING SEASON ON

Coney Island Organizations Take a Dip at Parkway Baths.

Coney Island's three Winter bathing organizations, the Polar Bears, Snow Birds, and Arctics, were out yesterday afternoon to the number of about 150, playing with the medicine ball on the beach and plunging into the chilly water at the Parkway Baths.

All three organizations, though the first one started only four or five years ago with a few members, are growing rapidly, and many neophytes had their first experience yesterday. Old-timers are wondering how many of the recent initiates will survive the really cold weather.

Several thousand strollers on the boardwalk and many fur-clad automobilists whose cars were parked on the Concourse watched the evolutions yesterday.

CALLS SHEPARD ACT BEST PREPAREDNESS

PRAISES ADOPTION OF WAIF

Believes Bestowing of Human Love Worth More to America Than Battleships.

The Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, speaking last night at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church on "Modern Preparedness," used the example of Mr. and Mrs. Finley J. Shepard's adopting a child from an orphanage in an appeal for personal service.

"Mrs. Shepard," he said, "has again demonstrated that she is a practical disciple of the Galilean who went about doing good. It has been easy to buy off responsibility by subscribing large gifts to orphan homes instead of making a place in heart, home, and habits for the parentless child. Thousands more might well imitate her splendid example. Think of the love that is being lavished on dogs, while there are countless little ones starving for personal human love.

"Why do not some of the jingoists that are much exercised lest we be not prepared when a German Zeppelin lands recognize the danger of lost preparedness when the child life of the nation is neglected?

"Recently a new society was organized to rub the hyphen out among Americans who wear it in their mind and heart. The members decided to co-operate with schools, colleges, Government agencies, and the foreign-language newspapers; but the clergy were supposed to be impractical in any such an effort. Nothing can melt out race antipathy and merge all peoples together but the doctrine of the fatherhood of God.

"Modern preparedness means something more than building navies and raising armies. It means that we must look after our citizenship. Responsibility for social duties must be enforced. Rich men's sons have no intrinsic right to property simply because the will that caused them to inherit it was not broken in a court of justice. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has proved the earnestness of his purpose to be a good steward by living with his employes. Any man is a traitor to his country who thinks he can use an estate or a business for his own aggrandizement."

MANLIUS CHILDREN DEAD.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Oct. 24.—Detectives who have been employed by Mr. and Mrs. Finley J. Shepard to investigate the parentage of "John Doe 104," the four-year-old recently adopted by the Shepards, have made the positive statement that there is nothing in the claim of Edward Edwards of Manlius, N. Y., that the boy may be his half-brother. Edwards said his father, who went by the names of McCleary and Edwards, died in the Harlem Hospital in August, 1914, leaving two young children, Angus and Gwendolyn. He thought the boy adopted by the Shepards might be Angus. There was some facial resemblance between Edwards and the boy, but the detectives learned positively that the two children of Edwards's father were both dead.

The Shepards are hearing many other claims of relationship, but they assert that the detectives made an exhaustive search before the child was adopted, and then decided that his parents were dead.

PLAN FOR MONARCHY IN CHINA HALTED

Foreign Recognition an Obstacle —Talk Now of Making Yuan Shih-kai Hereditary President.

PEKING, Sept. 15, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Chinese officials interested in the monarchical movement apparently regarded the change from a republic to a monarchy as strictly a domestic question when they started the Society for the Preservation of Peace. The difficulties which would be encountered in getting foreign powers to recognize a new Government received little consideration when the Monarchical Party launched the campaign.

The Peking Gazette prints an article today which intimates that Dr. Reinsch, the American Minister, discouraged the monarchical movement when the proposition was laid before him previous to his departure for America. Sir John Jordan, the British Minister, is also known to have advised recently that the change in the Government of China would be inadvisable at this time. Other foreign diplomatists in Peking are also said to have advised against the plan of the Society for the Preservation of Peace.

This position of foreign representatives has been responsible largely for a halt in the plans and the suggestion that the Presidency be made hereditary, thus making it possible for Yuan Shih-kai and his family to be assured of the highest office without the change from the name of republic to that of monarchy. Of course, it would not be necessary to get foreign recognition if the form of government were not changed.

Many Chinese papers have ridiculed the idea of a hereditary Presidency, and prominent leaders in all sections of the country are assailing it as ridiculous and unthinkable. Sun Yu-yun, one of the original promoters of the Society for the Preservation of Peace, contributed an article to a recent issue of a Chinese paper called Kua Hua Pao, in which he denounced the hereditary President idea and argued strongly for a monarchy.

DR. DUMBA MADE A NOBLE.

Francis Joseph Reported to Have Rewarded Former Ambassador.

BERLIN, Oct. 24, (via London.)—Dr. Constantin Dumba, whose recall last month as Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to the United States was requested by President Wilson, arrived in Berlin today with his wife.

Commenting on the arrival of the diplomat, the Vossiche Zeitung says:

"We learn from a usually well-informed source that Emperor Francis Joseph has ennobled Ambassador Dumba."

BOTHA PARTIES WIN 94 OUT OF 130 SEATS

JOHANNESBURG, Oct. 24.—Premier Botha and his imperial policy gained an important victory in the Parliamentary elections just concluded in the Union of South Africa.

The Botha party elected fifty-four of its candidates, the Unionists, who are supporting the Premier, captured forty seats, and the Independents returned five members, as against twenty-seven seats won by the Nationalists, or Hertzog Party, and four Labor members returned.

The Nationalists opposed the military operations against German Southwest Africa, and are attempting to defeat the plan of dispatching a contingent of the Union forces to Europe.

A striking feature of the election was the severe defeat of the Labor candidates.

CAN'T DEFEND ARMENIANS.

Turkish Statesman Says Government Has No Gendarmes in Interior.

BERLIN, Oct. 24, (via London.)—The Constantinople correspondent of the Tageblatt, Emil Ludwig, sends the story of an interview which he had with Halil Bey, President of the Turkish Chamber of Deputies, regarding the Armenians. Halil Bey is quoted as follows:

"They are traitors. You have in mind certain excesses and blunders, but, believe me, the Government is not responsible for them, and regrets them as sincerely as anybody. But we have no more gendarmes in the interior. Everybody is under arms as a soldier. Thus it comes to pass that we have not everywhere been able to restrain the rage of the Mohammedans against these traitors to their country. The Government itself will only keep the Armenians so far from the theatre of war that they cannot conspire with the enemy."

Halil Bey pointed out, says the correspondent, that the Armenians went over to the Russians by thousands when the latter made an inroad to Van, and asked:

"Will you defend such things?"

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 24.—A dispatch from Constantinople to the Frankfurter Zeitung says that Halil Bey, former President of the Turkish Chamber of Deputies, has been appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Ottoman Cabinet.

Cool in summer—warm in winter
The General Says:
Neither the hot winds of summer nor the cold blasts of winter can penetrate our roofing or wall board. Roofs covered with wood shingles, slate, or tile, need one or more layers of our insulating materials under them to keep the building cool in summer and warm in winter.
The use of wall board as an improvement over lath and plaster is becoming universal. Being a non-conductor of heat, it saves fuel in cold weather and keeps out the hot winds and heat of the summer. The great service and very low cost of our materials have led to their enormous use everywhere.

PENROSE WILL GIVE SUFFRAGE FAIR PLAY

Pennsylvania Republican Organization Will Let Followers Go to Polls Untrammeled.

DEMOCRATS HOLD ALOOF

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Oct. 24.—It is by the grace of Boise Penrose, United States Senator and supreme power in the Republican organization of Pennsylvania, that the proposed constitutional amendment which would bring about the enfranchisement of at least 1,500,000 women in Pennsylvania will go before the voters on election day.

According to the best information obtainable here, this should not be taken as an indication that Senator Penrose is favorably disposed toward the introduction of women as a factor to be reckoned with in the complex politics of Pennsylvania. From all accounts, he is not. In the best informed quarters his ready acquiescence in the approval by the Republican Legislature this year of the woman suffrage referendum is regarded as a sure sign that he felt certain that the woman suffrage amendment would be defeated at the polls by a heavy majority, and votes for women consequently would be eliminated as a political issue in Pennsylvania.

In a conversation with the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES in Philadelphia on Friday, Senator Penrose discussed with outspoken frankness pretty nearly every question of importance which will come up for settlement at the polls in the Pennsylvania election next week, and a good many questions that will come prominently before the voters in the Presidential election a year hence. But on woman suffrage, the question which now is agitating most of the women of the State, he remained severely noncommittal.

"Do not ask me to discuss woman suffrage," he said. "I do not care to talk about it at all, and do not want my name to appear in connection with it. Anything that I might say on the subject of necessity would be misconstrued."

This statement was made by the Senator after a conference with Mrs. Frank M. Roessing, President of the Woman Suffrage Association of Pennsylvania. The conference was of her seeking. It is understood that Senator Penrose promised the women who are seeking the right to vote that he would keep his hands off. There is every indication that this pledge has been kept faithfully and that the Republican voters in Pennsylvania will go to the polls a week from next Tuesday untrammeled in their action on the woman suffrage amendment by any pressure brought to bear by the Republican organization.

While the hands-off policy maintained, at least in the open, by the Republican followers of Senator Penrose, is pleasing enough to the advocates of woman suffrage in the Keystone State, the policy of aloofness which the Democrats are pursuing is causing misgiving in the woman suffrage camp. The open indorsement by President Wilson of woman suffrage and his announcement that he would vote for woman suffrage in his own State of New Jersey has not had the effect of bringing the President's political friends in the State openly to support the equal franchise.

Women Fight Almost Alone.

In the Republican camp men of prominence who professedly favor woman suffrage have held aloof from any active participation in the campaign, and the women consequently have been left to fight the battle alone, if exception is made of a few men enthusiasts who have enlisted with the "Men's Leagues" in such large centres as Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

Governor Martin G. Brumbaugh may perhaps be listed as an exception, although most of his advocacy of woman suffrage has occurred far from home. He, too, in the Gubernatorial campaign last year found a "personal" platform an essential part of his campaign equipment. In this he had incorporated, as the fight was drawing to a close, a plank in which he advocated the referendum on woman suffrage. While on his way to the Pan-America-Pacific Exposition last August, Governor Brumbaugh made a speech in which he expressed confidence that the voters of Pennsylvania would ratify the Constitutional amendment enfranchising their women in the coming election.

This was seized upon eagerly by the suffragists as an indication that Governor Brumbaugh would actively support suffrage on his return. They were doomed to disappointment, however. The Governor has remained discreetly silent on the suffrage question until yesterday, when he made a speech at the Founder's Day exercises at Swarthmore College, where he said that he could see no reason "why girls should not play a part in government as well as in the classroom."

Mayor Rudolph Blankenburg, Philadelphia's reform Mayor, is another prominent Republican who, while favoring woman suffrage, has kept out of the present campaign for the enfranchisement of women. This despite the fact that Mayor Blankenburg's wife is a leading worker in the suffrage cause.

BRISK BAY STATE CAMPAIGN.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 24.—The woman suffrage question has developed campaigns in this State that rival those of the party candidates. Both the suffragists and their opponents have marshaled a host of speakers, and each has drawn on men and women from other States for the closing arguments.

Senator Borah of Idaho and Miss Helen Todd of California will speak for suffrage this week, while Colonel John P. Irish of California and Miss Marjorie Dorman of New York will make opposition addresses.

PLAN BIG SUFFRAGE DRIVE.

Women Will Try to Induce Congressmen to Vote For Amendment.

Mrs. Medill McCormick has announced a "drive" for the Bristow-Mondell Federal suffrage amendment by the Congressional Committee of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, of which Mrs. McCormick is Chairman. Eighteen States—Maine, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, North Dakota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, and Nebraska—will take part.

Every Congressman and Senator who did not vote for the amendment in the last Congress and the new members whose positions are uncertain will be shown the strength of suffrage sentiment in their districts.

Nov. 16 is the date set for suffrage conventions in all these doubtful districts. The Congressmen and Senators will be invited to speak, but whether they do or not resolutions will be adopted and presented to them asking them to vote for the amendment.

The four States which have been the scenes of campaigns this Fall—New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey—will join the fight when their pressing home work is completed.

In Alabama, where there is said to be much enthusiasm for the Federal amendment, the Nov. 16 demonstration will be a luncheon given in Tuscaloosa to Representative-at-large J. W. Abercrombie and the Representative of the Sixth District, W. B. Oliver. Both men will speak.

A ten-hour suffrage meeting will be held on Tuesday at Fortieth Street and Fifth Avenue by the Woman Suffrage Party. There will be ten speakers from ten States to speak ten hours, beginning at 10 A. M.

All but three New York theatres—and these three have not been heard from—will be open to the suffragists on Wednesday evening. Suffrage colors will be everywhere, suffrage souvenirs will be given away, and there will be suffrage speeches between the acts.

ANTI-SUFFRAGE APOLOGY.

Men's Association Says Leaflet Meant to Carry No Reflections.

Following a protest by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt against literature issued by the Men's Anti-Suffrage Association, which, she said, vilified the suffragists, the following statement has been issued in reply:

"The suffragists' leaders have offense at the language of the leaflet 'Woman Suffrage: Some Underlying Principles and Comments.' The Man Anti-Suffrage Association is glad to state that no reflections on the personal character of the suffragist leaders were intended or made. Many of them we know to be ladies of high character, sincere in their convictions. We think the principles advocated by the suffragists injurious to the welfare of the State and of the family, which latter we consider the unit of civilization. But the association desires to conduct the campaign without personality and solely on merit, and has, therefore, omitted from the leaflet all references to Mrs. Catt, who felt herself aggrieved by its statement."

This does not bear the signature of any member of the association.

FOR ANTI-SUFFRAGE MEETING.

Prominent Men to Act as Officers at Carnegie Hall.

Among those who have consented to act as Vice Presidents at the anti-suffrage mass meeting in Carnegie Hall next Saturday evening are the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, Fritz Achelis, C. A. Boston, J. M. Beck, Jonathan Bulkley, S. B. Chittenden, R. Fulton Cutting, G. F. Crane, W. C. Childs, Dr. C. L. Dana, S. K. de Forest, W. D. Guthrie, Erskine Hewitt, E. D. Hawkins, General Nelson H. Henry, Rossiter Johnson, Dr. Alfred Meyer, John Martin, C. L. Nichols, Robert Olyphant, the Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, S. L. Parish, Elihu Root, Francis M. Scott, Henry L. Stimson, James Brett Stokes, Everett P. Wheeler, and George W. Wickersham.

BRYAN LEADING DRY FIGHT.

Starts Whirlwind Campaign for State-Wide Prohibition in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 24.—Leaders in the fight for State-wide prohibition in Ohio have prepared for a whirlwind campaign to be led by W. J. Bryan during the next four days and to be kept up by others until election on Nov. 2.

Mr. Bryan will tour the State in a special train, his opening speech being set for 9:15 A. M. tomorrow at Steubenville. The first day will be spent in the eastern part of the State. A large number of men prominent in the fight to oust saloons from the State will accompany the former Secretary of State on his four-day speaking trip.

While prohibition was defeated in Ohio last November by a majority of 84,152, the dry leaders assert that they have an excellent chance to win in the coming election. The wet leaders predict that the majority against prohibition will be much larger than a year ago.

PULPIT REPLY TO C. T. BRADY.

Rector Says Individual, Not Family, Is Unit of Social Life.

The Rev. Francis Theodore Brown, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church in Yonkers, in which the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, the preacher-novelist, argued against woman suffrage a week ago, replied to Mr. Brady in a vigorous talk from the pulpit last night. Mr. Brady, who is a member of the congregation of the church, was among the auditors. The church was packed, principally with women, and these hurried to congratulate the clergyman after his talk.

In denouncing suffrage Mr. Brady devoted considerable attention to the biological and physiological differences between women and men, which, he said, made women unfit to vote.

"In discussing this subject we must leave the animal plane," the Rev. Mr. Brown said last night. "This question is one of personality, not physiology. It is said that men represent women when they vote. Then it is unjust for bachelors to vote, as they have no family to represent; especially unjust when one considers that a widow with three or four daughters is not allowed to vote, even though she may pay large amounts in taxes and the bachelor may pay nothing.

"The real unit of social and economic life, however, is the individual and not the family. If the people are fit to govern themselves all of the people are fit to vote. There are 9,000,000 women workers in this country who have a right to participate in the making of laws governing factory work and other work in which women are occupied."

CARNIVAL FOR A. E. SMITH.

Neighbors Arrange an "Old Home Night" on Oliver Street.

Friends and neighbors of Alfred E. Smith, Tammany candidate for Sheriff, have arranged for an "Old Home Night" on Oliver Street, where Mr. Smith lives, next Wednesday night. The street will be closed to traffic between Madison and Henry Streets, and the adjoining block of Henry Street from Oliver to Catherine will also be closed. Both streets are asphalted, and children will give folk dances. Modern dances will not be barred.

Two bands will furnish music, and the streets will be elaborately decorated with American flags and Japanese lanterns. Motion pictures will be shown at the end of each block. Italians, Greeks, Armenians, Spanish, and Chinese residents of the district will be there, and a dozen Greeks in native costume will give a national dance.

From the steps of 25 Oliver Street, their home, Mr. and Mrs. Smith and their five children will hold a reception all the evening. Some politicians live in the same block with the Smiths, including Congressman Daniel J. Riordan and "Big Tom" Foley. They asked to be allowed to take part in the arrangements, but the neighborhood women who are preparing the celebration told them politicians were not wanted. "Old Home Night," they said, was to be strictly a neighborhood affair.

Error In Suffrage Parade Figures.

An error in the telegraphic transmission of figures was responsible for the publication in the first edition of THE TIMES yesterday morning of the number of marchers in the suffrage parade held in Philadelphia on Friday as 41,129. The actual number of paraders, according to count, was 4,129. The larger number was omitted from the later editions of yesterday's TIMES.

LOW AND BUTLER SPEAK

Dead Educator Lauded as Friend and Exponent of Everything for Which Columbia Stands.

Students of Columbia University, alumni, and members of the Faculty assembled in St. Paul's Chapel on the campus yesterday afternoon to pay honor, in memorial services, to their "dear, old Van Am"—John Howard Van Amringe, the late Dean of Columbia College. The hymns, prayers, addresses, and all the parts of the services were testimonials to the general love and esteem for Dr. Van Amringe.

The services began with the singing of the processional hymn:

Through the night of doubt and sorrow
Onward goes the pilgrim band,
Singing songs of expectation,
Marching to the promised land,
Clear before us through the darkness
Gleams and burns the guiding light;
Brother clasps the hand of brother,
Stepping fearless through the night.

Following the hymn a collect from the Communion Service of the Episcopal Church was read, and then the congregation united in the Lord's Prayer. Psalm 91 and a Bible lesson from the third chapter of the Book of Proverbs were next in the order of service, and after them the choir sang the Nunc Dimittis. Then came the reading of resolutions on the life and death of Dean Van Amringe by representatives of the alumni associations of the schools and colleges of Columbia University, the Association of Doctors of Philosophy of the university, the Columbia University Club, the Federation of Alumni of Columbia University, and the Class of 1874 of the university.

Seth Low's Eulogy.

The congregation and choir then sang Hymn 176 of the Episcopalian Hymn Book:

For all the saints, who from their labors rest,
Who Thee by faith before the world confessed,
Thy Name, O Jesu, be forever blest.
Alleluia.

Seth Low delivered the first address on the memory of Dean Van Amringe. Mr. Low began by saying that the highest tribute that could be paid to "Van Am" had been paid in the great outpouring of men and women who attended his funeral.

"When New York City saw that great throng of people," Mr. Low said, "it might well have risen up and exclaimed, 'Behold how they loved him.'

"As a student," Mr. Low continued, "I look back upon 'Van Am' as one of the three great teachers under whose influence I came as boy and man. He was a true educator. There was nothing small enough in him to detract from his joy at the achievements of his students. They might surpass him if they could. He would be glad."

Mr. Low said that as President of Columbia for a few years he had known Dr. Van Amringe as a Dean.

"He thought it no kindness," said the speaker, "to let students do what they pleased, whether it was right or wrong, yet he was not averse to letting them choose within proper limits. He was a disciplinarian, and yet I never knew a man who would make so much effort to save a student who he saw was going wrong. He was my ideal of what a Dean should be, and I think he was the ideal of all of us."

Dr. Butler Talks of Friend.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, the President of Columbia University, was the other speaker of the day.

"There are moments in our lives," he said, "when we experience a rare elevation of the spirit. These great occasions are infrequent, and they are of various kinds. The greatest of them come but once or twice in the lives of most of us. We have been drawn together today by one of these rare exaltations of the spirit, by a feeling of common love for a friend—a teacher, a Dean, if you will, but first of all a friend and the exponent of everything for which our college stands."

"If we go back over the history of our college for a century," Dr. Butler continued, "it divides itself into two periods, each dominated by the personality of a great teacher, and together these two personalities mark and typify our college for a full one hundred years. The first period is dominated by the personality of John McVickar, Professor of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy for forty years, and the second period is dominated by the personality of John Howard Van Amringe.

"This second period is our period. We have seen the college grow with Dean Van Amringe and we have seen him grow with the college. We have seen him growing as the interpreter of the college; we shall always think of our college in terms of his personality."

Dr. Butler said that Dr. Van Amringe had taught mathematics, not as a branch of science, but as a medium through which he might reach the hearts and characters of his students.

"And," the speaker went on, "it has always seemed peculiarly appropriate that Dr. Van Amringe should be such a teacher of mathematics; his subject and his method of teaching it were in keeping with his sturdy uprightness, his straight thinking, and his powerful integrity."

"Power of An Endless Life."

Dr. Butler spoke of the continuity of the influence of a human life, and said that Dr. Van Amringe would go on living forever in his influence.

"His is the infinite power of an endless life," he said. "When the happy, useful human life is ended without pain and suffering, we must not be sad, but we must rejoice for our great heritage; we must rejoice for the influence and relationship that can never end."

Following the addresses the choir sang this anthem:

"Happy and blest are they who have endured, yea, blest and happy. For though the body dies, the soul shall live forever."

The services were ended with prayers by the Rev. R. C. Knox, rector of the chapel, and the singing of the recessional hymn.

FOR PRO-TEUTON CARDINALS

Rome Report Says Pope Will Name Two at Central Powers' Request.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 25.—A dispatch to The Morning Post this morning from Rome says that it is reported that at the request of the Central Empires the Pope will create as Cardinals at the coming consistory on Nov. 22, Monsignori Fruhwirth and Scapinelli, now Papal Nuncios at Munich and Vienna, who would immediately quit those posts and reside in Rome.

Mgr. Fruhwirth is Austrian and Scapinelli is Austrophile, so they will reinforce Mgr. Gerlach, who is the permanent Austro-German agent at the Vatican.

Sir Henry Howard, chief of the British mission to the Holy See, returned to Rome yesterday.

ROME, Oct. 24.—Although Pope Benedict did not wish to hold a consistory during the war, he has now changed his original intention, as the Italian members in the Sacred College are in fewer number than the foreign Cardinals. There is mention of the creation of French, German, and, perhaps, Austrian Cardinals, but the other new Cardinals all will be of Italian nationality.

It is asserted the Pontiff's allocution on the occasion will be a more important exposition of his views on peace than any he has yet made.

HEBREW CHARITIES PLEA.

Industrial Department Can Use Things Usually Thrown Away.

The Industrial Department of the United Hebrew Charities, which was formed last May to obtain household waste and cast-off goods which might be sold or distributed to the poor families under its care, made public yesterday a report which showed that more than 40,000 bags, marked "Save Your Waste for the Poor," had been distributed and about 13,000 returned filled. The report says:

"Business houses also responded to the appeal and sent generous quantities of shopworn, unsalable, or obsolete wares. The usable material was immediately given to the needy poor, and of the remainder that could not thus be used a large quantity was sold and $10,000 in cash realized.

"This movement, however, must be automatically continuous. A post card or telephone request will bring a new, presentable white cotton bag to the house in twenty-four hours. Thereafter it requires only a little thoughtfulness on the part of householders who should donate such articles as would ordinarily be thrown away. There are still more than 30,000 bags to be heard from, and these the Industrial Department is anxious to obtain.

"It is wise to bear in mind that Winter approaches, and with it the possibility of great suffering to the needy poor, whose pains can be alleviated through the provision of food, shelter, and clothing."

The headquarters of the department are at 37 and 39 Greene Street.

Ocean Travelers.

Among the passengers arriving here yesterday on the St. Paul from Liverpool were:

REALTY MEN FAVOR STANDARD SALARIES

Retrenchment in the City's Running Expenses Declared to be Imperative.

CONFISCATORY TAXES CITED

Bureaus Overmanned by Persons Who, Seeking Work, Impose Hardships on Property.

The Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests, the clearing house for real estate associations and financial institutions interested in real estate, announced yesterday that it favored standardizing city employment and salaries. For months the Advisory Council has been analyzing the reports of the Bureau of Standards of the Board of Estimate, and it bases its decision upon the general experience of its members in their business.

The council includes Charles A. Peabody, President of the Mutual Life; Frederick H. Ecker, Treasurer of the Metropolitan Life; Robert W. Goelet, a large real estate owner; Clarence H. Kelsey, President of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company; Thomas M. Mulry, President of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank; Cyrus C. Miller, former President of the Bronx, and Alfred E. Marling, President of Horace S. Ely & Co. The council summed up its attitude in this statement:

"The situation confronting real estate owners is very serious, for taxes and compliances with regulatory orders of city departments have imposed a very onerous burden upon small property owners who have after much thrift invested their savings in real estate, relying upon its stability of value as a conservative investment.

"When property so well improved as that belonging to the Astor estate is required to pay from 35 per cent. to 50 per cent. of its income and over in taxes alone, the general conditions that exist from increased taxation may be recognized as extraordinary, while the prospects are still more alarming. With the city committed to many new improvements, the State increasing its expenditures so as to require larger direct State taxes, and the new fiscal policy of the city, the tax rate must increase rapidly unless the most careful economies are put into effect by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

"During times of prosperity the multiplicity of regulatory orders of the different city departments would probably not be so vexatious, but when, in many instances, little revenue or none is derived from certain pieces of property, the annoyance and expense of continual alteration develops into a severe hardship. In fact, orders are frequently issued against buildings recently constructed according to the best engineering and architectural skill in the city, for changes that involve considerable expense, without commensurate benefit to the public.

"It would seem at times as if some of the several bureaus of the city were overmanned with employes, who, conscious that they are not needed, endeavor to make the city believe they are busy by issuing orders against buildings upon the slightest pretext and upon unreasonable grounds. Consequently, property owners have imposed upon them not only the tax burden, but also the continual expense and annoyance of complying with the orders of supernumeraries.

"Indirectly these charges fall upon the tenants throughout the city, by an increase of rents, and in those cases where rents cannot be increased, by less efficient service and inadequate accommodations. Since life insurance companies, trust and mortgage companies, and savings banks have such large investments in real estate, any depression in real estate values directly affects the millions of citizens of small means who are their policyholders or depositors, as was conclusively shown in the testimony before Senator Mills's Legislative Committee. Thus the welfare and financial interests of a large proportion of the population of New York City are closely allied to the financial policies of the City Government. The responsibility devolves upon the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to adopt scientific methods of economy for the administration of city affairs."

The council adopted resolutions favoring the policy of salary standardization, and suggested that until the number of employes is reduced to a point to be established any vacancies by death or resignation be not filled.

ELECTRIC STRIKE TANGLED.

Machinists Reject Offer Accepted by General Union Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, Oct. 24.—Although announcement had been made by the Metal Trades Alliance, the central body for the 13,000 strikers at the local plant of the General Electric Company, that a compromise offer of a nine-and-a-half-hour day, with a 5 per cent. increase in wages, had been accepted in lieu of their eight-hour-day demand, the 2,000 machinists, instigators of the walk-out three weeks ago, voted today not to return to work and to picket the plant tomorrow in an endeavor to keep the other men from going back.

The compromise offer is the same as the one offered to the men before they struck and twice rejected since the walk-out.

The Grievance Committee, composed of seventeen men, representing the six teen unions on strike, held an all-day conference Saturday and did not reach an agreement until 9 o'clock last night, when official announcement was made that the men would return Monday morning.

The various unions held meetings today, and, so far as can be learned, all but the machinists voted to abide by the action of the committee, to which full power to settle the strike was voted before it called upon the company officials yesterday.

For Widowed Mothers' Association.

The Widowed Mothers' Association, of which Mrs. William Einstein is the President, will hold a festival and dance on the afternoon and evening of Nov. 14 and 15 at Delmonico's. Little children, dressed as adults, are to serve as manikins showing gowns in a stage auction of the gowns.

How to get ideal heating!

First: Follow your architect's advice to have radiator heating. Appropriate the money for this before you start your plans. Second: Examine the shapes and patterns of AMERICAN Radiators and IDEAL Boilers in our showrooms, or see them as illustrated in our catalogs. Third: Tell your heating contractor to furnish and install

AMERICAN RADIATORS & IDEAL BOILERS

These IDEAL-AMERICAN outfits are known throughout the world as the most successful, most healthful and most economical heating for any building—cottage, residence, apartment, hotel, hospital, church, school, store, factory, etc.

The installation of IDEAL-AMERICAN heating is the best and most important investment you can make in your property. It invariably increases the permanent property value or enables you to command 10% to 15% higher rental prices should you lease. Never wears or rusts out; serves you daily with comfortable, pleasant heat for your whole house with much less trouble than it takes to run one stove for one room.

A No. 4-22-W IDEAL Boiler and 400 ft. of 38-in. AMERICAN Radiators, costing the owner $190, were used to heat this cottage. At this price the goods can be bought of any reputable, competent Fitter. This did not include costs of labor, pipe, valves, freight, etc., which vary according to climatic and other conditions.

A million buildings at home and abroad have been equipped and are immediately put in the "preferred class." The most important phrase in your building specifications is: "To be heated with an IDEAL Boiler and AMERICAN Radiators." When this is done, it settles for all time the question of comfort and economy in your home, for these outfits last for generations; never need repair, and can be operated by a child.

Millions of dollars have been saved to property-owners by IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators in reducing bills for heating all kinds of buildings. Any local fuel including cheapest grades of soft coal, screenings, pea, buckwheat, coke, lignite, oil, gas, wood, etc., can be used with highest results.

Country or city houses, old or new, can be easily outfitted and all dealers everywhere know how to put in IDEAL-AMERICAN heating. You will be surprised at the reasonable first cost, and bear in mind the fuel saving, cleanliness, and absence of labor that you will enjoy as long as your building lasts.

Send at once for our booklet "Ideal Heating" whether you are intending to remodel or build now or later. Call at any of our showrooms, you will not be pressed to purchase and will gather a fund of heating information which will be invaluable. Act NOW!

The fire in an IDEAL Boiler need not be rekindled in an entire heating season. One charging of coal easily lasts through the longest zero night. There can be no fuel waste.

An unfailing, stationary Vacuum Cleaner—in sizes now at $150 up!

You should know about our ARCO WAND Vacuum Cleaner, for dustless, complete cleaning of rooms, furnishings, etc. Sits in basement or side room and cleans through iron suction pipe running to each floor. Easily put in OLD buildings. Fully GUARANTEED. Lasts as long as the building—like radiator heating. Send for catalog.

Five Living Room Pieces $1.25 Weekly

Most people don't realize that they can practically make over their living room for a dollar or so a week. For instance, look at the 3-piece Mahogany Parlor Suite, the centre table and bookcase shown in the picture.

The Parlor Suite is massively built and is upholstered in real leather. Mahogany finish frames. The price is $44.00.

The Bookcase is large and roomy, same mahogany finish as the 3-piece suite. Price $21.50.

The Table is good sized, has wood knobs, and is well built. Also finished in mahogany. Price $17.00.

All five pieces come to but $82.50, payable $1.25 a week, or $5 a month, yet they refurnish the whole living room.

Why try to get along with old pieces which may have become shabby or worn, when you can replace them so cheaply and on such easy terms?

Why don't you come here and open a charge account?

We'll gladly give you credit and you can take a year and a half to pay in weekly or monthly amounts so small that you'll never miss the money.

Our Harlem Store is brimful of good goods at the lowest of plainly marked prices. Come and let us show you. Note our address carefully.

CONGESTED RAILWAYS AND OPEN SEAS.

Steamships are being "turned"—unloaded, loaded, and started on their return voyage—in two days. On the New Jersey Central Railway are thirty-five miles of loaded freight cars awaiting discharge. In yesterday's TIMES it was reported that the railway had declared a two weeks' embargo on freight. The Erie Railway reports its maximum business. The Baltimore & Ohio traffic has increased 40 per cent. within ninety days. The Lehigh Valley Railroad has the same trouble to contend with, while the pressure on the New York Central and the New Haven is quite as heavy. The Southern Pacific refuses freight for its vessels at New Orleans and Galveston. No railway reports anything different except in details. How could it be otherwise when September's exports were but a little short of $300,000,000, and Canada, being in worse position, is shunting its freight to American railways, even when it is necessary to pay duty to do so. The sole hope of lifting the country above the flood of traffic which must be carried with speed is the railways.

The Government's contribution toward relieving the situation is, first, the suggestion of Government shipping, with especial reference to Latin America, and, secondly, an appeal from the Interstate Commerce Commission that shippers should not delay the movement of freight cars. Both efforts are well meant, but aside from the most pressing necessities of the case. The demand is not for steamships to Latin America, nor yet for more freight cars. What would the New Jersey Central do with more freight cars? Only a few years ago there were 413,605 idle cars. It would be madness to expect the railways to supply a greater surplus when experience shows that when there is a flood of freight the last thing needed is more cars. There would be cars enough even now if they could be moved. The obstacle to movement is a deficiency of terminal accommodations and of trackage. After 1907 there was a flood of legislation to make freight cars move faster. Railways were ordered to supply cars upon demand under penalty, and there was a crop of "reciprocal demurrage" laws which were forgotten as soon as passed because the shortage of the memorable year was followed swiftly by an even greater shortage of traffic to fill the cars.

Only shippers and the various regulating bodies throughout the country are surprised by what is occurring, and for which they are responsible more than the railways. The people who are dependent upon the free movement of the railways' business and whose opinion has supported the various measures which have prevented the railways from being in position to increase their facilities betimes, are now in a way to learn what the policy may cost them. They have saved on rates and risked their profits.

THE REVENUE PROBLEM.

Nobody doubts that the Treasury must have more revenue on current account, independent of large prospective expenditure on defense problems. Few doubt that the easiest and largest income in sight can be collected from sugar. The only remaining question is about the manner of taxing sugar. It is a minor objection, but worth consideration, that the imposing of a duty on sugar opens the entire tariff question. There is another objection to a duty on sugar in that it lays a burden on consumers which does not all go to the Treasury. It is intercepted in the form of profits by the refiners. They do not make up their price to consumers by adding to cost of raw sugar the duty and a profit. That would be to present the American market, the largest in the world, to foreign producers. The price of sugar to consumers is just the price sufficient to prevent importations of sugar in what American refiners regard as undesirable quantities, regardless of the Treasury's needs.

It is significant that refiners are in favor of putting back the duty on sugar, although they must pay it in the first place and collect it again in the second place. The explanation is simple. There are 1,693,915 tons of sugar which pay no duty, but which are enhanced in value some $38,000,000 by the duty paid on other sugars. In this aspect the tariff on sugar as levied at present is an indirect subsidy, which explains the enthusiasm for the duty by those who do not pay it. The duty increases the cost of sugar by about $22.40 a ton, or in the total some $84,000,000. The Treasury gets about $46,000,000, and rebates about $8,000,000 in drawbacks on sugar exported. It is desirable that the Treasury should get a larger share of the increased cost which already is reflected in a strong and rising market since Secretary McADOO announced the Administration policy of retaining the duty, which otherwise will come off on May 1.

THE SHAME OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Progressive Kansas enjoys the blessings of woman suffrage. Backward Pennsylvania doesn't. Pennsylvanians who have been thinking of voting against woman suffrage next month should first know what it has done in Kansas to ameliorate the position of women and to strengthen the sanctity of the home. A Sunflower witness, The Leavenworth Times, testifies:

> Our State law is at fault. It makes the obtaining of a divorce almost as easy as getting married. In other States where there is greater regard for the home divorces are little known. In Pennsylvania, for instance, to secure a divorce it is necessary that the case be tried in open court before a jury of twelve men, and the result is that divorces are exceedingly rare in that State. But in Kansas marriage is taken on and put off as a garment. We have known cases where husband and wife have agreed to be divorced, have driven to the Court House together, filed the papers, and within an hour were legally separated. That cannot be done now unless there is some especial reason for hurry—easy enough to find.

Will not Pennsylvania, ashamed of man-made laws, come out of her darkness into the new light of freedom and easy, quick divorce?

THE FIRST VIOLINIST OF CIVIC REDEMPTION.

"Big BILL" THOMPSON, the Hon. WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON, Mayor of Chicago, is back from the San Francisco Fair, where he has been showing his "boom" to a delighted public. Cook County greeted its returning Favorite Son "with such a reception," says The Chicago Herald, "as Chicago has given to Presidents or Presidential candidates in the heat of national political campaigns." A committee of 101 big guns, so to speak, accompanied his Pullmanage from Minneapolis. "A crowd estimated at 10,000," the unit of political multitude, crammed the Chicago station. A thousand cameras shot. A hundred motion picture machine cranks turned reverentially.

Then "Big BILL" was driven in solemn procession along streets "lined with" Thompsonites innumerable. Cheers, frantic cheers, for him who stops the Sunday beers. Soon Cohan's Grand Opera House is filled to the roof. The galleries sag, the ceilings crack with hurrahs. "He's the logical candidate for President," yells his introducer. "He is not only the "leader in Chicago and Illinois, but "he is the man of the hour in the "United States." Whereat "the audience jumped to its feet, yelled. "waved banners, and sang 'The Star-"Spangled Banner,' while 'Big BILL' "blushed and gave a series of modest bows." Was it RICHARD HENRY LEE who said of WASHINGTON, "his modesty is equal to his merit"? Declaring that the saloons must be closed tomorrow, the Mayor referred to himself objectively:

> This is no move for THOMPSON; this is a movement for law enforcement. When they say they want to block THOMPSON they are counting their chickens before they are hatched. They are not opposing THOMPSON alone, they are opposing an army.

A clergyman set the candidate to music:

> He is first violinist, not second violinist, in the orchestral harmony of civic redemption and progress. He is the leader. Let me tell you that a sober, law-abiding people may insist that he be the leader of the nation.

Another clergyman told the still blushing one:

> We stand with you for law. You're not a god, but a man. You have made your mistakes, as any other man. We care not. We regret it, but we care not if, in the heat of the campaign, you made a pledge. I don't believe you signed it knowing what you signed. We'll bare our breasts and fight with you.

THE TIMES stands, with Mayor THOMPSON, for the enforcement in Chicago of the Illinois law closing tippling houses on Sunday, but casuists have a hard job to explain his pre-election promises. On March 20 the Secretary of the United Societies for Local Self-Government received a letter from him, "a candidate for the office of Mayor," in which he "especially declares that he is opposed to "a closed Sunday, believing that the "State law referring to Sunday closing is obsolete and should not be "enforced by the City Administration." The whole tone of the letter is strongly Wet, and now the Mayor is the idol of the Drys, who apologize for his Saul pledges by assuming that he didn't know what he was writing. He says that his written statement was "solely an expression of personal views," rather singular ones for the first violinist in the orchestral harmony of civic redemption and progress. But his promise to the United Societies was made by him as a candidate: "If elected Mayor," "as Mayor he will use his veto power."

It is a sorrow to lose "Big BILL" THOMPSON so early. He promised to be the Comic Candidate, who is never wanting in the early stages of a campaign. But Mayor THOMPSON'S promises are brittle stuff. As a reclaimed Wet, adored by the Drys, he merits the attention of sociologists, and is rich in humor, but as a first violinist candidate he will have hard work to concord his utterances.

THE CANAL REFERENDUM.

After listening to SETH LOW the Produce Exchange approved the referendum in favor of the $27,000,000 canal bond issue. The Merchants' Association has taken similar action. Their support is not superfluous. The Court of Claims is about to consider 2,440 claims for damages in connection with the canal to a total of $62,000,000. That is an inauspicious introduction for a campaign in favor of the referendum at the approaching election for an addition of $27,000,000 to the $101,000,000 already expended. Fortunately these sums are not cumulative. The $27,000,000 in part is intended to cover the canal damage claims, and a claim is something very different from a judgment. In his annual report for this year State Engineer WILLIAMS said: "Many of "these claims are very excessive, and "it is reasonable to assume that no "just awards will reach much over "one-third of the total sum claimed."

It may be added that the allowance of the claims ought to favor the canal referendum as well as their reduction to a just amount. It would be misuse of their opportunities if the counties through which the canal runs, and where the damages will be paid, were both to collect damages and by their votes prevent the completion of the canal on which the State already has spent such a large sum. The danger is not fanciful. The vote of the canal counties has been uniformly adverse to the canal. They fancy that it is a "through" route, for the benefit of the terminals for the most part. The canal would not have been built but for the vote of the terminal districts, and it is in some danger of not being finished, if the voting is left to the canal counties. In the words of Governor WHITMAN, when he opened the Industrial Exposition at Buffalo:

> It would be a public calamity should this proposed constitutional provision fail of success at the polls, and, while its passage seems to me to be assured, it is well for our citizens to awaken to the importance of an active and intelligent educational campaign which will place danger of its defeat beyond possibility.

THE SERBIAN WOMEN.

"Many bodies of women were found in the trenches," says the correspondent of the Cologne Gazette, whose accounts of Balkan operations are printed in THE TIMES, "as Serbian "women are taking part in the na-"tional defense." This is strong evidence touching a matter in dispute. The German soldiers cannot take pride in fighting women; no German war correspondent would say that Serbian women were fighting unless he had positive proof. Women of Serbia are fighting in the trenches, and doubtless fighting bravely, desperately, and willingly dying for their country. If there is little glory in this for the invaders of Serbia, and not much for the men of Serbia, who are forced against their will to share the dangers and the horrors of the battlefield with their wives and sisters and daughters, the glory achieved by the Serbian women will be indelibly recorded on the pages of history and remembered in the songs of future ages.

If "for our country 'tis a bliss to die," it is a greater bliss, a nobler sacrifice, to die fighting the country's invaders, defending its altars and its fires, instead of carrying its might into foreign lands. On the whole, however, it is consoling to know that the women have not yet felt themselves compelled to bear arms in the other countries involved in the great struggle. The share of suffering and loss the women must bear everywhere is large enough without that; theirs is not the lighter burden.

MARSHALL AND THE SANDBAG.

An unusually ugly story is being circulated in Washington concerning the opposition to the renomination of Vice President MARSHALL. According to this story, as given in the editorial columns of The Washington Star, there is no settled plan to deny him a renomination; he is "simply being warned." "If he will be good "at the coming session of Congress "the matter will be dropped."

Mr. MARSHALL was not good at the last session. The Democratic leaders wanted to force cloture upon the Senate, and did not succeed. One of the reasons was that Mr. MARSHALL disregarded their instructions concerning the way in which he should rule on the parliamentary questions incidental to the fight, and decided them according to his own interpretation of the rules. The object of the attempt to force cloture was to jam the Ship Purchase bill through the Senate.

Cloture, and perhaps the Ship Purchase bill, too, will come up at the next session, and Mr. MARSHALL will have to rule again on questions similar to those raised at the last one. Hence the intimation that he must be good if he desires a renomination.

If this story is true, one thing is plain. Mr. MARSHALL cannot yield to blackmail without forfeiting his own respect and that of his fellow-citizens. He can better afford to lose the Vice Presidency honorably than to win it at the cost of honor. There can be no doubt which course he will choose. Even those who have been most impatient with his loquacity, his lack of wisdom, and his blunted sense of proportion gladly admit his impeccable honesty, an honesty which is not limited to dollars and cents, but is an intellectual honesty as well. There is no difficulty in forecasting his course.

But what shall be said of the men who are trying to bribe or frighten an honorable public servant into evil courses for the sake of office? They brought the utmost resources of the party machine into play to force through a bill undesired by the people and opposed by all the articulate part of the nation, a mere fad of the Administration. When they were confronted by failure they tried to alter the ancient character of the Senate by a rule abolishing debate as a real factor in legislation, and if they had succeeded they would have inflicted this injury on the Senate and the nation not merely for the purposes of the particular legislation they desired, but in future legislation. They failed again, one of the reasons for their failure being the Vice President's insistence on standing by his own interpretation of the rules and not theirs. Now they purpose to raise the question again, and to make him treacherous to his own convictions they offer him the Vice Presidency again as a bribe, or hold defeat over him as a club. It is to be hoped the story is not true. If it is, the sooner the present leaders of the Senate are retired to the privacy with which they threaten Mr. MARSHALL the better for the country, and the privacy should be permanent.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Candidates Diversely Qualified.

New Rochelle is to elect a Mayor next month, and the voters of the town are fortunate in that, of the two seriously-to-be-considered candidates for the position, both are men of intelligence and education, while there is nothing to be said against, and much that can be, and in fact is, said for, what may be called the personal or private character of each. They are both good citizens in all the usual senses of that word, and, as they deserve, are recognized as such by their fellow-townsmen

But though so much alike in these unquestionably important respects, they are of marked dissimilarity as regards the qualities that are, or at any rate should be, decisive in determining the selection of a man in New Rochelle or anywhere else.

EDWARD STETSON GRIFFING, who now holds the office, has an already demonstrated competence to perform its duties. He is trained by both study and experience for dealing with all the problems of municipal administration, and is especially skilled in matters of finance and taxation. His record as Mayor has been in every way satisfactory—to those who want a city's business conducted in a businesslike way, with due regard for economy and none for partisan interests, which by no means all voters do—and in the course of his term in office just ending, he has not only decreased expenditures in a rapidly growing town, but he actually paid off $70,000 of its funded debt, an achievement unique in its history. There are, in short, all the reasons for re-electing Mr. GRIFFING that would be determinative for his retention if he were the chief executive official of any other big corporation.

On the other hand, the rival candidate, CONDE B. PALLEN, while presumably able to become a good Mayor in time, has had all his training in a wholly different direction and a wholly different position, and there is no reason even for suspecting him of greater knowledge as to how a city is and should be run than has any other eminently respectable member of the commuter class to which he belongs. Whoever votes to make him Mayor, therefore, shows exactly the same sort of wisdom as would he who voted to replace Mr. PALLEN by Mr. GRIFFING in the editorship of that monumental compilation, the Catholic Encyclopaedia.

Not So Far Gone as He Thinks.

Rear Admiral ALBERT ROSS is quoted as having made in Boston the other day some truly lugubrious remarks about "a rapidly degenerating citizenry" as constituting the most serious problem confronting the United States. The Admiral did not express himself as actually hopeless as to our present condition and prospects, but he told as a deeply alarming fact that 50 per cent. of applicants for enlistment in the navy are rejected either as below the required physical standard or as mentally and morally undesirable, while the state of affairs in the large cities, he said, had just been illustrated in Boston, where only thirty out of 600 would-be men-of-war's men proved to be worth taking.

"And men who are unfit for the navy," the Admiral added, "in the long run are unfit to be good citizens. Many of them, no doubt, will become dependents before their course is run."

Of course such social phenomena as these are not to be ignored, and their importance is by no means small. That they show, however, very much about the American population as a whole is questionable—that they prove us to be a "rapidly degenerating citizenry" it is fairly safe to deny.

It is no reflection on the men in our regular army and our navy to say that they are there for reasons quite unlike those which ordinarily prompt an attempt to enter either service. As a rule, the American whom the Admiral would call a "good man" can do better, or thinks he can do better, in civilian life than as a soldier or sailor, and again, as a rule, in time of peace, the call for recruits is not gladly heard by men up to normal standards, mental and physical, of average competence in trades and professions not military.

The Admiral's conclusions are probably as unsound as would be exactly opposite conclusions from the quality of the "rookies" who entered the training camp at Plattsburg last Summer, and so delighted the regular army officers by the strength and intelligence they exhibited. Those men went there, not through the compulsion of failure elsewhere, but eagerly and from a newly and suddenly felt sense of duty and of national peril. But they would not have justified an exultant optimism as to the quality of America's citizens, and no more is a despairing pessimism warranted because many go to the recruiting stations and few pass the severe tests there imposed on all comers.

A Peasant Class Not Wanted.

It would be wise for many, perhaps for most, of the people who are constantly urging other folk "back to the land"—from which the urgers themselves firmly stay away—if they would read the address delivered by Dean GALLOWAY of the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell before the convocation of the State University.

The Dean warned his hearers against doing here what has been done in most other countries—so conducting agriculture as to produce a great class of "peasants." The farming done by such a class is often highly successful, as farming, he said, but it was at a dreadful cost to those who carried it on—a cost both mental and moral.

American farmers have hitherto been men about as unlike the European peasant as could well be imagined. They do not get as much out of the land as do the peasants, or some of them, but they have managed to get vastly more out of and into themselves, and so should not be scorned for inefficiency.

The farming for which Dean GALLOWAY pleaded as worthy of America will be that in which machinery does most of the hard work, and permits the farmer to be a thinker as well as a doer. He might have added that farms can as easily be too small as too large—that like other business in these days, farming must be on a rather large scale to be profitable.

THE BROKEN CHAIN.

A Vision of America Uniting East and West in Universal Peace.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While German militarism is universally and justly accused of being the disturber of world peace, the world, it seems to me, has been more or less caught with the contagion. No one with a clear conscience would dispute the fact that Germany has ignored the teaching of her best poets and philosophers, and has succumbed to the spirit of militarism. But how about the rest of the world? Is it not true that in recent years there has been a marked decline, even in English-speaking countries, in aspiration for higher ideals?

This is particularly noticeable in the disappearance of great literature and great men. The age which produced such minds as Comte, Saint Simon, Carlyle, John Stuart Mill, Wordsworth, Channing, Emerson and Longfellow has passed away. And it may not be far from the point to say that the national aspiration for humanitarian ideals has been giving way to the national materialistic ambition which without doubt is incompatible with world peace, for peace cannot be looked for without mutual sympathy and understanding, and national selfishness is not conducive to them.

This understanding and sympathy will never spring from the impulsive feeling which usually represents the animal side of the human being. They will prevail only when the God-like side of the human being overcomes the animal side, and the elevation of humanity becomes a national aspiration, which, unfortunately, is now on the wane, imperialism gaining the upper hand.

This reactionary thought influences the nations toward severer competition, making conflict between them imminent. Ideals of liberty, equality and fraternity seem to have ceased to stimulate men's minds as they once did. It may safely be said that the present war is due to lack of such ideals. No European wars in olden times were waged for such purely materialistic reasons as the one still raging. Apparently they were fought for high political principles and righteousness. No doubt the progress of humanity will go on in spite of such fluctuations and upheavals, for the course of human development is not quite straight and even. If the present titanic struggle can but assist in the mutual approach of peoples and go a step further in breaking down the racial barriers that have done so much evil, good will come of it, to the great benefit of the world. But unless all races are placed on an equal footing and the same humane treatment be accorded to them all, the reign of universal peace will not be in sight. It is, therefore, sincerely to be hoped that the Europeans may come out of the war with a realization that there is something more in human life, individual and national, than a purely materialistic purpose.

It is also to be hoped that the United States may take the lead in this onward movement for world peace. If the United States will not, probably no other country will. Her geographical position, national constitution and history all call her, I believe, to the duty of undertaking such a task. With her control of tremendous wealth and civilization unparalleled in the annals of world history, she needs nothing but the social adjustment of internal affairs. From the standpoint of high ideals, however, it would seem that she is in honor bound to be the link in bringing Occidentals and Orientals closer together. As the representative of Western civilization she faces the Pacific and is also so situated as to embrace the Eastern civilization. She led the world in estat'ishing national democracy and has become the greatest democratic country in the world. Is it unreasonable, then, to ask her to go a step further and realize an international democracy on earth? Washington, Lincoln and others made the history of the United States, and without doubt remain dear to the hearts of the 100,000,000 citizens of this country. They never would have taken a discriminate attitude toward any foreigner. This is the time for Americans to decide which road they are going to take—for peace or for war.

Flowers for Opera Singers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Before the coming opera season opens I want to ask why M. Gatti-Casazza forbade last Winter the opera singers from receiving floral tributes over the footlights. It is so much more attractive and interesting to see them and to know they really do receive the flowers instead of reading about the dressing room being "filled with floral tributes." So I hereby make my plea, for the opening night at least, to allow the flowers to be passed over the footlights.

AN INDEFENSIBLE LOVE LYRIC

Phyllis, I would fondly sing you
Lovely songs of Arcady—
Fettered to your graces, bring you
Gems of priceless melody.
Phyllis, I would madly praise you
In a wondrous, deathless chant,
To rer.own immortal raise you—
But, as you're aware, I can't.

Phyllis, I would call your tresses
Of incalculable worth,
Call your glance the light that blesses
All the darkness-ridden earth.
I would call your eyes the clearest,
Softest, sweetest of the lot,
Were I unacquainted, dearest,
With the fact that they are not.

Phyllis, I would call you fairer
Than the fairest ever seen—
Than the Trojan's Greek ensnarer
And the proud Egyptian queen.
I would sing: "The world uncovers Humbly, as she passes by,"
But, George Washington of lovers,
Phyllis, I can't tell a lie.

THE LAW OVERWHELMING.

Need of Checking the Vast Multiplication of Preserved Decisions.

New York, Oct. 20, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In his address to the Bar Association Baron Reading, Lord Chief Justice of England, referred as follows to a growing evil that must soon be dealt with; that is, the accumulation of law reports resulting from the wholesale publication of opinions:

> Speaking for myself, I am strongly impressed day by day with the undesirability of the constant reporting of decisions which lay down no new principles, but only repeat the application of old principles to new facts.

At this point the speaker was interrupted by applause so spontaneous and hearty as to leave no doubt in his mind that his hearers were alive to the reality of the evil and the magnitude that it has attained in this country and State.

According to a compilation made recently by the librarian of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, the number of volumes of American law reports is 8,420. The contribution of the State of New York toward this number is about 1,500 volumes

The California Law Review recently said: "The number of reported cases throughout the entire United States has reached the astonishing figure of 1,000,000; the yearly increment is 25,000. The day will come when the tide of case law will overwhelm the profession."

It is clear that if the indiscriminate publication of all the opinions of all the courts is continued, the bar and the judiciary will be completely swamped by a flood of undigested and often conflicting opinions. At least nine-tenths of these written and published opinions are mere statements of fact, announce no new principle, and are of no value or interest except to the parties and counsel in the particular case decided. It ought not to be impossible for the trained intelligence of the bar to devise a scientific and orderly system of law reporting that will result in a series of official reports containing only cases that enunciate or illustrate principles of law, and which shall at least form an approach to a symmetrical body of case law. Because of the great volume of litigation in this State, and the legal machinery required to dispose of it, it has seemed especially fitting that an effort should be made here to cut a path through this "wilderness of single instances."

More than forty years ago a committee of the New York City Bar Association, headed by the late Lewis L. Delafield, made a report in which they urged that some measures be taken to limit the opinions reported in the printed reports to selected cases. No action seems to have been taken toward complying with the recommendations of this report, and the volume of reported opinions has continued to increase in geometrical progression.

At the last session of the Legislature a bill was introduced at the request of the New York County Lawyers' Association, with the indorsement of the State Bar Association, which authorized the creation of a commission to propose a plan for reducing the accumulation of law reports and for improving the existing system of law reporting, with instructions to report such plan to the next session of the Legislature. The bill had the active support of many eminent lawyers throughout the State, including the late General Thomas H. Hubbard, President of the New York County Lawyers' Association; Judge Clearwater, President of the State Bar Association; Henry W. Taft and J. Hampden Dougherty, and was passed by the Legislature in the last days of the session.

But all the unselfish labors of these public-spirited lawyers and the action of the Legislature in response to their appeals went for nothing, for the Governor included the bill in his omnibus veto. The only conceivable ground for the Governor's opposition is that the bill carried an appropriation of $5,000 for expenses, and undoubtedly the Governor was at that time under great pressure to reduce appropriations, which amounted to sixty-odd millions. Indeed, that was the only criticism of the bill that the Governor made to the writer, who went to Albany at the request of the bill's sponsors to urge the Governor's approval of it.

Whatever influenced the Governor's action, it is unfortunate that this attempt to remedy a long-standing evil should have been defeated by a lawyer from whom sympathy and support for such a movement might reasonably have been expected.

The proposed new Constitution places the entire matter of the regulation of the publication of opinions in the control of the judges themselves. Just what measure of relief may be expected from the authors of the opinions under the accumulated weight of which the profession groans and the public suffers, is quite beyond me. Perhaps in addition to embalming in the printed reports, as now, every fugitive utterance from the bench in every litigation, no matter how commonplace or trivial, they will order the opinions to be printed in full-face type.

A Muzzled Dog Cannot Bite.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On the editorial page of the issue of Oct. 23, 1915, there is a letter from "A. J. S." relative to dogs and muzzling. We would appreciate the favor of being placed in touch with "A. J. S." that we may see that the owner of the dog characterized in his letter—if he is within the jurisdiction of this department—takes care of his dog as required by Sections 10 and 17 of Article 2 of the code:

> Section 10. * * * Should a dog bite any person it shall be the duty of the owner or person having the same in his possession or under his control to immediately notify said department thereof and surrender said dog to said department for inspection and observation * * * and if found to be rabid or vicious to such an extent as to be unsafe to be at large, it shall be destroyed by said department. * * *
> Section 17. No unmuzzled dog shall be permitted at any time to be on any public highway or in any public park or place in the City of New York.

The code accepts the definition of Webster as to the efficiency of a muzzle: "A fastening or covering (as a band or cage) for the mouth of an animal to prevent eating or vicious biting." The department holds that a dog that can bite is not muzzled.

Too Many City Improvements.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I would be the last to advocate Germanized efficiency, but after thirty years' observation and the payment of yearly increasing taxation it has dawned upon me that we want less tearing down and building up by the city authorities—there is too much extravagance. It is all very well to make little old New York a show place for strangers, but where do we come in?

I don't care where the man is employed or by whom. If it is necessary to employ him the laborer is usually worthy of his hire. Don't reduce his salary; take away the necessity to employ him. Cut out the appropriation for so-called improvements and give the old town a rest. We will then really live in comfort. OLD FASHIONED.

The Effect of Zeppelin Raids.

It is probable that the Zeppelin raids over England have made the appeals for active participation in the war more effective. Enlistment has been easier and greater and the whole war machinery quickened by that which Germany purposed for a different effect. E. C.

EXPORTING RELIGION TO LATIN AMERICA.

A Definition of the Work Proposed to be Done by the Congress on Christian Work to Meet in Panama.

By S. G. INMAN,
Secretary of the Congress.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Erroneous impressions have been most unfortunately created as to the spirit and purposes of the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America, to be held in Panama Feb. 10-20, 1916. For example, on the authority of a quotation from The Living Church it has been stated that the congress is to meet in Panama "to plan a campaign for the conversion of the republics of the Southern Cross," and that the movement is "pathetically polemic," and it is intimated that the Director General of the Pan-American Union has condemned the movement because of its criticism of the civilization of Latin America.

The whole genius and purpose of the movement have been exactly the opposite. From the very beginning the committee organizing the congress has planned that the movement should be one of co-operation with the Latin American people, not forcing upon them our own particular ideas but helping reciprocally to promote better religious, educational, and social conditions of these countries. This is clearly expressed by the official declaration concerning the purposes of the congress.

Those preparing commission reports and taking part in the program have been instructed that: "If the best and most lasting results are to be obtained, while frankly facing moral and spiritual conditions which call for missionary work in Latin America, and while presenting the Gospel which we hold as the only adequate solution of the problems which those conditions present, it shall be the purpose of the Panama congress to recognize all the elements of truth and goodness in any form of religious faith. Our approach to the people shall be neither critical nor antagonistic, but inspired by the teachings and example of Christ, and that charity which thinketh no evil and rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth."

The catholicity of the congress is expressed in the following invitation:

> All communions or organizations which accept Jesus Christ as Divine Saviour and Lord, and the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as the Revealed Work of God, and whose purpose is to make the will of Christ prevail in Latin America, are cordially invited to participate in the Panama congress, and will be heartily welcomed.

In order that the congress may bring about the freest exchange of spiritual values between Anglo-Saxon and Latin peoples, there will be invited to the congress not only Latin Americans who are members of the evangelical churches but also some of the leading public men of these countries.

The change of name of the gathering was not made, as has been said, for the purpose of conciliating any church or party of a church, but because it became evident as the plans developed that the name "Congress on Christian Work in Latin America" would far more accurately define its work, and the change was made after consultation with those most intimately acquainted with the genius and history of Latin American life. Much has been made of the fact that the Director General of the Pan-American Union criticised one of the statements in our bulletin. This does not signify by any means that he was condemning the movement, for it was in approving it and endeavoring to help the committee to attain the largest co-operation with the Latin American people that he pointed to this single statement, out of all the congress literature, as the only one that could be objectionable. It is interesting to note that this statement was not anything that the committee itself had said, but an extract from an article by the Anglican Bishop of Argentina.

One might venture the assertion that never before has such a comprehensive study of the fundamental facts of Latin American life been undertaken as the eight commissions of the Panama congress are pursuing. These commissions are composed of 215 persons—Latin Americans, North Americans, and Europeans. The reports, after protracted investigation, are being sent in proof-sheet form to experts in all these countries for searching criticisms. After revision in the light of these criticisms, the eight reports will be sent to delegates, and published following the congress in three large volumes, making, we hope, a real contribution to the limited literature which undertakes a fair, sympathetic and accurate statement of the deeper things of Latin American life.

The charge that the holding of a Congress on Christian Work in Latin America constitutes a discourtesy to any religious body is no more reasonable than would be the charge that the holding of a Pan-American Commercial Congress would be a discourtesy to Latin American manufacturers. The intercourse of national life by means of commerce, immigration, and travel has come to be too great for any nation to expect to live by itself—politically, commercially, intellectually, or spiritually. The best elements of civilization must seek to help all parts of the world, inasmuch as its worst elements are constantly studying how to extend themselves.

More than half of the people of Latin America live in countries where there is no State religion. In all others except one the people are guaranteed religious liberty. The Church which is most powerful in Latin America has attained a much higher and purer development in the United States, where it has grown side by side with Protestantism. Latin America has so far received little of the influences and developments growing out of the European Reformation which so profoundly affected the intellectual and spiritual life of Europe and North America.

The religious needs of Latin America are real. Many of their own prominent leaders as well as practically all travelers in these countries speak of them. They are complicated by a large increase in their population from immigration, by the large number of Indian tribes who still live in their primitive condition without any of the advantages of a Christian civilization, by rapidly developing cities, with their premature introduction of modern social evils, and by the lack of faith in any religion on the part of a large majority of the student classes.

The Panama Government officials themselves, in assuring the congress a hearty welcome, suggested that the National Theatre be placed at its disposal. If it proves true, (though our only notification so far is the press dispatches,) that the President of Panama, because of the misrepresentations of the congress recently made to him, has withdrawn permission to use these buildings, the meeting of the congress will not be affected in the least. The original plans for taking care of the gathering before the proffered Government buildings were considered will be followed. And we have every assurance of the delegates being cordially received and well cared for.

In these days when diplomats, scientists, and financiers are getting together for Pan-American conferences, it would seem to be a matter for rejoicing to all those interested in the world's advancement that Christian forces are uniting to emphasize the fact that a real Pan-Americanism must be based on those deeper fundamental spiritual verities which largely determine lasting friendships.

THE HILLS AT CULEBRA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

From the brief information sent from Panama by General Goethals, it would seem that the present conditions are rather serious and will require quite a large amount of work to open a permanent channel. The nature of the soil appears to be such as to be troublesome again in the future. The conditions existing in the canal at Culebra would indicate that the weight of the hills, 300 to 400 feet high, on each side of the canal exert a strong pressure upon the lower strata of the submerged earth in the channel, forcing the softer soil, pushing up the channel.

The question of slides was often mentioned to me by the French engineers of the French Panama Canal Company as one that would require close attention. This fear of the slides was one of the contributing facts to change the original plans of Count de Lesseps for a sea-level canal to a lock canal. The work done by the French company, however, consisted principally of dry excavation, and the dredging done in the lowlands never was confronted with high, steep slides.

These continued interruptions of navigation are very detrimental to the success of the canal and our shipping interests. They cannot be avoided permanently except by such means as will prevent their recurrence. Fortunately the canal is in the hands of able engineers, who have successfully overcome many obstacles, and will be able to carry out any work necessary to be done.

The remedy, however, is not to be found in dredging, as proved by experience, no matter how rapidly and skillfully it may be done. This, at best, can only afford temporary relief. The only positive and permanent relief can be found in such work as will establish an equilibrium between the pressure of the hills on the banks of the canal and the resistance of the submerged soil in the channel of the canal. This desired state can only be attained in a permanent manner by using the hydraulic system as practiced years ago in California with great success at the time of the gold mining. This system is well known to engineers and can be carried out by the staff of engineers of the Panama Canal. The power needed for operating can be found in Gatun Lake, which seems to have an abundance of water, and whatever additional machinery may be needed can be had in San Francisco.

Lieutenant Wilbur, just arrived from the Isthmus, says concerning these slides: "No big slides have blocked the canal. Instead, through the heavy lateral pressure, the bottom of the canal has been forced upward, quantities of mud ooze from the bed of the cut blocking the canal." This information strengthens the opinion of a want of equilibrium of the soil which must be obtained before the canal will be safe from further trouble.

Considering the great difficulties met with in building the Panama Canal, and the large amount of money expended to carry it to its present state, it may perhaps be permissible to think that it would have been a wiser and an equally if not more successful way to have built a ship railway instead of a canal. No one will doubt so far as the construction of a ship railway is concerned that our engineers are fully capable of carrying out such a work to a successful end. As to the possibility of the system the only question that can arise is to do away with the prejudice of men in the shipping business against ship railways. Captain J. B. Eads and his able assistant, E. L. Corthell, both emin

STAGE NOT SUSTAINED HERE

Manager Warns Against Threatened Loss to Nation—Thomas, Cohan, and Others Speak.

The open season on celebrities began last night when the Friars gave the first dinner of this year for William A. Brady in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor. Mr. Brady gained fame by marrying Grace George and as a producer of plays before he made a fortune in Wall Street which, to quote George M. Cohan, who as Abbot of the Friars presided, made Mr. Brady burst out laughing at the show business every time he looked at a stock ticker.

But it was not "the exchange of delightful candor and genial frankness," as Augustus Thomas described it in one of his masterful speeches, characteristic of Friars' dinners that marked this one. There was plenty of that, because besides the speakers mentioned, the list included Irvin Cobb, James J. Corbett, and Job Hedges; but the dominant note was sounded by Mr. Brady himself. In a stirring speech he made a plea for the rescue of the spoken drama from the hands of the movies.

After answering Rennold Wolf, who as Mr. Brady's official biographer, had traced his life from the cradle to the Playhouse, the guest of honor turned his attention to more serious subjects.

"While I am free to confess," he said, "that in musical comedy such as that produced at the Hippodrome, the New Amsterdam, and some of our other theatres, America leads the world, what about the drama? Where will you find a Booth, a Barrett, a Fanny Davenport, a Clara Morris, on our stage today?

Urges Support of Drama.

"I do not say that good plays are not being produced; some of the younger men, like A. H. Woods, the Selwyns, and Winthrop Ames, are producing good plays. But where are the plays today like 'The Thief' or 'Diplomacy,' dramas that when you saw them you knew at once were good plays? Where are the plays you cannot criticise? Before they disappear completely, the people who are interested in the theatre should stop and think. The fact is that the drama is not sustained here. It is sustained in London, in Berlin, in Paris, but not in New York. What has become of the matinée idol? What has become of the hero worship of players? In their way, they were a fine thing for the theatre.

"In the place of the drama what have we? Moving pictures. And what are moving pictures? The rehashing of every old situation the drama has ever known. If pictures go on as they have been going in the last ten years it will mean the death of the spoken drama. It will die because there is nothing to encourage the men of the theatre, men like my friend Augustus Thomas or my right, whom I consider the premier of American dramatists, men who might earn $10,000 for a scenario written in a few minutes when a fine play would be ignored. It is not Mr. Thomas who will suffer; it is not I who will suffer. It is the country, for the theatre in any country is one of the biggest things in the country.

"The actor will die out because the movies offer inducements and the drama doesn't. Through active connection with the theatre I find that where ten years ago there were twenty young men ambitious for a stage career today there is not one. In another year there will be no actors. There are still plenty of young women who offer themselves, but the men read of Steel or General Motors, of fortunes made in war stocks and turn to other fields.

At a Loss for a Remedy.

"I do not suggest a remedy. I don't know one. I believe that the movies will develop good men. I believe that David Griffith in his way is as great an artist as David Belasco. There are many good young actors in the movies, but pictures are pantomime, and that can be of no real value to the theatre."

In closing, Mr. Brady said he thought it was time that a business having such large interests as the theatrical business should have representatives in Congress, the Legislature, and the Board of Aldermen. Mr. Thomas, who spoke later, nominated Mr. Brady to represent the theatres in Congress, but he refused to share the despondency of Mr. Brady on the drama. He said he considered "The New York Idea," in which Grace George is now appearing, as good a comedy by an American author as was ever produced.

Mr. Thomas's speech, which was in the usual perfect taste of the speaker, was only one of an unusually happy lot of talks. Mr. Cobb sympathized with the guest of honor for the ordeal to which he had been subjected in having "Ren Wolf, who is not only the Friars' favorite comedian but his own as well, and that well-known figure of speech, Job Hedges," turned loose on him. He said he disliked evasions very much; that he would begin by being frank and confessing that the thing he liked most about Bill Brady was Grace George.

James J. Corbett told of his experiences under the Brady management when he was a pugilist, and said if he had his career to live over again he would choose the same manager. Eugene Kinkead, Sheriff of Hudson County, talked about half an hour, himself, and the strike of the oil men. Mr. Hedges spoke in his usual vein, and Abbot Cohan interlarded the talks with his best humor.

Through the haze of tobacco smoke hanging gardens of fair actresses looked down from the balconies. And the dainty and demure beauty of Grace George led all the rest.

LILY LANGTRY HERE.

Will Appear in New Comedy, "Mrs. Thompson."

Lily Langtry, the English actress, in private life Lady de Bathe, arrived yesterday on the American liner St. Paul to appear in a new play by Sydney Grundy, "Mrs. Thompson," which is adapted from Maxwell's novel of that name. She said that it is a high-class comedy written round a real, everyday woman who keeps a store.

"The scene of the play is laid in a provincial city of England," said Mrs. Langtry, "but the same things could happen to a woman who ran a store in any up-State city of New York. It is rather a speculation for me to bring the play to the United States, but I feel that the American public can appreciate a good play about real, everyday people without having adventuresses and stage villains in the cast."

The play will open at Newport News on Nov. 3, and come to New York later in the season under the direction of Klaw & Erlanger. Lionel Atwill, her leading man; Phyllis Relph, and Martin Sands, also members of the company, came on the St. Paul.

ON THE WEDDING CALENDAR.

Miss Sarah Kouwenhoven Among the Brides-Elect.

Miss Sarah Du Bois Kouwenhoven, descendant of the old Dutch family of Flatbush, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Kouwenhoven, will be married on Wednesday evening, Nov. 10, to George C. Henckel, a son of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Henckel, at the home of her parents, 2 Remsen Place, Brooklyn. The bride will have three attendants, the Misses Maud Rider Kouwenhoven, her sister; Elizabeth W. Remsen, and her cousin, Miss Lucretia Kouwenhoven. The best man and ushers are to be William A. Joyce, William Wyckoff Kouwenhoven, brother of the bride, and William P. I. Tienken.

The wedding of Miss Eva Peabody, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Peabody of Brooklyn, and niece of George Foster Peabody, and Clarence Everett Bacon of Middletown, Conn., will take place on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 6, in the Reformed Church on Brooklyn Heights.

The wedding of Miss Claire Lesher Cooney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Stearns Cooney of 310 West Eighty-sixth Street, this city, and Roy Lees Atwood of Boston, son of the late Arthur Franklin Atwood, will take place on Friday evening, Nov. 5, at the bride's home, and will be a very quiet affair.

Miss Myra Dutcher, a granddaughter of the late Silas R. Dutcher, and Alan F. Sawyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Cleon J. Sawyer of Brownsville, L. I., will be married on Tuesday, Dec. 21, at the Hotel Bossert. Miss Dutcher's parents are Mr. and Mrs. De Witt P. Dutcher of Bay Ridge.

Miss Violet M. Fowler, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Fowler of 252 West 136th Street, will be married to Harold Forshay next Monday evening in Holy Trinity Church, at Lenox Avenue and 122d Street. A reception will follow at the bride's home. Miss Fowler will have the Misses Helen and Ruth Forshay, sisters of Mr. Forshay, as flower girls, and the Misses Adele Grenet and Alma Churchill will be the bridesmaids. Ralph Forshay is to be his brother's best man, and the ushers selected are David Forshay, Howard C. Taylor, Rudolph R. Rossa, Egbert H. von Eberhard, Stewart Forshay, and Victor Perley.

Miss Dorothy W. Hurry, whose marriage to Robert Beaver Smith will take place at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon in the Church of the Epiphany, Lexington Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street, has chosen her attendants. Miss May P. Atkinson of Atlanta, Ga., is to be the maid of honor, and little Miss Mary Lawrence Swift, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Swift of Utica, N. Y., a niece of the bride, will be the flower girl. There will be no bridesmaids. Mr. Smith will have his brother, Thomas B. Smith, Jr., as his best man, and the ushers are to be Lawrence Haines, Roger Bamber, Lawrence Swift, and John A. Hartford. A small reception will be held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Blanden Hurry, 242 Lexington Avenue. Mr. Smith has taken an apartment at 118 East Fifty-fourth Street, where he will take his bride to live.

LORD HENRY SEYMOUR TO WED

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—The engagement was announce today of Lord Henry Seymour of the Grenadier Guards, son of the late Marquis of Hertford and Lady Helen Grosvenor, youngest daughter of the late Duke of Westminster.

Lord Henry Charles Seymour, who was born in 1878, is at present the heir of his brother, the seventh Marquis of Hertford, who in 1903 married Alice Cornelia Thaw, daughter of William Thaw of Pittsburgh, the marriage being dissolved in 1908. One of his ancestors was the first Duke of Somerset, who was Lord Protector in the reign of Edward VI. The Hertford estate consists of 12,500 acres.

Lady Helen Grosvenor is a sister of Hugh Richard Arthur Grosvenor, Duke of Westminster, the richest peer in England, who owns 600 acres in London and 30,000 acres in Cheshire and Flintshire.

OPERA COMPANY GETS IN.

Nearly Lost Manager Max Hirsch Near Buffalo.

The Boston Grand Opera Company, which is this year appearing jointly with the Pavlowa Ballet Russe and opens this evening in the Manhattan Opera House with a performance of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," arrived shortly after midnight last night at the Grand Central Station after a day's riding from Toronto in two special trains. There were about 250 people in the company, made up of artists, chorus singers, orchestra, ballet, stage hands, and technical, artistic, and administrative staffs.

The only incident of the trip was the near-desertion of Max Hirsch, the company manager, at the Black Rock Station at the American border. Mr. Hirsch had gone into the United States Customs station there, to make the necessary declarations for the immigration and customs authorities. Apparently having thought him aboard, the conductor started the train. Mr. Hirsch telephoned ahead to the Buffalo station, a few miles distant, telling the company had left its manager behind. Then he hired an automobile and make a quick pursuit and found the train in the yards in the midst of an hour's delay, due to a break in the running gear of one of the cars.

Mlle. Pavlowa, Luisa Viani, George Baklanoff, José Mardones, Riccardo Martin, Roberto Moranzoni, and other principal members of the company stood the trip well, but Tamaki Miura, the diminutive Japanese soprano who is to sing the title rôle in "Madamae Butterfly," was made ill by long riding. In spite of this she managed to keep a smile as she chirped to reporters that she was not at all afraid of big New York, but "veree, veree deelighted" to sing here. Several principal members of the company had come on ahead, arriving here early yesterday, among them Giovanni Zenatello, Maria Gay, Felice Lyne, Maggie Teyte, and Thomas Chalmers.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

The box office will open today for the sale of seats for "Treasure Island," the first performance of which will be given on Thursday night, Nov. 11, at the Punch and Judy Theatre.

Preparations are already under way for a Thanksgiving party on the stage of the Globe. After the night performance of "Chin-Chin" a vaudeville show will be given and dinner will be served. The members of the Hippodrome and Elsie Janis companies will be the guests of Montgomery and Stone.

Borough President Lewis H. Pounds of Brooklyn and the other borough officials will see the exhibition of the film, "The Battle Cry of Peace," at the Vitagraph tonight.

"Tit for Tat" is the title of a new comic opera, the score by Oreste Vessella, the book and lyrics by Alexander Baker and Edward St. John, that will be put into rehearsal today. The piece will be produced Thanksgiving Day and will be presented here about holiday time.

Sarah Bernhardt has cabled Anna Held that she has written a patriotic song she hopes Miss Held will sing in America. The manuscript is on its way here and if it is Miss Held says she will sing it; if sad, no, no.

The first performance of the new Avery Hopwood farce, "Fair and Warmer," will be given tonight in the Empire Theatre, Syracuse. The New York premiere is scheduled for election night at the Eltinge.

Mae Marsh, the heroine of "The Birth of a Nation," left New York yesterday for a vacation of several weeks in Albuquerque, N. M. Miss Marsh came here from California several weeks ago to spend the Fall, but a severe cold confined her to her rooms most of the time and her physician advised her to return West.

NEW CORPORATION FOR FILM SERVICE

Paramount Company and Klaw & Erlanger Join in Plan to Reach More Cities.

"MARTYRS OF THE ALAMO"

Stirring Photoplay Is Best of Four Screen Dramas Produced at the Knickerbocker.

Contracts have been signed by the Paramount Pictures Corporation and Klaw & Erlanger Company by which a new corporation, to be known as the Paramount-Klaw & Erlanger Company, has been formed. The new organization will have for its purpose the extending of the Paramount service to cities which it does not now reach and the procuring of suitable theatres in those cities for the showing of the Paramount pictures.

The Paramount distributes the pictures made by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Famous Players Film Company, and the Pallas Pictures Company. Some time ago it adopted the continuous service system of booking used by Klaw & Erlanger in booking theatrical attractions for many years. The new corporation will build up a chain of high class picture theatres throughout the country to be served by Paramount. The Triangle Film Organization, recently formed, is organizing a similar chain of playhouses in which Triangle pictures will be shown.

The new company has announced that it has no intention of fighting any other company or usurping the place of any other, and that it has been formed merely to perfect the service of an organization that already exists and to better generally the exhibition service of theatres throughout the country. The new corporation will be capitalized at $2,000,000. The Executive Board will consist of Marc Klaw, Abraham Erlanger, Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldfish, W. W. Hodkinson, and Raymond Pawley. An associate board of directors will be named later. The present interest of the companies included in the new combine will not be disturbed, nor will the status of any theatres having the service of either the picture or the theatrical company.

Four new Triangle film were displayed for the first time yesterday afternoon at the Knickerbocker Theatre and, as happens more often than not, the best of the four is the one which, at some time in the course of its preparation, had the advantage of supervision by David W. Griffith. This is "The Martyrs of the Alamo."

Thus far in the brief history of the movies much more impressive results have been achieved with those films which have their sources in travel and history than with those which are drawn from fiction and the drama. With the former, the movie service is indisputable.

The camera's record of Sir Douglas Mawson's journey into the antarctic had more entertainment in it than a hundred ordinary photoplays, and each individual penguin was more amusing even than those gymnastic movie comedies wherein everyone of the actors falls down at fewest seven times. And even the occasional mortal who does not consider the movies the last word in entertainment could not fail to be interested by this new film which, in stirring, picturesque, and graphic fashion, tells the story of the stanch, heartbreaking, immortal defense of the Alamo.

You see the soldiers of Santa Anna bringing the guns to bear on the monastery, and you see David Crockett chuckling to himself as he picks them off one by one. Travis and Bowie and Silent Smith, they are all there in this capital pictorial version of a great chapter in the story of America.

The other serious film on the program shows Julia Dean to no great advantage in an obvious and naive "eye-for-the-under" photoplay called "Matrimony."

Blanche Sweet, one of the favorites of the Lasky group of players, is the star of the new motion picture shown in the Broadway Theatre yesterday for the first time. It is called "The Secret Sin." Miss Sweet plays the dual rôles of twin sisters by that trick of the camera so popular at present—the presence of the actress in two characters on different parts of the screen at the same time. It is said this is accomplished by double exposure, if that is anything to say.

The sin of the title is that of indulgence in drugs. One of the sisters is an opium smoker and makes frequent trips to the dens of Chinatown. Before this is discovered, the good twin finds herself in many predicaments. The scenario leans in the irresponsible melodramatic mood of the present movie moment, and the picture is interesting primarily for its scenes of life in Chinatown, scenes that have been photographed with nice attention to detail.

FILM FIGHT ON NEW LAW.

Movie Owners Have a Grievance Against Constitution.

The movies are to be used this week to oppose the adoption of the Constitution. The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., was formed after a committee had waited on convention leaders at Albany and asked for a hearing on the insertion of a plank guaranteeing as full liberty to motion pictures as is now accorded to newspapers and the spoken drama. The committee was not received, and no hearing was granted. The Board of Trade was then organized and it condemned the new Constitution.

The headquarters of the Board of Trade is at 18 East Forty-first Street. Walter W. Irwin is Director and Chairman of the committee in charge of the campaign.

People's Symphony Concerts Begin.

The first of the People's Symphony Concerts of the season was given at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon under the direction of Franz X. Arens. The audience was large and showed by its interest that the worthy work this organization is doing has suffered no diminution in its hold on those for whom it provides symphonic music at moderate prices. The program comprised Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, an air from Bach's Suite in D No. 3 for strings, Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5, and Liszt's Hungarian Fantasie. Ethel Leginska playing the piano part in the latter number. The Air by Bach was repeated at the insistence of the audience. Miss Leginska played her number interestingly, although certain details of her platform manner, outside her playing, were perhaps more marked than she has made them previously.

Grace George in "The Liars."

It was announced yesterday that a revival of Henry Arthur Jones's comedy, "The Liars," would be the second offering of Grace George and her company at the Playhouse. The first performance will be given on Monday night, Nov. 8, and thereafter "The Liars" will be presented alternately with "The New York Idea," the present offering. After Mr. Jones's play has been added to the repertoire, rehearsals of "The School for Scandal" will be begun, so that by holiday time Miss George will have three or four plays in her repertoire.

JAMES J. COOGAN DEAD.

James Jay Coogan, owner of much real estate here, including property near the Polo Grounds known as "Coogan's Bluff," and many years ago a prominent merchant here, died yesterday of heart disease in his apartments in the Netherland Hotel, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, in his seventieth year. He was born in this city and was a graduate of the New York University Law School.

In 1888, Mr. Coogan was nominated for Mayor on the Union Labor Party ticket. He married Miss Harriet Gertrude Lynch, a daughter of the late William L. Lynch, one of the largest realty owners in this city, thirty years ago, and she inherited from her father the large properties near the Polo Grounds and also valuable business parcels. This estate came from that of John Lyon Gardiner, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Coogan, and through her came into the possession of the Coogan family.

Mr. Coogan is survived by his widow, daughter, and three sons.

RUSSIAN PAINTER DEAD.

Constantine Makovsky, Aged 76, Victim of a Street Car Accident.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 1, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Constantine Makovsky, whose death, as a result of a street accident, has just been announced, was probably more widely known in the United States than any Russian artist since Verestchagin, who went down with the battleship Petropavlovsk, during the Russo-Japanese war.

Makovsky's paintings formed the nucleus of the Russian fine arts display at the St. Louis Exposition.

Probably the best known of his works is the "Death of Ivan the Terrible," but his "Banquet at a Russian Nobleman's House" was the most popular of the exhibit he sent to the United States.

His innumerable portraits of women are said to have typified Russian beauty of the last century. His work was characterized by accuracy of historical knowledge and splendid command of the brush.

He was in his seventy-seventh year.

KNOX BOOTH DIES.

Former Internal Revenue Agent Was Facing Fraud Trial.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 24.—Knox Booth, former Internal Revenue Agent for Tennessee and Alabama, died at a hospital here today of heart disease.

A warrant was issued for Booth last year in connection with revenue frauds said to total more than $200,000. His disappearance followed the arrest of John L. Caspar, President of a large distillery at Fort Smith, Ark. Caspar was indicted for giving Booth a bribe of $1,000.

Booth gave himself up shortly after, and later made affidavit that he had received $12,000 in bribes from whisky distillers for allowing them to make whisky without paying the internal revenue tax. He also testified that David A. Gates, Deputy Internal Revenue Commissioner, was to have been killed for his part in prosecuting "moonshine" whisky cases. Booth was under $25,000 bail at the time of his death.

DEATH OF ARTHUR T. LYMAN.

Cotton Manufacturer Was Once an Overseer of Harvard.

WALTHAM, Mass., Oct. 24.—Arthur T. Lyman, one of the leading cotton manufacturers of the country, died at his home here tonight. He was President of the Pacific Mills, the Bigelow Carpet Company, the Massachusetts Cotton Mills in Georgia, and the mills of the same name in Lowell, the Merrimac Manufacturing Company and other industrial and insurance concerns, and was the proprietor of most of the locks and canals on the Merrimac River.

Mr. Lyman had served as overseer of Harvard University, President of the Boston Athenaeum, and as a member of the Corporation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He was 83 years old.

DR. STEPHEN O. BENTON DIES

Was Officer of Methodist Board of Foreign Missions.

The Rev. Dr. Stephen Olin Benton, since 1902 Recording Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died on Saturday at his home in Mount Vernon, N. Y., in his sixty-seventh year.

Dr. Benton was born in Middletown, Conn., and had been prominent in the affairs of his church for more than forty years. He received his education at the public schools of Providence, R. I., at the East Greenwich Academy, and Wesleyan University, and in 1870 entered the ministry as a member of the Providence Conference.

Whitman to Speak at Church.

Governor Whitman, an officer of the University Place Presbyterian Church, will preside tonight at a meeting in celebration of the church's seventieth anniversary. He will also speak. Last night the church was filled with delegations from its two affiliated chapels, Emmanuel and Bethlehem, and the mission to the Italians. Yesterday morning many former members returned to take part in the celebration, and crowded the pews. The pastor, the Rev. Dr. George Alexander, preached.

Miss Carlisle as American Wife.

Alexandra Carlisle, the English actress, has been engaged by Henry W. Savage for the leading rôle in William Harlowe Briggs's new play, "Behold Thy Wife!" The production, which will be made soon in a Broadway theatre, will be the first offering of this manager this season. Miss Carlisle's rôle is that of a young American wife of good breeding and social position. The company has been rehearsing two weeks under the direction of George Marion, and the first performance will be given next Saturday night in Easton, Penn. A week at the National Theatre, Washington, will follow.

DR. JORDAN OFFERS WAYS TO END WARS

America's First Great Duty, He Says, Is to Keep Out of Present Struggle.

COMPROMISE MUST COME

Neutrality Merely Observance of Law—Gives Examples to Show Cost.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor of Leland Stanford Junior University of California and one of the foremost advocates of international arbitration, delivered an address on the international situation that has arisen as a result of the war, in Mount Morris Baptist Church, Fifth Avenue and 126th Street, yesterday morning. Dr. Jordan spoke as a member of the League to Enforce Peace, of which he was one of the founders, and the President of which is ex-President William H. Taft.

"There are not many encouraging things at this time," said Dr. Jordan. "The period is one of the blackest the world has ever known, and the outlook is rosy to us mainly because we in America are accustomed to take rosy views of things. But there is one thing that is encouraging, and that is that so many people in the world are trying to think out ways not of stopping the war but of making it so that there will not be another; of so adjusting the affairs of the world that another war will be practically impossible."

Dr. Jordan said that about thirty schemes have been carefully developed, all having in view war prevention, and that one of them, with which a large part of the American people are acquainted, is the League to Enforce Peace.

"We are agents for fireproof buildings," added Dr. Jordan, "and if our specifications are followed we will have the Governments of the world so adjusted that war cannot be brought on by a few hot-headed aristocrats or a few gray old strategists that are certain that the closed season for war will set in if they don't get to their work at once. Those two are the fundamental causes of the great war.

"Now we have before us certain very important things, with some of which we can do something and some with which we cannot. One is to stop this killing. The war is costing now about $75,000,000 a day, and as it costs about $15,000 to kill a man, you can see about how things are going. If we could stop one day of war it would save a prodigious sum to the workingmen of Europe, who will have to pay for the war—not for the cost of it, because that will not be paid for till doomsday, but pay the interest on the cost, which will of itself be a burden greater than all the taxes that we in this favored country have to pay. Stop the killing.

"The second thing in importance in the present situation," said Dr. Jordan, "is to keep the United States out of the war. As soon as a nation begins to fight for any principle whatever the principle is lost, and when we do fight the war become simply one group of young men killing another group of young men, neither of them having anything whatever to do with the original cause of the war.

"Every war is a brawl in the dark. There is no certainty from the beginning what the end is going to be. There is no certainty of the triumph of any kind of righteousness, and if the two parties are evenly matched there is a reasonable certainty that both of them will be utterly ruined. If you have two nations that are bound to fight to the end, then the end is zero. They neutralize each other.

"When people speak of this war being fought to the end, the end is the utter ruin of European civilization.

"The most important thing that you and I can work on is to keep out of this war, because when the war is over it will have to be settled by the solidifying of international law, and we represent law. To be neutral means to be lawabiding, and if international law is violated in a way that concerns us, to protest. To protest does not mean that we have to go into a brawl in the dark, but to hold our protest until times are reasonable.

Referring to the Japanese-American situation, Dr. Jordan declared that there is nothing in the world in the way of a dispute between the two nations," but he added that "if enough fools and scoundrels keep on talking about the danger of war with Japan you will have war sometime over nothing." But he did not believe the war would ever come, because the people concerned have too much sense.

"Peace at any price," exclaimed Dr. Jordan, quoting that well-known phrase; "but peace is not offered at any price whatever. It was not offered to Serbia at any price, and it was not offered to Belgium at any price, and it was not offered to France at any price. It was offered to Russia at a price, and I think I should have taken it at the price offered if I had been Russia. And peace was offered at a price to Great Britain. I was present in some of the councils in Great Britain when the question was discussed as to whether they could accept peace, such as it was, at the price, such as it was."

Dr. Jordan did not say what took place at the councils which he attended. "Europe," continued Dr. Jordan, "has already spent on this war more money than all the farm lands of the United States would bring, spent more than all the homes in America are worth, spent more, according to the census, than everything in the Empire of Russia, steppes and railways, are worth. Since I began talking, ten minutes ago, they have spent enough to build half a dozen Peace Palaces, and by this time tomorrow they could have built sixty of them, and by this time next year, if they keep on going, they could give a Peace Palace like the one at The Hague, to every town in Christendom and in heathendom. If there is any difference to be found between them by that time.

GEORGE R. MENEELY DEAD.

Bells and Chimes Made Him Known Throughout the Country.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Oct. 24. — George Rodney Meneely died suddenly at his home here yesterday. He was born in West Troy, (now Watervliet,) N. Y., on March 15, 1831, the son of Andrew and Philena Hanks Meneely.

Receiving an academic education, Mr. Meneely, at the death of his father in 1851, assumed, with an elder brother, Edwin A. Meneely, the proprietorship of the bell business, which their father had established in 1826 in West Troy, and had bequeathed to them. This connection continued for twenty-five years, during which Meneely bells and chimes became famous throughout the country.

Mr. Meneely served as President of the village of West Troy for one year. In 1876 he began at another location in West Troy the manufacture of railway supplies. There was an opportunity in this direction on account of the annoyance and delay caused by frictional heating in the running of railway cars, which was obviated by Mr. Meneely and the late D. A. Hopkins of New Jersey working in conjunction in bringing out the present standard self-fitting journal bearing, a device discovered by Mr. Hopkins. This business, under the name of George R. Meneely & Son, Inc., is still carried on in Watervliet, where Mr. Meneely was actively engaged in manufacturing for sixty-four years.

With the organization of the West Troy Water Works Company in 1875 Mr. Meneely became its President, and continued in that capacity until 1888, when the company sold its interests. He had been President of the Albany Mutual Fire Insurance Company since 1905. He is survived by his wife, a daughter, Eleanor; a son, Charles D. Meneely of Hempstead, L. I., Vice President of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, and a brother, Clinton H. Meneely of Troy.

Lynde A. Catlin.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK, Conn., Oct. 24. —Lynde A. Catlin, 82 years old, who was Secretary of the Illinois Central Railroad from 1864 to 1884, died suddenly at his home last night of apoplexy. He was Judge of Probate here for twelve years. He leaves a nephew, William O. Partridge of New York, the sculptor, and an uncle, the Right Rev. Sidney Catlin Partridge, Episcopal Bishop of Kansas City, Mo.

Obituary Notes.

JAMES J. O'HEA, formerly of Manhattan, died on Saturday at his home, 320 Albemarle Road, Brooklyn, in his sixty-ninth year. He was a civil war veteran, a member of Typographical Union No. 6, and the Royal Arcanum.

Miss FLORENCE EUPHEMIA HASTINGS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Hastings, died on Saturday at her home, 24 Fuller Place.

JOHN S. FLANAGAN, for thirty-one years editor of the Charlestown (Mass.) Enterprise, died on Saturday at his home there, in his sixty-fourth year. When 18 years old he came to this city and was an employe of The Sun. From here he went to Charlestown.

MARMADUKE FOX, a musician of Paterson, N. J., died suddenly of heart disease on Saturday in East Eighteenth Street, Paterson. He was born in England and was a teacher of voice and piano. For several years he was organist of the Park Avenue Baptist Church.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL UPHEAVAL—GOLF—TENNIS—CYCLING—BASEBALL

TIGERS AND CORNELL HAVE CLEAN RECORD

Only Two Eastern Teams Remain Undefeated—New Football Adds to Scores.

Probably no football season of the last few years has furnished so great an upheaval as the present. It is generally conceded that the new football has the effect of giving greater scoring ability to the smaller colleges, but that the minor elevens should be able to take so much greater profit from the innovations of the open game than those long established in football prestige is almost beyond comprehension. Yet such seems to be the case. With the season just started toward the major games, there are but two of the big elevens in the East which have not been defeated, Cornell and Princeton. It is unfortunate that these two will not play against each other this season, for it seems now that each may go through its remaining games without losing a game. If such does prove to be the case the question of football supremacy may be settled only by the unsubstantial method of endless debate, altogether an unsatisfactory condition.

In the games of last Saturday Harvard went to defeat before the powerful Cornell eleven, and at New Haven Yale suffered its second reverse this season when Washington and Jefferson scored a well-earned victory. With the form that was displayed in each of the games it may be that still other defeats will mar the prestige of the Crimson and the Blue, for each has hard games at the end of this week with teams that ten years ago would have been despised. Harvard will play the powerful Penn State eleven, the recent conqueror of Pennsylvania, while Yale has to face Colgate, a team that defeated West Point, and for that reason, if no other, cannot be taken lightly.

In defeating Dartmouth Saturday Princeton completed her schedule of hard games before testing her strength against Harvard two weeks hence. With victories over Georgetown, Rutgers, Syracuse, Lafayette, and Dartmouth, Princeton may well look upon this eleven as the best that has been turned out in some years. The playing of the men in every case has justified confidence, and as yet the Tiger eleven has not been forced to show its hand in order to win. Those who saw the game against Dartmouth learned no more of Princeton's real ability than was displayed in her earlier games. Dartmouth was not such an opponent as could force Princeton to declare herself, and if there were any secrets from other elevens present they went away disappointed.

There was only one thing they could determine definitely, which was that the Tiger team had a wonderfully perfect defense. Just what Princeton has in attack has never been clearly demonstrated. In the early games it was believed that Princeton had not developed an offense, for she won almost on strategy alone. Then there came just the faint glimmer of successful attacking ability, but beyond that the Tigers have gone as far as the public is concerned.

There is no basis of comparison between Princeton and Cornell, and the only one that can be made will follow Princeton's game with Harvard. It is undoubtedly true that Cornell has the best eleven which has been sent out of Ithaca in years. That it is a powerful scoring machine was indicated in the game with Harvard. For season after season the team has struggled for a victory over the Crimson, and this year it won gloriously. It outplayed Harvard, and showed a sustained attack that made light of the Crimson's defense many times. But Cornell did not play perfect football by any means. There were frequent fumbles that might have proved fatal had Harvard been a team that was following the ball as every football team should follow it. This, however, in no wise detracts from Cornell's victory, nor does it matter that Harvard may say she was not in the best of form because of having to train slowly for Yale and Princeton. Cornell's big red team won on its merits and deserves all the credit that the victory merits to Ithaca.

There certainly was little in the game that could give assurance to Crimson supporters. Harvard played ragged football, even Mahan being an offender against clean handling of the leather. The game against the Ithacans forced Harvard to show its ability and it was evident that there will have to be rapid improvement if Haughton's men are to battle successfully in the remaining games of the season. There are at present few of the elements that made last season's team such a mighty eleven, also there is much to be learned of defense and a great deal to be studied, apparently, before there can be a sustained attack. Harvard gained many yards Saturday, but there was not the ability to carry the offense through to the coveted touchdown.

Yale appears to be in hopeless difficulties. The Blue suffered defeat in the past, and it has served a rejuvenating influence so that the men have found themselves and waged battle with a determination that brought success. It was thought that the victory of Virginia over the Blue would accomplish a like purpose, but Yale showed Saturday that she had not profited by the lesson and a second defeat was inflicted by the Washington and Jefferson team, which is not nearly so strong as the one that faced the Blue last year. An open game was played against Yale and it had the New Haven men bewildered. The material from which Yale may draw this year is good, but the men seem to be woefully deficient in the knowledge of rudimentary football, and this may prove fatal unless there is some excellent coaching before the games with Princeton and Harvard. As a matter of fact, it must begin immediately or the Blue will come face to face with another defeat when the eleven lines up against the strong Colgate team next Saturday. It seems likely that a call for extra coaches will go forth from Yale this week.

Pennsylvania, though beaten by the strong Pittsburgh eleven Saturday, showed a better game than heretofore, one that gave encouragement for the play during the rest of the schedule which ends with the annual Cornell game on Thanksgiving Day. At Pittsburgh, Glenn Warner has one of the best elevens in the country, and that the Quakers could hold it to a 14 to 7 score augurs well for at least giving Cornell a hard battle.

Improvement was also noted in the game of the West Point eleven, which won from Georgetown by a score that was only three points less than that which Princeton made against the Washington men. Unlike Yale, defeat seems to have done the Cadets a measure of good.

Colgate Hot After Yale.

HAMILTON, N. Y., Oct. 24.—The Colgate team, which ran up the record score of the season on Saturday, beating Rensselaer by a score of 107 to 0, is making great preparations for the game with Yale at New Haven on Saturday. Coach Bankart is anxious to repeat the performance of Colgate in 1913, when Yale was defeated 16 to 6. In preparation for the game he has developed two sets of back field players. A special train will bring 400 Colgate students to New Haven to cheer their team. They will also bring along their famous goat mascot.

TO TUNE UP RACING CARS.

Qualifying Sprints for Harkness Trophy Begin Today.

There was a scene of activity at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway yesterday. Since the running of the Astor Cup race on Oct. 9, events have been quiet at the big round saucer. However, it will be different this week, for starting today, a half dozen of the fastest speed kings in the world will begin to tune up their cars for the Harkness Championship Trophy race. It will be the first race for the trophy that stands for the automobile championship of the world.

In addition to the 100-mile championship contest there will be several other events at the Sheepshead Bay track on Election Day that promise to be of the greatest interest. Wild Bob Burman, who is to drive the Blitzen Benz against time, has agreed to race the big P. R. P. car that has been built by Finley Robertson Porter. The latter machine is to be driven by Jean Porporato, a driver who failed to start for the Astor Cup.

Qualifying sprints for post positions will be the order of the program for today. It is believed that several of the drivers will do even better in the Harkness Cup qualifications than they did in the ones for the Astor Cup. The best time made in the latter qualifications was 109½ miles an hour, registered by Ralph Muiford in a Peugeot. He will be at the track today.

YALE PLAYERS INJURED.

Legore's Successor, Scovil, Received Broken Nose in Saturday's Defeat.

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 24.—To add to the gloom which has been in evidence in the Yale football camp for some time, it was learned tonight that "Mal" Scovil, the back field star, had suffered a broken nose in the Washington and Jefferson game. He will probably be unable to play any more this season. Scovil's injury came early in the game, but he said nothing of it, and later made Yale's only touchdown. His loss is a severe blow, especially as he had taken Legore's place, following the latter's disqualification.

The Yale coaches no longer attempt to conceal the seriousness of the situation. More coaches are expected here soon, and a conference will be held to consider future plans.

Other injuries received include a cut forehead by Way, a wrenched shoulder by "Chub" Sheldon, and a muscle bruise of the leg by von Holt.

Stiff Practice for Tigers.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 24.—Princeton's eleven faces the stiffest week of work that has been their portion during the practice season, according to the plans that Coach Speedy Rush had in mind today. There will be scrimmage tomorrow afternoon for the whole squad, and there will be harder ones to follow throughout the week unless something develops to change the plans of the Princeton coaching squad. Some of the stars may get a rest tomorrow, but all will be on hand the day after. All eyes are turning now to the Harvard game. Over-confidence is the one obstacle that the coaches have to conquer. The work next week will serve to weed out this feeling, if it exists, on the part of the team. Then the following week the program will be an easy one, and the men will be allowed to rest up for the big games. All of the players reported in fine condition from the Dartmouth game, and there is little to hinder the work of the coaches.

N. Y. U. Blames Overconfidence.

Although New York University's defeat by Haverford on Saturday upset the calculations of the Violet followers and coaches, that fact will not interfere with the University Heights aggregation plans of putting in an even more strenuous week of practice than last in preparation for the Trinity game which is the next contest on the schedule. It is generally conceded that the unexpected turn in the fortunes of the New York team was largely due to overconfidence, and that the defeat will serve the purpose of stimulating the men. Coach Reilley is planning some further hard work as the program for the week, which includes scrimmages against both the Columbia and Fordham elevens. The Blue and White will come to University Heights tomorrow to give the Violet warriors another tussle. After a day's intermission for signal drills and some work with the scrub players the Violet squad expects to go to the Fordham Field on Thursday, where they will put in another hard scrimmage against the Maroon team.

Georgetown to Tackle Fordham.

More than 5,000 Georgetown alumni living in the vicinity of New York are looking forward to Election Day, when the Georgetown eleven will play Fordham at Fordham Field. The Maroon eleven is slated over the defeat of Holy Cross, and they hope to defeat the strong Washington team. Georgetown has three players who have been doing great work this season. They are Kilroy, the full back; Tom Gormley, right tackle, and Mahlum, the left guard. On account of the importance of the Fordham game Georgetown will rest on Saturday. The Southerners will have a large representation at the game. Exendine, the former Carlisle Indian player, is coaching the Georgetown eleven.

Halsted of Lehigh Injured.

Halsted, the former Erasmus High School player, now playing with Lehigh, was injured in Saturday's game against Muhlenberg, and a badly sprained ankle will keep him out of the game for some time. It is not likely that he will play before the Penn State game. Magginnes will take Halsted's place at full back and a new half back will have to be developed for the half back position.

Lap Relay Races at College Meet.

In order to avoid confusion during relay races at the Intercollegiate A. A. A. A. annual indoor meets it has been deemed advisable to recommend a change from given distances to laps for all the relay events in future. This change would enable each relay to start and finish at a given point instead of at fractional parts of a track like that in Madison Square Garden, where there is a ten-lap-to-the-mile track, over which the initial relay meet was decided last May. Two new events, a straightaway hurdle and a dash for the longest distance possible indoors, have been proposed. In these contests no college will be allowed to start less than four men, so that teams competition will be adhered to and points awarded as in other events. In each heat—preliminary, semi-final, and final—the places will count four, three, two, and one in points, so that, while the team with the highest aggregate score will win, the possibility of one star athlete winning for his college will be precluded. These changes are to be passed upon, and in all probability adopted, at a special meeting of the association to be held at Boston on Nov. 19, the eve of the day on which the intercollegiate cross-country run and the Harvard-Yale football game are to be decided.

WANT RUNS SHIFTED TO VAN CORTLANDT

Athletes to Protest Against Holding Cross-Country Events at Prospect Park.

Representatives of the New York Athletic Club, Bronx Church House, and Millrose A. A. held a meeting yesterday at Van Cortlandt Park while their men were training for the coming cross-country championships and framed a protest to the Metropolitan Association Amateur Athletic Union against awarding any of the titular runs to the Prospect Park course in Brooklyn. It is asserted that the Brooklyn course does not compare with the Van Cortlandt Park route, and therefore should not receive consideration. They also say that inasmuch as no Brooklyn clubs enter as a rule in the championships the borough across the bridge should not receive recognition from the championship committees.

According to a recent statement by Frederick W. Rubien, President of the Metropolitan Association and Chairman of the National Championship Committee, it was his intention to ask that one senior and one junior event be contested in Brooklyn. Rubien will receive the protest within the next few days, as the first championship hill and dale chase is scheduled for the early part of November. Last year both the junior metropolitan and national championships were contested at Prospect Park. The Mohawk A. C. is in accord with the proposal, but has not joined as yet in the protest to Mr. Rubien.

Ideal cross-country weather, with just a suggestion of chill in the atmosphere, brought another big gathering of harriers to Van Cortlandt Park yesterday. The Bronx Church House was again first in numbers, with eighteen representatives, but the New York A. C., the Millrose A. A., Mohawk A. C., and Ozanam Association were well represented. The showing of Win Gough, the Millrose middle-distance runner, was exceptionally good in a three-mile test.

Paul Pilgrim had in his Mercury Foot division, Ackerman, Flaherty, O'Neill, O'Connor, J. E. Bell, Robertson, McKay, and Mitchell. Robertson is the Evander Childs harrier who last year won the Columbia University cross-country chase, as well as several other schoolboy cross-country events. McKay is a former Columbia long-distance runner.

Matt Geis, the veteran of the Millrose club, covered the course in fast time, and his trial will undoubtedly result in his being selected for the championship squad of the Wanamaker organization.

SULLIVAN MEMORIAL FUND.

Late Athletic Chief's Remains to be Interred on Nov. 14.

At the recent annual meeting of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union, President Frederick W. Rubien outlined to the delegates proposed plans in connection with the "James E. Sullivan Memorial." He explained that a committee had conferred with cemetery authorities regarding a burial site, and found a suitable burial plot at Calvary Cemetery. Mr. Sullivan's remains are now in the receiving vault, and it is proposed to inter the body in this burial plot on Sunday, Nov. 14, just prior to the annual meeting of the A. A. U., when delegates are in this city from all over the United States, and it is hoped that a monument can be purchased and placed on the plot by that time. This plan has met with the approval of Mrs. Sullivan.

Mr. Rubien explained that enough money had been collected to purchase the plot, and urged that the association raise funds for the suitable monument. This brought forth a motion from Justice Bartow S. Weeks that all should unite in an effort to raise the funds necessary to place a suitable stone over his remains in the plot selected in Calvary Cemetery.

President Rubien informed the delegates that $1,452.50 had been received by the Treasurer, and urged the delegates to make more of an effort in their respective clubs to raise subscriptions, and that each of the 150 clubs could raise an average of $25 per club without much effort. The following extract is taken from Justice Weeks's plea to the delegates to swell the fund:

I think that if the delegates will look at the annual report there should be at least seventy clubs in this association and we do ourselves. There are seventy clubs in the association that have contributed nothing whatever, as clubs, to the Sullivan Memorial. Now we don't expect $1,000 subscriptions; we don't expect $100 subscriptions, but we would rather have only $5 subscriptions from clubs, than not have anything. These clubs that are down here for $5 are entitled to just as much credit for what they have done in handing in their mite as the larger and more powerful clubs, who have paid more.

ATTACK A. A. U. DECISION.

Irish-American A. C. May Take Kiviat-Smith Case to Court.

Congressman Murray Hulbert and John T. Dooling, counsel for Abel R. Kiviat of the Irish-American Athletic Club, and Harry J. Smith of the Bronx Church House, issued a statement yesterday attacking the stand taken by Justice Bartow S. Weeks and Frederick W. Rubien, President of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union, for the cancellation of the registration cards of the two athletes. In the statement the counsel promised further action in the case. What this action will be depends on developments. It is known they intend first appealing to the Board of Managers through the Irish-American Athletic Club for reinstatement of the athletes, and, failing in this move, they will probably resort to the courts as was done after Castleman and Joyce of the Irish-American Athletic Club had been declared ineligible by the local Registration Committee in 1904. The Irish club triumphed in this instance.

Metzger Takes Two-Mile Run.

The Fall members' games of the Morningside Athletic Club attracted 2,000 persons to Macomb's Dam Park yesterday and resulted in competitions which drew out all the active members of the club. Six handicap events were contested, with a two-mile run the feature exhibition. Lenny Metzger, with a handicap of sixty yards from L. Heydet, captured this event in the good time of 10:21 1-5, leading Heydet to the tape by fifteen yards. At one stage of the race Heydet was practically on even terms with the victor, but he dropped back and thereafter was unable to get up again. Honors in the 100-yard dash went to G. Sinn, with two yards' handicap. He triumphed by a yard over J. Shein, with eight yards' allowance. All handicap men were placed in the quarter-mile dash, J. Hanley leading the field over the two furlongs. William Ralph, who was on the same mark with the winner, was second. F. Keiser, on scratch in the mile walk, won with yards to spare in 7:35 2-5. He was chased hardest by E. Zavalosky, who had 25 seconds' start, while William Ralph, with the same mark, crossed the finish line in third position. C. Wood, Jr., annexed the principal award in the discus-throwing event, with an actual toss of 87 feet 10½ inches and 25 feet handicap. The relay race at a half mile went to the "Bugle Staff" composed of Galston, Keiser, Singer, and Sinn, with 18 yards' handicap. Their time was 1:54 2-5.

Glencoe A. C. Runner Leads.

Emil Rieger of the home club triumphed over a dozen harriers in the invitation road run of 4½ miles held yesterday under the auspices of the Glencoe A. C. He defeated his clubmate, Charley Timmins, by two seconds. The summary: Emil Rieger, Glencoe A. C., 26:03; Charles Timmins, Glencoe A. C., 26:05; G. Phillips, Bronx Church House, 26:31; F. Casse, Morningside A. C., 27:06; T. Mulvaney, Glencoe A. C., 27:18; Henry White, Glencoe A. C., 28:26; James Kennedy, Glencoe A. C., 28:31; J. Shilling, Union Settlement A. C., 28:40; A. Fox, Municipal Ath. League, 29:04; N. Divens, Glencoe A. C., 29:10; F. Wilson, Ozanam Association, 29:30; T. McEnery, Glencoe A. C., 29:50.

SQUASH TENNIS STARTS.

Champion Kinsella Defeats Macklin in Handicap Match.

The professional squash tennis season opened yesterday at the private courts of J. Cox Brady, at Hamilton Farms, Gladstone, N. J., when Walter A. Kinsella, the world's professional title holder, conceding the big odds of five aces, defeated John S. Macklin, professional at the new Yale Club in this city, by the score of 12—15, 16—17, 15—10, 18—17, 15—9. The match, which was witnessed by a big gallery including many of the week-end guests at Hamilton Farms, was an interesting one, and although Macklin captured the first two games Kinsella appeared to hold his man safe at all times.

Kinsella played the same game that won the title for him from Stephen J. Feron. He had much of his old time speed, and was particularly effective in taking the ball from the side and back court. Macklin's game very much resembled that of the champions, but he lacked the speed of the latter and was always at a disadvantage in the rallies. Kinsella after the first two games settled down, and by brilliant racquet work scored frequently and wore his opponent down by superior play and steadiness.

Four Hours for Tennis Match.

Paul Goold and Eli Behar won the doubles championship of the Harlem Tennis Club yesterday on the club courts at 137th Street and Eighth Avenue, defeating in the final round C. Buchner and Harry Cassel, after a four-hour match at 4—6, 4—6, 6—3, 6—4, 6—3, bringing to a close the tournament which was a series of surprises. It was Paul Goold's first outdoor championship, and the victory was obtained through persistent lobbing, which finally wore down Buchner and Cassel. The contest resolved itself into a question of steadiness, and the defeated pair had plenty of speed and excelled in overhead smashing. Goold's regular partner, H. H. Manchester has been unable to play during the last three weeks, owing to illness, and the victorious pair were strangers to each other's style when they started, but they showed excellent combination work at the end. The summary:

Harlem Lawn Tennis Club, Men's Doubles, Semi-Final Round.—Paul Goold and Eli Behar defeated Benjamin M. Philips and H. Hierbert, 7—5, 6—3; C. Buchner and Harry Cassel defeated E. L. Blumensheim and Millard Bottsford, 3—6, 6—3, 6—3.

Final Round—Paul Goold and Eli Behar defeated C. Buchner and H. Cassel, 4—6, 4—6, 6—3, 6—4, 6—3.

WRESTLING TITLE AT STAKE.

One Fall Will Decide Tonight's Bout Between Aberg and Zbyszko.

Alexander Aberg, champion, and Waldek Zbyszko, challenger, will wrestle tonight at Madison Square Garden in a finish bout for the Graeco-Roman wrestling championship of the world. There is a tinge of bitterness in the struggle, aside from the athletic honor attached, as Aberg is a Russian and Zbyszko of Austrian birth. In addition the previous contest between the pair in the final of the international tournament in the Manhattan Opera House was declared a draw after four hours of give and take that had each man on the point of exhaustion. There will be no draw tonight in any event, and the first fall will decide the match, and Referee George Bothner will not call a halt until one man is enabled to leave the area a winner.

Neither Aberg nor Zbyszko has wrestled in public since last Spring. The Russian has been in active training all Summer, with the idea of building up his reserve strength for tonight. Zbyszko spent his vacation months in complete rest on the Maine seashore with the same object, and has taken on twenty pounds of needed flesh, which brings him up to 230 pounds. Aberg is about ten pounds heavier, and of the ponderous order.

Feeling is running particularly high in the foreign quarters, where the ability of the two giants is best known. As at the Opera House tournament, the men will wrestle in two-piece suits.

Four-Ball Match at Hot Springs.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Oct. 24.—A gallery of fifty golf enthusiasts followed a four-ball match this afternoon. Alexander Smith, professional at Wykagyl, and W. J. Baxter, amateur, of New York, played against Adam and James Green, the professionals here. The Greens won, 3 and 2. In the gallery were Mr. and Mrs. Josiah C. Thaw, Mr. and Mrs. T. Morris Carnegie, Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Fitler, Malcolm Meacham, and Craig Colgate. There were nearly forty entries yesterday in the golf tournament handicap tournament, and cups have been captured by Bernon J. Prentice, New York, cup, and Mrs. C. H. Goddard, whose score was 7 down.

Aickelin First in Mile Cycle Race.

Twenty cyclists took part in the weekly point races of the New England Wheelmen over the Eastern Boulevard course yesterday afternoon, and there were exciting finishes in both races. Carl Sprauer, with a one-minute handicap, won the three-mile race, and C. Eller, riding with a thirty-second handicap, finished in second place. A. Levine, handicapped at two minutes, was third, and C. H. J. Tonjes and W. H. Hall, Jr., finished fourth and fifth, respectively. E. Aickelin won the one-mile unpaced race for the Pelham Trophy in 2:27, and C. Eller was second in 2:43 4-5. Sprauer was third in 2:45 1-5, and A. Levine was fourth in 2:50. Schindler has his trial spin for the Kopsky Trophy, rode over the course in 16:24 4-5.

Walkers Tramp 50 Miles.

Three squads of members of the American Walkers' Association held their weekly hike yesterday. The first squad went to Garrison, a distance of fifty miles; the second to Ossining and return, covering about the same distance, and the third to Hastings and return, about fifteen miles. Century men medals were awarded to H. Morell, S. Brodsky, and L. Leibowitz. Century bars were awarded to F. Heath, G. H. Swartz, W. Probst, D. Goldberger, J. Haltiananad, and F. Soufert. A large number of walkers from the evening high schools of the city competed in the walk for the medals which will be offered to the school team having the greatest mileage at the end of the season.

San Francisco Wins Pennant.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 24.—When the 1915 season of the Pacific coast league came to a close today, the San Francisco team managed by Harry Wolverton, was in first place by a comfortable margin, having cinched the pennant last week. Salt Lake City, the newcomer in the league, took second place from Los Angeles after a close race, only decided in the final game of the year, at Vernon, Oakland, and Portland finished in the order named.

OUTSIDERS FIRST IN CYCLING RACE

Corry and Walker of Australia Defeat Cracks in Team Race at Velodrome.

Frank Corry and Gordon Walker, Australian cyclists, won the fifty-kilometer team race for professionals at the Newark Velodrome Saturday. Seventeen teams comprising the best professionals of America, Europe, and Australia started in the race, which was decided by a series of sixteen intermediate mile sprints and points scored by leading the field over the tape on each lap of the contest. The winners, who were rank outsiders, stole away from the field early in the race and piled up enough points to win before they were overhauled by the favorites. Alf Goullet and Alf Grenda, another Australian team, finished second, and Reggie McNamara and Bob Spears, also representing Australia, were third. Marcel Dupuy of France and Pete Drobach of Boston won fourth money, and Frank Kramer and Jackie Clark were placed fifth.

In the Brassard match Kramer, the Yankee champion, defeated Goullet in a close finish after a hard ride from the rear. Chris Dotterweich, Newark, (125 yards,) won the one-mile amateur handicap. Ben Seager, Newark, (150 yards,) was second, and Fred Knoller, Millburn, (90 yards,) was third. Hans Ohrt, the world's amateur champion, starting from scratch, put up a great ride, but was unplaced. J. Best of Irvington won the one-third-mile novice, with Ben Park, Orange, second.

JENSEN HAS BIG HANDICAP.

Easily Defeats Other Cyclists in Five-Mile Road Race.

Edwin Jensen, riding from the limit mark of 1:30, easily finished first in the five-mile race of the Century Road Club Association over the Eastern Boulevard course yesterday afternoon. Jensen not only won the race easily, but his time was 1:09 faster than that of the first scratch man to finish.

Jensen, who won the cycling championship of the Inter-Club League in 1914 and again annexed the title for 1915 by winning a series of races held by the Inter-Club League, was placed on the limit mark yesterday in the weekly race because he had not won enough points to place him better than on the 1:30 mark, George Harvey, Ernest Kurno, and S. A. Styles also started with Jensen.

On Sunday, Nov. 7, a one-hour two-rider team race will be held on the Sheepshead Bay track, and during the last fifteen minutes of the race the cyclists will ride in the six-day-race style, with the members of the teams relieving each other at will. The summary of yesterday's race: Edwin Jensen, (1:30,) 13:13; John Marquart, (0:30,) 14:21; Raymond Caldwell, (0:30,) 14:23; George Harvey, (1:00,) 15:10; Ernest Kurno, (1:00,) 15:11; Joseph Naphtal, (scratch,) 13:47; Jack Welton, (scratch,) 13:47 3-5.

RITCHIE IS FAVORITE.

Willie Ritchie is favored by followers of the boxing game over Johnny Dundee in their ten-round bout tomorrow night at Madison Square Garden. Ritchie's physical advantages over the local man in height, reach, and weight, combined with a cool head and heavy hitting, has established the Californian a favorite with the fans.

The boxers have been working over a month for the bout, putting in two hard weeks before the postponement, when the club failed to have the license renewed. Ritchie will benefit mostly by the long siege of training, being out of the ring for months, while Dundee has been boxing steadily, his last opponent being Joe Mandot. This bout was one of the best seen in New York in some time, and indications point to a better bout Tuesday night on account of the heavy hitting of Ritchie.

Notes for the Boxers.

The matinee boxing show to be staged this afternoon at the Broadway Sporting Club of Brooklyn will include a number of the semi-professional try-out bouts. The windup of ten rounds will be between Jack Coyne of Orange, lightweight champion of New Jersey, and Charley Pappas, the Greek champion in his class. The first bout will be staged at 3 o'clock.

Young Mike Donovan, son of Professor Mike Donovan, formerly of the New York A. C., will face Cowboy Charlie Shands, the rugged Western middleweight, in the final ten-round bout at the Olympic Club tonight. This will be Donovan's first bout since he met Mike Gibbons at Madison Square. The brother of Leach Cross will tackle Farmer Sullivan, the rugged welterweight from the Greenwich Village, in the second ten-round bout.

The American Sporting Club of Harlem starts the week's program tonight with a contest between "Al" Roy and "Young" Stanley, the stubby Bronx middleweight. Harry Gattle of Port Chester will box Tommy Hogan of Buffalo in the other ten-round session.

Two ten-round contests are scheduled for Wednesday night at the Vanderbilt Athletic Club of Brooklyn. In the first contest Jack Smith will oppose Frenchie de Mario, and Paul Doyle and Jim Kelly will be the principals in the second.

The bout between Jack Dillon and Jim Flynn, the fighting fireman of Pueblo, which was to be staged at the Broadway Sporting Club of Brooklyn tonight, has been postponed. An effort was made by the club management to secure an opponent for Dillon on Wednesday night.

Tom McCarty, the Montana cowboy, and George Rodel, the Boer, have been matched to box ten rounds as the feature for the Saturday night entertainment of the Broadway Sporting Club.

Tie for Gaelic Football Title.

The Gaelic football teams of Cork and Kilkenny played a tie match at Celtic Park yesterday for the championship of the East, each team scoring four points. The contest was the feature of the annual sports of the Kilkenny Men's Association. The tie will be replayed at the games of the Monument Club at Celtic Park on Nov. 7.

BASEBALL FOLLOWS FLAG.

Marines Make Ball and Bat Part of Expeditionary Kit.

Baseball follows the flag. In a circular sent out by the recruiting service of the United States Marine Corps the importance of the game among the men of the service is emphasized.

The bat, ball, and glove has become a regular part of the marine's expeditionary equipment, and the service is trying to enlist all the recruits possible who can play the game. The marine goes to all parts of the world, and his baseball outfit has a regular place in his knapsack, side by side with implements of a more serious nature.

Everywhere the United States marine has gone he has taken the national game with him. They have played in almost every country under the sun, and the games between the marines have never failed to attract interest, although many of the spectators did not know the first thing about the game.

An old grizzled "soldier of the sea," who has played the game in every clime, talked about the game at the Brooklyn Marine Barracks yesterday. "Music may have its charms to soothe the savage breast," he said, "but when it comes to taming a man in his native lair show him a man on third in the ninth inning, with two out and the score a tie. We've done it in China, Guam, the Philippines, Haiti, Alaska, and everywhere man may go. Baseball always brings warring factions together with the bonds of true sportsmanship."

FAVORITE WINTER SPORT.

Picking Manager for Pittsburgh—Dreyfuss Doesn't Want Moran.

One of the favorite Winter sports of the baseball fans will be to pick a new manager for the Pittsburgh club, to succeed Fred Clarke. It is a very simple matter to choose a good baseball manager. That is, it is easy for every one except the man who owns the club. Naturally, he feels that he ought to be consulted.

Barney Dreyfuss of Pittsburgh stated a few days ago in this city that he hadn't given the matter a thought yet. When asked if Hans Wagner was likely to get the job, he replied that, inasmuch as Honus wouldn't want to be manager for any amount of money, it wasn't likely that the job would be offered to him.

Some one has picked Pat Moran, the manager of the Phillies, for Dreyfuss, but neither of the principles were consulted before the choice was made. Therefore it is not binding.

It is stated that Moran has refused to sign a contract to manage the Phillies next year unless he gets a big boost in salary. He considers that if he is a good enough manager to win a pennant with a makeshift club like the Phillies, he ought to be good enough to draw a salary which would be more in keeping with the stipend received by other pennant-winning managers such as McGraw, Mack, Stallings, and Bill Carrigan.

President Baker of the Phillies now has Moran's case under advisement, and it is very likely that Pat's pay envelope next season will be satisfactory. Another reason why Moran will not be the next Pittsburgh manager is that Dreyfuss doesn't think he is a good enough manager for the Pirates.

Mr. Dreyfuss also stated that he wasn't going to let the worry about the appointment of a new manager spoil his otherwise quiet, peaceful Winter.

BASEBALL FATALITIES.

Fifty-nine Deaths Attributed to the Sport in 1915.

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—Statistics compiled by a Chicago statistician show that fifty-nine fatalities were attributed directly to baseball in 1915. The report shows that thirty-eight of the fatalities were caused by being hit on the head by the ball direct from the hands of the pitcher; six players were killed in fights during or after games; six died of overexertion, and three from collisions.

Injuries showed a slight decrease over the preceding year, 7 per cent. of the players in organized baseball having been injured during the season.

Walter Johnson's Team Beaten.

WEBB CITY, Mo., Oct. 24.—Walter Johnson of the Washington Americans and George Foster of the world champion Boston Americans pitched a scoreless duel for eight innings here today, Johnson in the uniform of Webb City and Foster pitching for Pittsburg, Kansas. In the ninth inning Johnson was hit for a two-bagger, fumbled a sacrifice grounder and walked the next man, and all three runners subsequently scored. Pittsburg won 3 to 0.

Offer Yankees Training Quarters.

OCALA, Fla., Oct. 24.—An offer of training quarters for the coming season was telegraphed by the Ocala Baseball Association today to the New York Americans, who had asked for terms.

Xaviers Win at Basket Ball.

The Xavier A. A. opened the basket ball season yesterday on the home court, 205 West Fourteenth Street, and defeated the Chatham Five of Brooklyn. The Xaviers easily outclassed their opponents and had no difficulty in winning by a score of 57 to 24. The line-up and score:

LIVELY SPEEDWAY BRUSHES.

Fourteen Events Decided in Which Close Competition Ruled.

Light harness racing was held under the auspices of the Road Drivers' Association of New York over the half-mile course of the Harlem Speedway yesterday afternoon. It was the fourth matinée of the season, and, with fine weather prevailing, a large crowd witnessed some closely contested races during the staging of fourteen brushes. What would have been the feature event of the program was unfortunately called off because two of the entrants were scratched and only one starter remained. It was in the 1:03 trot, in which Nathan Straus's bay mare Fair Maiden, L. W. Boynton's chestnut gelding Country Tramp, and J. A. Murphy's bay gelding Oakland Boy were scheduled to go, but Mr. Murphy, however, drove his entry against time to beat 1:03 and scored the distance in the time of 1:02½.

There was a dead heat between Kitty Oakland, the brown mare owned and driven by G. Gall, which won the 1:11 trot, and J. F. Fendt's gray gelding Billy McCann in the third and final heat of this brush. Mr. Gall's trotter scored a triumph over Billy McCann in the first trial, but R. Allen's brown stallion proved too fast for Kitty Oakland in the second heat, and the latter finished third.

The 1:07 and 1:09 trots were four-heated contests. In the 1:07 trot there were four starters, and the first, second and third heats were evenly divided between C. Weiland's brown gelding Lester M., the brown mare Flying Fleet, and E. O. Bonzen's bay gelding Bistan, respectively. In the final heat Lester M. won the contest by a small margin. In the 1:09 trot the honors of the race went to H. S. Crossman's bay horse Governor Mafon after scoring ahead of a field of five contenders in the second and final heats of the race.

The other seven brushes were concluded in straight heats, and among the winners were J. H. Lawrence's bay gelding Hans, which won the 1:05 pace; J. J. Morris's brown mare Madam X, which annexed the 1:09 pace prize, and W. Hammdorf's roan gelding Hoozier Prince, which took first honors in the 1:11 pace.

ANOTHER SOLDIER SHOT BY MEXICANS

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Oct. 24.—Soldiers of the Fourth United States Infantry and Mexican bandits engaged in a skirmish tonight shortly after 8 o'clock at the scene of the train robbery and murders last Monday.

One American soldier, Private Herman E. Moore, was wounded in the fight, according to reports received at Fort Browne.

A detachment of the Sixth United States Cavalry stationed near the Mercedes Canal, forty miles up the Rio Grande from here, was fired on from the Mexican side of the river late Saturday night from a point noted as a place where mescal, a fiery Mexican drink, is sold.

The Mexicans fired twenty-five shots. The fire was returned by the American troops and the Mexican firing ceased.

SEEK TO RECONCILE VILLA

United States Government to Act as Peacemaker in Mexico.

EL PASO, Oct. 24.—The United States Government is to assume the rôle of peacemaker between the Carranza de facto government and the Villa faction in Mexico, it was learned here today from an authoritative source.

Negotiations are soon to be opened with General Francisco Villa by George C. Carothers, Special Agent of the Department of State, who is said to have been commissioned to present plans which the United States Government has concluded with representatives of the Carranza Government.

It is said that the terms which Mr. Carothers will present to Villa are:

1. Villa will resign as Commander in Chief of the Villa army and come to the United States, an absolute asylum will be furnished him here by the United States Government.

2. Villa Generals who wish to leave Mexico and come to the United States will receive asylum.

3. The Villa army in its entirety will receive amnesty and full guarantees will be given to every member.

TO RETURN STREET RAILWAYS

Carranza Government Takes Inventory of Mexico City Property.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 24.—An inventory is being made of the rolling stock, equipment, and other property of the Mexico Tramways Company, with a view to returning the lines to the company. For several months they have been operated by the Government. The corporation has headquarters in Toronto, but the late Dr. F. S. Pearson of New York, who went down with the Lusitania, was one of the principal owners.

MEXICO HEARS OF RAIDERS.

Outfitted by Germans to War on Ships with Oil for British.

Special to The New York Times.

LAREDO, Texas, Oct. 24.—T. D. Everetts of Tampico, Mexico, who arrived here today, says it was reported in oil circles when he left that port yesterday that several small vessels had been outfitted on the Texas and Mexico Gulf coast with arms and ammunition and manned by German officers and crews for the purpose of waging war upon tank steamships engaged in carrying crude petroleum from Tuxpam, Mexico, to vessels of the British Navy.

It is stated that practically all of the fuel oil supply of the British Navy now comes from the Mexican oil fields through the port of Tuxpam.

FIRST CLASH IN SONORA.

Villa's Advance Guard Meets Carranza Troops.

DOUGLAS, Oct. 24.—A sharp fight between the advance guard of Villa's soldiers and a detachment of Carranza troops from Agua Prieta, Sonora, occurred early today between Agua Prieta and Fronteras, according to reports received here. General P. Elias Calles, the Carranza commander, issued no statement as to the outcome of the fighting.

EAGLE PASS, Oct. 24.—Five thousand Carranza troops arrived in Piedras Negras early today on their way to reinforce the Carranza garrison at Agua Prieta, Sonora, which is facing attack by General Villa. By arrangement with the United States Government, these troops will be permitted to cross the American border at Eagle Pass and proceed through United States territory to Douglas, Ariz., whence they will again enter Mexico.

The date for the departure of the Mexican troops who are commanded by General Castro, Maycotte, and Benjamin Hill has not been fixed, but they are expected to leave by Tuesday.

EL PASO, Oct. 24.—According to advices to the Carranza consulate here, Carranza columns have occupied Jimenez and Casas Grandes, Chihuahua. A third column is said to be moving toward Ojinaga, opposite Presidio, Texas. The force which is said to have occupied Casas Grandes are reported to have been composed of deserters from Villa, led by General Quijano, who moved into town after Villa's main army moved westward and after General Manuel Ochoa had removed the villa garrison to Juarez.

General Lopez Pallan and General Licon were executed by Villa at Casas Grandes, according to reports received today. These, together with General Quijano deserted the Villa army at Casas Grandes a week ago and were captured. Quijano with some of his men escaped.

ALL HEED POPE'S REST PLEA

None of Warring Powers to Make Prisoners Work on Sunday.

ROME, Oct. 24.—All the belligerent powers have granted the request of Pope Benedict that Sunday be made a day of absolute repose for prisoners of war.

Several of the countries in their replies said that they already had been observing this rule.

BISHOP FOR STRONG NAVY.

Kinsolving, from Brazil, Exhorts Laymen's Missionary Convention.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Oct. 24.—The Pittsburgh Convention of the National Laymen's Missionary Movement began here today with 3,500 persons in attendance. Missionary leaders were present from all parts of the United States and from many foreign lands. The speakers were the Rev. Moses Breeze and Colonel Elijah W. Halford of New York and the Right Rev. L. M. Kinsolving, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Brazil.

Bishop Kinsolving in his address said he believed in a strong navy.

"I hope every citizen will stand by our President and make our navy worthy of the Stars and Stripes," he said. "We will send these warships painted in white, symbolic of peace, to carry our glad tidings to all the earth."

HONOR JEWISH HEROES.

Belgel Praises Soldiers Who Have Died in Great War.

A memorial service for Jewish soldiers who have lost their lives in the European war was held last night at Mount Zion Temple, in West 119th Street, near Fifth Avenue, under the auspices of the German-Jewish Military Society. Eighty-four German-Jewish veterans of European wars attended in uniform.

Rabbi Tintner of the temple conducted the service, and Congressman Isaac Seigel made an address in which he eulogized the Jews who have died in battle in Europe.

NAVY LOOKS FOR NAMES.

Wants Distinctive Appellations for Proposed Battle Cruisers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24. — Secretary Daniels is giving informally some consideration to the question of the naming of the proposed new type of warships—the battle cruisers—that are to be added to the American Navy if the five-year naval program of the Wilson Administration is accepted by Congress. The naming of the projected battle cruisers will not become a pressing matter until next Summer. However, as the problem will have to be met, the Secretary of the Navy is willing to receive suggestions from any source for filing and consideration at the proper time.

It will not be easy to adopt a nomenclature for the battle cruisers, because this is a new type of vessel for the American Navy, and it will probably be the concius on of the Navy Department that an equally new type of name should be found.

Congress is to be asked to authorize the construction of the first two battle cruisers at the coming session. The third would be authorized in the 1919 program, the fourth and fifth in the 1920 program, and the sixth in the 1921 program. It is not expected that the Naval bill will be enacted into law before next June, unless, of course, Congress should clear its calendars in time to adjourn for the national political conventions. The contracts for these vessels will be awarded, if custom is followed, before the end of 1916. When the contracts are awarded the names for the first two battle cruisers will be chosen.

In the British Navy there is no established custom for naming battle cruisers. The early British battle cruisers born with such names as Invincible, Indomitable, Inflexible, and Indefatigable. The Colony of New Zealand contributed toward the construction of a colonial battle cruiser, and this vessel was called the New Zealand. The three battle cruisers that followed in the British Navy were named Lion, Princess Royal, and Queen Mary, and the next was called Tiger.

The first of the German battle cruisers was named Van der Tann, after a famous sea Admiral. The next were called Moltke, Goeben, Seidlitz, and Derflinger.

It is not considered desirable to use the names of States for the new American battle cruisers, because this would confuse them with the battleships. The use of the names of cities would confuse them with the armored and other types of cruisers. The use of names of naval heroes would confuse them with the names of destroyers and torpedoboats. One suggestion is that they be named after some of the Presidents, such as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, and Abraham Lincoln. In the earlier days of the navy there was a vessel named The John Adams.

WEALTH IN A RUT, HE SAYS.

Dr. Scott Nearing Says It Is Distributed Where Wealth Is.

Dr. Scott Nearing, now a Dean at the University of Toledo, declared yesterday before the Free Synagogue at Carnegie Hall, in speaking on the subject of "Public Opinion," that it was heredity and environment of men which made them turn to increased armaments when they talked of preparedness against war.

"The environmental forces that go to the shaping of public opinion consist, first, of the social momentum; and, second, of the economic interests. Habit, tradition, custom, and established prejudice make up social momentum, and these things dominate the lives of a great number of men and women, but no one stops to think them out, and they form an emotional rather than an intelligent basis for action."

In the evening Dr. Nearing addressed the congregation of the Church of the Messiah on the subject of "Riches." He declared that the human race had built a great automatic machine which distributed wealth wherever wealth already existed, and tended to keep the poor poorer. He declared that wealth was its possessor's reward for its expenditure on the services of others in the same way that poverty did the extremely poor. The general public paid a man to take their money and labor, as the tenants did their feudal landlord, he said.

FINDS BOMB IN HALLWAY.

Policeman Extinguishes Burning Rags Covering Dynamite.

Prompt work by Patrolman Joseph Brodsky of the Oak Street Police Station late last night saved the residents of an Italian tenement at 26 Monroe Street from being badly shocked and possibly killed when three sticks of dynamite covered with a burning cloth were placed in the hallway.

Brodsky was passing the building when he smelled smoke. He saw the burning cloth in the hallway and, getting a bucket of water next door, put out the flames. Beneath he found two eight-inch and one six-inch sticks of dynamite with very short fuses, which the flames would have reached in another moment. He took the explosive to the station house, and the dynamite was turned over to Inspector Owen Egan of the Bureau of Combustibles.

Train Big Labor Chorus.

A singing labor movement is being planned by the Labor Centre Association. It will find expression at the weekly meetings of the Labor Forum on Sunday evenings in November at the Washington Irving High School and at a supper of the association on Nov. 5 at the Union Square Hotel, when a folk and labor chorus, under the direction of Laura Elliott, will sing. Among the members of the committee in charge of the singing are Ernest Poole, Mary Ritter Beard, Rose Pastor Stokes, Edward King of the Central Federated Union, and Mrs. James P. Warbasse of the New York Unemployment Committee.

PLANS BIG CAMPAIGN FOR FOREIGN TRADE

Redfield Will Ask Congress for Funds to Help Americans Gain World Supremacy.

GREATER COMMERCE BUREAU

Will Be Practically Reorganized and the Staff of Commercial Attaches Abroad Increased.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—Elaborate plans for a worldwide campaign for trade by the United States are revealed in the estimates of the Department of Commerce expenditures for the next fiscal year, to be presented to Congress this Winter. Through the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce the department proposes to aid American merchants and manufacturers to take advantage of the wonderful opportunities now before them and to prepare for the struggle for trade supremacy which commercial officials are certain will follow the European war.

Reorganization of the staff in Washington and an increase of the foreign commercial service to about twice its present extent are contemplated, according to a statement discussing the new estimates made public today by Dr. E. E. Pratt, Chief of the bureau. Appropriations will be sought to provide for extensive investigations of commercial conditions abroad and for tariff inquiries by the cost of production division.

"As a part of the general program of 'preparedness,'" said Dr. Pratt, "the Secretary of Commerce will request Congress to make a very largely increased appropriation for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Secretary Redfield believes that commercial preparedness should not be overlooked; that the United States is facing a great and unusual opportunity for increased world commerce, and he has expressed these convictions in the requests which he will make on Congress to enable the Department of Commerce to do a larger and more effective work in promoting commerce than is now possible.

Bureau to be Reorganized.

"One of the most important increases asked for is for an increased clerical staff in Washington. This amounts practically to a reorganization of the bureau, with additional divisions and departments for new branches of the work which has recently been undertaken.

"The commercial agent service is the backbone of the trade promotion organization. It is anticipated that under the appropriations asked for it will be possible during the fiscal year, 1916-17 to make investigations of the possible foreign markets for cotton textiles, motor vehicles, railway supplies, boots and shoes, agricultural implements, furniture, machinery of all kinds, electrical power equipment, structural material, wearing apparel, investment possibilities, &c. No large increase will be asked by the bureau for the establishment of branch offices in the United States, but the bureau hopes to extend this service through the co-operation of the local commercial organizations.

"The commercial attaché service has been in existence just about a year. It has proved so useful that an addition of ten commercial attachés will be recommended. These attachés, it is intended, will be stationed in such important countries as Japan, India, South Africa, Spain, the Scandinavian countries, Italy, the Netherlands, the Balkan States, Central America, Venezuela, and Colombia. With the present organization the commercial attaché service will then cover practically the entire world, and the equipment of this country in this particular branch of trade promotion work will then be equal to that of any other country.

"A similar increase in the bureau's work of promoting trade with Latin America will be requested. This will enable the bureau to conduct a number of special investigations there.

Market Inquiries Abroad.

"It is also planned to take up a series of market investigations abroad for the purpose of placing producers of raw materials and staple products in closer and more intelligent contact with foreign markets. There is a constant demand for information with reference to foreign markets for lumber, coal, fruit, cotton, wheat, flour, rice, &c., and Congress will be asked to make a special appropriation to enable the bureau to study the markets for these products abroad.

"The Secretary will strongly urge Congress to set aside an appropriation, for securing, tabulating, and publishing concrete information with reference to the statistics of internal commerce. It is hoped in this way to provide a record of the movements of traffic on the Great Lakes, coastwise traffic, traffic on rivers and in harbors, and movements of important staple products into and out of important commercial centres.

"The bureau has had for three years a comparatively small appropriation for making studies of the cost of production in this country and abroad of manufactured articles. This work is similar to that done by the Tariff Board. The Secretary will recommend a considerable increase in this work, so as to put it on an effective and efficient basis.

INSTRUCTION.

It Is a School's Work That Counts

CONCENTRATION is the keynote of our work. Before a boy leaves here he has learned once for all to keep his mind on one thing at a time. It is not a cramming process. It is simply utilizing the moments a boy wastes if he lets his mind wander. These records are more than isolated cases. They are representative of the type of work we do. Names and indisputable records on request

Not by Cramming, but by CONCENTRATION

A Boy of 12 in Two Years passed the following Regents subjects:

REFEREE'S NOTICES.

SUPREME COURT, ORANGE COUNTY.—J. BLACKBURN MILLER, Plaintiff, against MINNIE A. COHEN, individually and as Administratrix, etc., et al., Defendants.

In pursuance of a judgment of foreclosure and sale duly granted in the above entitled action on the 25th day of September, 1915, and entered in the office of the Clerk of the County of Orange, N. Y., I, the subscriber, the Referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction at the Exchange Salesroom, Nos. 14-16 Vesey Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 5th day of November, 1915, at twelve o'clock noon on that day, by Joseph P. Day, auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold and therein described as follows:

All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, with the buildings and improvements thereon erected, situate, lying and being in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, and State of New York, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the north side of One Hundred and Thirteenth Street, distant three hundred and ninety-seven feet easterly from the northeasterly corner of Lenox Avenue and One Hundred and Thirteenth Street; running thence northerly parallel with Lenox Avenue, and part of the way through a party wall, one hundred feet eleven inches to the centre line of the block; thence easterly along said center line and parallel with One Hundred and Thirteenth Street eighteen feet; thence southerly parallel with Lenox Avenue, and part of the way through another party wall, one hundred feet eleven inches to the northerly side of One Hundred and Thirteenth Street; and thence westerly along the northerly side of One Hundred and Thirteenth Street eighteen feet to the point or place of beginning.

Dated Newburgh, N. Y., October 11th, 1915.
T. V. W. ANTHONY, Referee.

GRAHAM WITSCHIEF, Plaintiff's Attorney, Brewster Building, Newburgh, N. Y.

The approximate amount of the lien or charge to satisfy which the above described property is to be sold is Ten Thousand Five Hundred Ninety-eight and 03-100 Dollars, with interest thereon from the 25th day of September, 1915, together with costs and allowances amounting to $378.50, with interest thereon from the 25th day of September, 1915, together with the expenses of the sale.

The approximate amount of the taxes, assessments and water rates or other liens, which are to be allowed to the purchaser out of the purchase money or paid by the Referee, is $685.15 and interest.

Dated Newburgh, N. Y., October 11th, 1915.
T. V. W. ANTHONY, Referee.

SWISS TRADE ANALYZED.

Commerce Department Issues Pamphlet for Business Men.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—In order that American business men may be able to procure condensed, authoritative information with respect to the way in which the European nations carry on trade campaigns and organize their commercial activities at home, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, has been issuing pamphlet presentations of the subject, covering several of the leading European countries. Monographs on Germany, France, and the United Kingdom have already appeared, and one on Switzerland is the latest to come from the press.

This booklet, entitled "Commercial Organizations in Switzerland," reviews the history of chambers of commerce and trade, explains the independent and official types of organization and their functions, and gives particular attention to the Swiss Commercial and Industrial Association, which comprises in its membership all Swiss commercial organizations of consequence.

It is No. 101 in the Special Agents Series, and 5 cents will bring it from the Superintendent of Documents.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—A disturbance from British Columbia has reached Manitoba with well-defined formation and it is followed by a rapid and decided rise in pressure, with a marked fall in temperature that covers the entire northwest. Western Nebraska and the Central and Northern portions of the Rocky Mountain and plateau region. There is no precipitation, however, from the disturbance, except in North Dakota. There will be rain Monday or Monday night in the upper lake region and rain or snow Tuesday elsewhere east of the Mississippi. It will be warmer Monday and Tuesday in New England and the Middle Atlantic States.

Winds for Monday and Tuesday: North Atlantic—Moderate northwest and north; Mid dle Atlantic—Moderate north and northeast; South Atlantic—Gentle to moderate variable, mostly east; East Gulf—Gentle east and southeast.

FORECASTS FOR TODAY AND TUESDAY:

Eastern Pennsylvania—Fair Monday, warmer in north; Tuesday fair, warmer.

New England, New Jersey, Delaware—Fair Monday and Tuesday; warmer.

Western New York—Fair, warmer Monday. Tuesday cloudy, colder.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

	1914.	1915.		1914.	1915.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION IN AMERICA AND EUROPE

A further advance in prices both for the railroads and the industrials, but particularly in the latter, was the result of another very busy week on the Stock Exchange. Indications which had seemed to point to an early culmination of the present movement, when prices were halted and in many cases started downward two weeks ago, did not prove trustworthy, for the market last week gained fresh headway, and, on the whole, moved steadily upward. The operators in stocks who have been carrying their purchases on margin have been very fortunate since the Arabic attack, no serious piece of bad news having developed to throw their ranks into confusion. On the contrary, aside from the disquieting reports of the lack of real progress being made by the Allies, news has been of the most encouraging nature. Reports of trade conditions and on the outlook for the United States have borne out the most optimistic predictions of traders who have been active on the buying side. At the close Saturday nearly all of the issues dealt in during the week showed substantial, or, as some would have it, unsubstantial advances. As has been the case for many weeks past, the larger net gains were on the side of the industrial companies, and particularly those which are known to have war contracts. Such stocks as Bethlehem, Baldwin Locomotive, Studebaker, and General Motors seemed to have no level at which traders are not willing to buy them. So rapid has been the advance in these issues that there has been no opportunity for them to become distributed, and the thought of what another Titanic disaster would do to the market is one that holders of stocks hardly dare contemplate.

A more satisfactory feature of last week's market, with its gain in stock prices, was the evidence of a broadening demand for investment bonds. There was unusual activity in this department during the week and prices responded by advances all around. Several of the better known high-grade issues rose from a point to a point and a half. One reason for this is to be found in the fact that new corporation issues have been so few and so small in amount during the past year as to make the floating supply of investment bonds at this time very small. Dealers say that there has not been a period in five years when they have had so few bonds on hand outside of the Anglo-French 5 per cent. notes as at present. This situation is encouraging for the reason that it opens a way to new financing on a large scale by railroads whose credit has not been impaired during the lean years experienced since 1909. Bankers are confident that with the augmented earnings now being reported by standard systems and with a further period of freedom from interference by regulatory commissions it will be possible this Winter to provide large sums for railroad development. The result of the growing demand for investment issues has been a reduction of the yield basis from better than 5 per cent. to between 4½ to 4¾ per cent. Public utilities are sharing in the recovery, and new financing by companies in that field is likely to be a development of the near future. The Anglo-French bonds, of which upward of half have been withdrawn by subscribers to the syndicate for their own investment, are moving out at a satisfactory rate, and despite the opposition to them in the West it now seems likely that the entire amount offered will be placed with investors by the end of the year.

Railroad earnings are necessarily delayed for publication to such a point that they are not a timely indication of the extent of business improvement or depression. There has been a steady improvement since early Summer, which indicates that the figures for the current month will prove very satisfactory indeed. The August earnings, the latest obtainable for any large number of roads, are making a good showing by comparison with the poor earnings a year ago. The improvement in gross for that month was very slight and represented the recovery of only a part of what has been lost in the depression, but the gain in net earnings was considerable. A compilation made by The Financial Chronicle, covering 478 roads, gives the aggregate increase in gross for August as $5,272,000, or only 1.93 per cent., but this gain was accompanied by a decrease of $4,766,000 in expenses, so that there was an addition to net of $10,039,000, which is equivalent to 11.21 per cent. A year ago a similar compilation showed a decrease of $11,326,000 in gross with a reduction of slightly more than that amount in expenses. There has not been such a large gain in net earnings since 1912, and, except for that year, since 1909. If other companies report for September such satisfactory returns as were made Saturday by the Southern Pacific there will be genuine cause for a more hopeful attitude toward railroad investments when the aggregate statement of the railroads for last month is made up.

The foreign exchange situation is, if anything, more confusing and less satisfactory than it was before the adoption of remedies for its relief. From $4.69½ on Monday the rate for demand sterling dropped off day by day, closing on Saturday at $4.62¼. That is the lowest point touched since Sept. 8, and it marks a decline of about 9 cents to the pound sterling from the rate established in anticipation of the arrangement for the two-Power loan. Natural factors are at work, on one side to keep down the bills drawn on London and, on the other, to increase them, but the movement of exchange rates seems to have been influenced more by unseen conditions.

Orders placed in this country for Government supplies, mostly munitions of war, are settled for in dollars. Other exports, such as grain and cotton, are paid for in sterling. The exporters take into account the depreciation in exchange when they make their contracts, but they cannot figure into their prices such losses as have occurred recently, and it is upon them that much of the burden of the demoralized market falls. Bankers say that the sellers of exchange have been coming into the market every afternoon with offerings that might just as well be calculated to depress prices, for the reason that sellers do not wait for a bid, or take advantage of an advantageous market, but dump their bills with little regard to the price received. Some of this exchange appears to have been sold on cables from London, where the market has been regularly depressed below the previous closing quotations in New York. A suspicion that British importers have assisted in the demoralization of the exchange markets in order to profit in their settlements for commodities purchased here may be unjust, but it is one that is being harbored by some of the bankers at this centre. The situation seems to call for action by the London banks, which could co-operate to stabilize rates.

The British Treasury Department could affect a temporary improvement in the situation by selling exchange on New York created by the $500,000,000 loan, but the impression is held here that little will be so disposed of. The Government's payments are so large as to consume all of the credit in a short time, if used entirely for that purpose. Greater promise is held out by the pending negotiations for the establishment of new banking credits without Government assistance, which would be used for private purposes. The English Commissioners were to take this matter up with the joint stock banks today, and confirmation of the terms offered will be received early in the current week. Any credits opened here on behalf of the London banks will be secured by collateral, in accordance with the custom of American institutions of offering collateral to the London banks when they have obtained credits there in past years. A delay in reaching an understanding in this matter might easily prove costly, for the supply of bills falling on the New York market will grow greater rather than less in coming weeks, and the moral effect of the $500,000,000 loan has proved of little avail in holding up exchange. As a matter of fact, bankers who bought sterling when the commission was here in the expectation that something like normal rates would be re-established have been sellers during the past ten days.

The New York Custom House has been so overwhelmed with work that it is suspected with some degree of justification that trade figures now being compiled are not up to date. If that is the case the true excess of exports is probably greater even than that shown by Saturday's figures. Exports reported for the week ended Friday totaled $57,000,000, and for the previous week $54,000,000. The foreign trade statement for the entire country for September showed a remarkable total of merchandise exports, which had been exceeded only once. Imports were also heavier than they were a year ago. The preponderance of exports is not without its disadvantages, but on the whole it is a matter for congratulation that the balance is on the right side. Up to the end of September the credit balance was nearly $1,250,000,000, compared with $60,000,000 a year ago.

LONDON WATCHES WAR CHEST

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 24.—The financial world is giving all its attention to the question of providing means for carrying on the war. The Exchequer balances have been further reduced to £18,000,000, and only about £34,000,000 is still to be received from the 4½ per cent. war loan. Thus available funds are barely sufficient to provide for expenditures to the end of October, especially as from £1,000,000 to £2,000,000 of Treasury bills are falling due daily. A fair amount of fresh bills has been sold at the Bank of England, but the demand is now reduced, as monetary authorities are convinced that the rate on these bills will have to be raised after the final installment on the war loan is paid next Tuesday.

It now appears that a majority of lenders have broken away from the agreement to uphold the rate for money at 4½ per cent. It is probable that early next week there will be some relaxation in the arrangement, although renewed weakness of the New York exchange and heavy exports of gold have caused high authorities to decide upon keeping the money market firm, the Bank of England being prepared to take surplus funds from clearing banks at 4½ per cent. Discount rates responded sharply to this decision, and the quotation for three months has risen from 4⅞ to 4⅞ per cent.

There is still much discussion of the internal political situation, and predictions of Ministerial changes. The resignation of Sir Edward Carson is pointed to as indicating the possibility of such developments. Stocks, however, were not influenced, and the tone remained consistently good last week. Business is broadening, with much activity in the 4½ per cent. war loan, due to the fact that interest of 2½ per cent. is payable Dec. 1, and investors are hastening to convert their stocks into the loan.

Mexican railway, industrial, and mining shares are strong, owing to the rising hopes of a return of peace in Mexico, following the recognition of Carranza. Canadian industrial issues were supported, while a further big rise in International Mercantile Marine provoked fresh comment on the recent reorganization changes. It is rumored here that existing proposals are to be abandoned in favor of a fresh scheme. Steel was buoyant, though not active. Interest in American rails was slight, though there was some buying of Denver.

BOURSE HAS STEADY TONE.

Boom in Mexicans Continues—Some Profit Taking.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—The Bourse was steady last week, a feature being the continuance of the boom in Mexicans. There was some profit taking toward the close, but prices were generally maintained. Russian funds, French industrials, and rubber stocks were firm, while French bank stocks were stronger, notably those of the Bank of France and the Crédit Lyonnais. Americans were also steady, but coppers were very inactive. Rentes closed firm at 60.50.

It is announced that holders of Rentes may exchange for scrip in the coming war loan on preferential terms. It is expected that the price of issue will be 87.50, paying 5 per cent. Provincial banks are already receiving provisional subscriptions, but the issue may be delayed until the Balkan situation becomes clearer.

The moratorium has been prolonged to the end of the year, with official notice that a further extension is doubtful. Cables on New York closed firm at 5.90, and sterling easy at 27.51.

NEW SING SING BANK BACKED BY LEAGUE

Cash Prices for Meals Made Runs on Two Other Private Institutions.

GAMBLERS HAD THE FUNDS

New Prison Reform Committee Will See Gov. Whitman This Week—Will Back Up Warden Osborne.

They are going to open up a new bank in Sing Sing this morning. It won't lend any money, but will play safe by adopting the title of the Mutual Welfare Savings Bank. It has been found essential that one should not carry large sums of cash in one's pocket when one is in Sing Sing. Consequently, several weeks after Warden Osborne had begun paying inmates for their labor there were established two private banking institutions which did a loan business.

The system looked all right until the night when the Warden put in force his order that every one must pay 25 cents in prison coin for his luncheon. Followed a run on the banks when it was found that there was no money in the vaults. It had been loaned to inmates who had gambled it away and could not repay, and the winners could not see any object in depositing their winnings. One hundred and fifty men went hungry that night, and the Directors of the bank were hard to find.

Warden Osborne has straightened that all out, and the new bank will have the guarantee of the league for the safety of deposits. Interest will be paid, and it is the intention of the Warden to arrange that Sing Sing money shall be redeemed at its face value and the inmates be enabled to send their money to their families. It is also planned that an inmate's amount of savings shall play an important part in the deliberations of the Pardon Board.

Mess Hall Loses Patrons.

It was said at Sing Sing last night that the daily attendance at the mess hall had fallen off greatly since the rule of paying for meals went into effect. Since they have to pay, many shun the mess hall and eat what friends send them

Another feature of the installation of the financial system has been that the prison doctors have a great deal less to do. In other times an average of 150 men a day reported that they were too sick to work. A visit to a physician followed, and in due time the prisoners were "cured," in the process getting out of working for a day or so. Then the Warden put a price of 25 cents a visit upon the physician's services. The daily average of sick is now nineteen.

There is great alarm in Sing Sing over the announcement that the Warden will install a tax system, by which inmates will be assessed for a poll tax and on their savings to support those who will not work. The Warden points out that even if the shirkers are put in the "cooler" still they produce nothing, and he hopes to show the men, by forcing them to pay for the support of the non-producers, just what effect they have on society at large when engaged in criminal pursuits.

There was a story told at Sing Sing yesterday that several days ago Warden Osborne got a letter from an "alumnus," saying he had borrowed his mother's rent money in New York to go up-State after a job. He didn't get it, and was broke. He wrote the Warden that he would wait three days to receive the money from him, or he would go out and get it.

"I'm a good thief," he wrote, "and you know I can get it if I have to."

It is said the Warden made the remittance.

Committee to See Whitman.

A committee composed of Adolph Lewisohn, Frank A. Vanderlip, Prof. J. C. Egbert, John J. Manning, Miss Alice Preston, and Judge William H. Wadhams, appointed at a meeting of the New York State Council of the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor, Friday night, has telegraphed to Governor Whitman, asking for an appointment the early part of this week to talk over a general scheme of prison reform for the State, and to insist that Warden Osborne be left unmolested in his work at Ossining. There is a strong conviction on the part of some of the members of the committee that some of the disturbances at Sing Sing receive their impulse from the outside.

The New York Council is perfecting a general plan to care for the families of prisoners, and for the convicts when they get out. At the dinner Friday night, which was held at the Hotel Biltmore, Prof. Egbert told of the work being done at Columbia to train teachers to aid in prison reform. Judge Wadhams pointed out the benefit of the new parole law that goes into effect on Jan. 1. Mr. Manning, an official of the United Garment Workers' Union, said that skilful operating would save $5,000 a year in the Sing Sing tailor shop. Donald C. Townsend, Secretary of the State Council, said the Council would arrange a series of entertainments and lectures to be given at Sing Sing.

"It is a big work," he said, "and we need the aid of all who will help us."

$20 FOR 10 YEARS' WORK.

The suit of Miss Ruth de Rochemont, a teacher and author, against the Boston & Maine Railroad, for $7,000, has just resulted in a verdict for $20. The story of the plaintiff in court was that for ten years she travelled in India, Persia, Europe, and the United States, taking extended notes and making sketches for a comprehensive book on art.

In the Fall of 1911 she gathered these things together and packed them in a box, which, with five other boxes containing household goods, were sent to Portsmouth, to the Boston & Maine Railroad.

All the articles shipped were safely delivered in New York but the box containing the sketches and drawings, which never was heard of afterward.

The railroad answered the suit by saying that when the boxes were accepted by it, Miss de Rochemont's father said all the boxes contained household goods, and intimated that this statement was made to avoid paying the extra rate charged for goods valued at more than $10 per 100 pounds. Miss de Rochemont's father having died before the suit came to trial, it was not possible to refute this evidence.

SEES STATE TAX IN 1916.

Research Bureau Says Glynn Should Have Levied $13,000,000.

The Bureau of Municipal Research, to be made public today on the finances of the State, with special reference to the direct State tax of $20,793,000 levied by the Legislature this year, finds that the tax was necessary owing to the increase in appropriations for 1915-16 and failure to provide the revenue required for the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1915. A direct tax of $13,000,000 should have been levied by the Glynn administration last year, it says.

The bureau says:

"Each Legislature should provide enough sources of revenue to meet the expenditures it authorizes, and should not attempt to postpone tax legislation when it is evident that existing sources of revenue are not sufficient.

"The bureau estimates that $29,300,000 additional revenue will be needed for the next fiscal year with direct taxes of approximately $20,000,000. Regarding the amount of revenue to be derived the report says:

"The 1916 estimated deficit may be wiped out by a continuation of the 'good luck' which has relieved this fiscal year. On the contrary, a reversal of the situation may cause the actual revenues to fall below the estimate. Reasoning from the experience of the past there is little to justify the hope that the year 1916 will terminate with a surplus, even with the direct tax levy."

WIRT CORRECTS AN ERROR.

Says Religious Instruction Is Not Essential to Gary Plan.

William A. Wirt, Superintendent of Public Schools of Gary, Ind., who is putting the Gary system into effect in schools in the Bronx, told the congregation of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church at Eighty-sixth Street and West End Avenue last night that religious instruction outside of the schools was not an original or essential part of the Gary plan.

He said the plan had been in operation for twelve years in Gary before the Church discovered that the system, in seeking to keep children wholesomely busy for as many hours of the day as possible, afforded an opportunity for the churches to employ part of the time of the children in religious education.

He said the leading advantage of the Gary plan was its furtherance of the welfare of the child through the work, study, and play program, which took the child off the streets and kept him congenially employed at various pursuits requiring him to sit at a desk only a limited time. The second advantage was an economic one, from the standpoint of cities, he said, because nearly every city in the United States had many more children than it had school seats. By keeping one set of children at work in school seats for one period and then putting them in the workroom, laboratory, playground, or elsewhere for the rest of the period, it was possible to use the seats for other sets of children during the rest of the day.

"The work, study, and play system was in operation before the religious instruction, and can continue in operation without it," he said. "The religious teaching is not a part of it, and is in no way essential to it.

"But I understand that it is of the greatest importance to the churches. Whether the churches take advantage of the opportunity which can be found under the Gary system is a matter which rests entirely with the churches and parentage of the children and is not connected with the system itself."

Spurt Gives Hickey Victory.

A spurt in the last mile brought T. Hickey of St. Anselm's A. C. home first in the invitation road run of St. Anselm's Club held through the Bronx streets yesterday. J. Barinque of the Fifty-fourth Street Gymnasium and Mike Collins fought for the lead throughout the first three miles. Then keen rivalry cost them an opportunity to be among the first three. Barinque finished fourth.

The Simple Truth

15 YEARS AGO Broadway and vicinity above 110th St. was a dirt road, with Bloomingdale Asylum the only building in sight. Lots were worth about $4,000 to $8,000 each. To-day Columbia University is there, surrounded by solid blocks of 8 to 12 story apartment houses. To-day lots are worth $15,000 to $75,000 each.

10 YEARS AGO on Broadway and vicinity above 135th St. there were only a few scattered houses. Lots were worth about $3,500 to $7,500 each. To-day it is solidly built up. Lots are worth $10,000 to $40,000 each.

6 YEARS AGO at 181st St., Broadway and St. Nicholas Ave. was all vacant lots. Lots were worth in this vicinity about $3,500 to $8,000 each. To-day it's a thickly populated apartment house district. Lots are worth $10,000 to $30,000 each.

4 YEARS AGO the Dyckman District around 207th St. was a wilderness. To-day it is well built up and you can see it growing overnight with 5 and 6 story apartment houses.

2 YEARS AGO there were only a few frame houses around Broadway and 231st St. In the last year 20 to 30 new 5 and 6 story apartment houses have been built.

WITHIN THE LAST 30 DAYS the erection of apartment houses has started at 238th St. and Broadway. Go up and see them.

IT IS A FAIR STATEMENT TO MAKE that within 5 years there will not be a lot around 238th St. and Broadway worth less than $6,000 to $25,000 each. You can't buy any at private sale to-day for less than $3,500 to $6,500 each.

TO-MORROW we are going to sell 329 lots around Broadway and 238th St. for whatever they will bring (and nobody seems to want them.)

U. S. STEEL A YEAR AGO WAS SELLING AT 40. Nobody wanted it. To-day it is selling at 80 per share. If you could buy some at 40 a share, you would jump at it, wouldn't you?

YOU MAY BE ABLE TO BUY LOTS intrinsically worth to-day $3,000 to $6,000 each for $600, $800 or $1,000 each—perhaps less—(only 30% cash)—if you would buy Steel at 40 why shouldn't you buy these lots at that price?—and in a few years this neighborhood will be built up and these same lots worth $6,000 to $20,000 each. Can there be a safer, sounder or saner way of investing a few hundred dollars? Are you not sure to make money? And you can't lose.

IF YOU HAVE ANY PAPER PROFITS in Wall Street, if the market turns you are apt to lose it all. Put some of those profits in these lots; you are sure to have something and make money besides.

THERE IS ALWAYS A PERIOD when Real Estate takes a sudden jump. That period is due now, and the buyers at this sale will have bought at the bottom and get the benefit of the quick rise in Real Estate.

OLCOTT SAYS BROWN WILL LOSE POWER

Believes Senator Opposes Constitution Only for Selfish Reasons.

HE BOSSES UPPER HOUSE

Increased Power of Governor Would Weaken His—Other Arguments Answered in Detail.

William M. K. Olcott, Republican, delegate to the Constitutional Convention, yesterday answered the arguments of Senator Elon R. Brown, Republican, against the proposed constitution. He said that the Senator from Watertown knew he would lose his power as dictator of the upper house of the Legislature if the proposed changes were ratified.

"It is very easy to see," said Mr. Olcott, "that the Senator can see himself shorn of much of his acquired power as a ruler of the Senate if the Governor is given much of the power now vested in the Legislature. Just as the Senator's word was law in the upper house last Winter, just so his word was law when it came to the ratification of the Governor's appointments. Naturally the man who loves this power as he does doesn't want to lose it.

"The Senator says that to the President of the United States has never been given the power of budget making conferred upon the Governor in the proposed constitution. But the President could not make himself acquainted with the detailed needs of the far-separated sections of the United States as the Governor can make himself acquainted with the needs of New York State.

"Pork Barrel" in Danger.

"I see that the Senator is vehement against the provision of the constitution which nails the lid tight forever on the 'pork barrel' by providing that no local appropriations shall be made without the certificate of the Commissioner of Public Works. I expected him to be against that, but I thought he had a stronger reason. His objection is that there would be great delay in time of flood, fire, or other calamity in securing relief. What makes the Senator think that it would take the Commissioner of Public Works an undue length of time to certify to the necessity of relief? The carnage of calamity is not the Senator's fear; he fears for the pork.'

"Of the budget plan, the Senator says that all we aim to accomplish can be accomplished through having one annual supply bill and one appropriation bill. But that would be no guarantee that there would be no repetition of the disgraceful scene of passing that appropriation bill in the last hours of the session, when not even the men voting for it know what is in it. It's publicity for public expenditures we want, and one or a dozen appropriation bills framed in the privacy of a committee room would not attain ou rworthy object.

Defends Home Rule Planks.

"When it comes to home rule, the Senator wants to know why we can't advocate home rule for cities of less than 100,000. That is because we had to set a standard when a community was large enough to govern itself and to be responsible. If every hamlet would make laws unto itself, we could have Mormons come to this State and get home rule, doing as they liked in defiance of public interest. We had to draw the line, and we thought 100,000 population a proper standard.

"Then the Senator says we go against home rule in the taxation article, because we abolish lobal Boards of Assessors. I will answer the Senator by saying that we make the county a unit and give it home rule, just as we made a city of 100,000 population a unit for home rule.

"The Senator attacks the provision allowing the Legislature to restrict manufacture in tenements as an invasion of private property rights. I say it is an extension of the rights of the public.

"The Senator says we had no business to raise the pay of legislators and then give them less to do. I reply that we raised the pay so that better men could afford to go to Albany than have been there in the past.

"Generally speaking, we believed that if the Governor were given more power and more responsibility, he would be a better man. I mean the people would elect a better man. With the great power we give him the people of the State would never elect a William Sulzer. The political parties would be more careful of their nominees, knowing the fate awaiting failure.

"If the Senator loves his job of bossing the Senate and appointees, instead of the Governor bossing appointees, it is good personal policy for him to fight the Constitution—but it is poor public policy."

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

Committee Replies to Objections to New Constitution.

The Committee for the Adoption of the Constitution yesterday issued these answers to criticisms of the proposed Constitution:

Objection 1—That the rights of citizens are put at the mercy of military tribunals.

Answer—The proposed Constitution continues every constitutional guarantee which since 1821 has protected the citizens of this State, and to have inserted the proposition urged by Judge Cullen would not have strengthened them. The cases he cites in West Virginia occurred in spite of the fact that the Constitution in that State contains a prohibition against military tribunals.

Objection 2—That the rights of labor were impaired and its recommendations flouted and ignored.

Answer—The Constitutional Convention turned down every proposal which would have limited the power of the Legislature to extend remedial and social legislation in the future. In addition, the convention adopted provisions putting beyond question the ability of the Legislature to extend workmen's compensation to occupational diseases and to regulate or prohibit manufacturing in tenement houses. In no Constitution yet proposed in this State have the proposals of organized labor received more consideration than at the hands of the convention just adjourned.

Objection 3—That the home-rule article throws schoolteachers and education into local politics.

Answer—this is entirely false. Commissioner John H. Finley, head of the State Department of Education, says. "Friends of education have no cause for concern over the provisions of the proposed Constitution touching the schools."

Objection 4—That the home-rule article takes "court review" away from policemen and firemen.

Answer—This is wholly untrue. "Court review" is neither abolished nor extended.

Objection 5—That the proposed Constitution was drawn in the interests of corporations.

Answer—This is both malicious and untrue. The only specific instance quoted is the provision that there shall be public service commissions. Without maintaining that these commissions have been all that are to be desired, they are infinitely better than their only alternative—which is regulation by special acts of the Legislature. This situation was nearly hopeless until Governor Hughes insisted upon the establishment of public service commissions. The Constitutional Convention put his remedy into the Constitution.

The Governor has power of removal of members of commissions, and they may also be impeached by the Legislature.

Objection 6—That the proposed conservation article is in the interest of lumbering interests and that the large commission would be an irresponsible body.

Answer—Both are false. The proposed Constitution provides. (Article 7, Section 1:)

"No person shall be eligible to or shall continue to hold the office of Commissioner who is engaged in any business in the prosecution of which hydraulic power is used or in which water is distributed or sold under any public franchise or who is an officer or holder of the stock or bonds of any corporation engaged in such business within the State. They shall be subject to removal by the Governor on charges after an opportunity to be heard."

The commission insures a continuous policy and to prevent frequent and unnecessary changes due to the ups and downs of political parties.

The proposed Constitution contemplates a broader and more vigorous conservation policy. It provides for State aid for reforestation and makes sure that the future policy of conservation of our natural resources shall be continuous.

Objection 7—That the proposed reorganization of State departments into seventeen great departments will put the State in a "straightjacket," and turn over the patronage to a Republican Governor.

Answer—The seventeen departments cannot be reconstituted under some different name, or in a slightly different way, merely in order to legislate somebody out of office and somebody else into office.

The proposed Constitution requires that this reorganization is not to become effective until Jan. 1, 1917. The powers granted under it, therefore, will be vested only in the next Governor of the State to be elected in November, 1916.

Objection 8—That the proposed Constitution is a partisan document.

Answer—With the exception of the reapportionment article, every important change in the proposed Constitution was voted for by a majority of both Republican and Democratic delegates. Although it was entirely in their power, the Republican majority refused to redistrict the State for their political advantage.

Objection 9—That the reapportionment article makes this a "rotten borough" Constitution.

Answer—The proposed Constitution continues just exactly those limitations on the representation of a part of New York City, and the guarantee of one Assemblyman to each county, however small, contained in the present Constitution. If you wish to express your disapproval of the limitation on New York City representation, or of the right of each county to one Assemblyman you can do so by voting "no" on Question 2. It was to give an opportunity for such a protest that this article was separately submitted.

Objection 10—That the Constitution should have been submitted article by article.

Answer—This might have been the appropriate method if the convention had done nothing but suggest scattered changes on unrelated subjects. However, each important reform supports and supplements some other reform. If these various articles were submitted separately and some of them defeated, provisions with regard to the Governor and the Legislature would be blocked Stebbins Avenue, and pledges and checks aggregating $3,500 were taken up. It was also announced that the children of the Sunday School, who had been "selling bricks" for the new synagogue at 10 cents apiece for several weeks, had collected $1,500.

The new synagogue will cost about $95,000, and it is expected that it will be ready, for occupancy next Summer. The foundation has been completed and the vestry room will be ready for occupancy in about six weeks. While awaiting the completion of the new building the congregation is holding services at Union Avenue and Westchester Avenue. It has already disposed of its old synagogue at Willis Avenue and 145th Street.

WOMAN BREAKS UP A DEBATE.

Wants Ballot Delayed a Year, "When We'll All Vote."

A woman who attended a debate on the Constitution at the Free Synagogue, 36 West Sixty-eighth Street, last night, between Herbert Parsons and Amos R. E. Pinchot, requested permission to ask a question. When consent had been given by Abram I. Elkus, who presided, she said:

"I think a great many of us must feel confused; feel that we don't know which way to vote on this new Constitution. We have heard eminent men tell us that it is a very good thing. Others just as eminent have said it must be defeated for the good of the State. Whom are we to believe? I am sure that the majority of voters don't know much about this proposed Constitution. It has come upon us very suddenly and seems to be a rather complicated document. Is it right to ask for a vote so soon?"

Several in the audience started to applaud this view of the situation, but the woman stopped them by raising her hand.

"Why not," she continued, "wait a year or so? Then we will know a lot more about this Constitution, and we women will have the right to vote on it by that time."

Half of those in the audience were women, and there was a hearty outburst of applause, which gained in volume as the men, or most of them, joined in. No one ventured to answer the questioner, and Mr. Elkus smiled and admitted that the honors for the time being were all with the women.

Mr. Parsons added to the enthusiasm by stating that he had to hurry away from the meeting to address another gathering, this time in favor of giving the vote to women.

"I wouldn't miss the opportunity even to remain with you," he said, and there was more cheering as he left the hall.

Mr. Pinchot was harsh in his criticism of the proposed executive budget. A man who had been listening intently asked him how it came about that the Constitution was so bad.

"Who should have drawn the Constitution?" he asked. "There were men of the highest calibre there, men whom we have learned to respect because of their great knowledge. Do you mean that they did not know how to draw up this Constitution? Do you ask us to vote against it because they did not know how to draft a Constitution?"

"I do not," retorted Mr. Pinchot. "I ask you to vote against it because they did know how to draft a Constitution."

The bit of sarcasm was greeted by laughter.

LAY CORNERSTONE FOR SINAI TEMPLE

Adolph Lewisohn Spreads Mortar with Engraved Silver Memorial Trowel.

PRAISE JEWS' AMERICANISM

Idea of Freedom on Which United States Was Founded First Uttered by Moses.

More than 1,000 persons witnessed the laying of the cornerstone of the new Sinai Temple in Stebbins Avenue, near East 163d Street, the Bronx, yesterday afternoon. Adolph Lewisohn, who gave the stadium to the College of the City of New York, spread the mortar with a silver trowel, which had been engraved with his name for him to retain as a souvenir. Among the donations received during the day for the building fund was $500 from Mr. Lewisohn.

In a brief address Mr. Lewisohn spoke of the importance of the synagogue in American Jewish life, and said that he was glad to see, in the building of the new Sinai Temple, "another link in the great chain of institutions intended for the moral and spiritual development of the people."

The principal speaker was Rabbi J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburgh, who talked of the place the Jew occupies in American life, and said that the Jews had done as much for this country as the people of any other creed or nationality.

"The idea on which the United States was founded," said Rabbi Levy, "was not an idea of the time of the Revolution, or even of the time of the discovery of America. That idea had its inception when Moses said, 'Let the people go free to worship.' It was then that the United States really was born, even though it was to be centuries before America was discovered."

Borough President Douglas Mathewson also spoke and congratulated the Jews on their "Americanism."

"You hear a great deal of the hyphenated Americans at the present time," Mr. Mathewson said. "I personally don't believe they are such a menace as many seem to think them, but to me it is significant that we never hear of the hyphen being used to designate the Jew. There is the American Jew, but not the Jewish American. The fact is recognized that the Jew becomes really American, and is American before anything else."

Mr. Mathewson referred to the important rôle the Jew has played in American history, and then said, "The Jew can show as clear a title to Americanism as anybody can."

The Rev. Dr. M. H. Harris presided at the early part of the ceremony, after which Assemblyman Fertig took charge. The Rev. Dr. Max Reichler, rabbi of the Sinai Congregation, read from the Scriptures. Contribution slips were passed among the audience, which blocked Stebbins Avenue, and pledges and checks aggregating $3,500 were taken up. It was also announced that the children of the Sunday School, who had been "selling bricks" for the new synagogue at 10 cents apiece for several weeks, had collected $1,500.

The new synagogue will cost about $95,000, and it is expected that it will be ready, for occupancy next Summer. The foundation has been completed and the vestry room will be ready for occupancy in about six weeks. While awaiting the completion of the new building the congregation is holding services at Union Avenue and Westchester Avenue. It has already disposed of its old synagogue at Willis Avenue and 145th Street.

WOMEN HELD AS GAMBLERS.

Prisoners Taken In Saturday's Fatal Raid to be Heard Thursday.

The women who were arrested on Saturday when detectives raided the apartment of Miss Mary Ramsey, 107 West 126th Street, were arraigned yesterday before Magistrate Appleton in Harlem Court, with several others who were arrested on John and Jane Doe warrants. In all seven women and three men were up on gambling charges.

"You women gambled while the suffrage parade was going on?" the Magistrate asked. "Surely you don't care much about the vote."

Magistrate Appleton postponed the examination until Thursday. Mrs. Isabella Dore of 162 West 128th Street, charged with making a book on horse races and maintaining a gambling house, was held in $1,000 bail. Mary Smith of 162 West Eighteenth Street and John Coleman of 1,383 Clinton Avenue, the Bronx, were put under $1,000 bail for making books, and the rest were held in $500 bail each.

Before the arraignment Deputy Police Commissioner Dunham took statements from the prisoners as to whether detectives displayed revolvers and thus shocked Mrs. Emma Casey of 200 West Twenty-first Street, who died from fright during the raid. The statements he received were not disclosed.

MAYOR GUEST OF BUTCHERS.

Parade from City Hall for Opening of New Washington Market.

The new Washington Market will be formally opened this morning with a parade and ceremonies in which thousands will participate as principals or spectators. The paraders will assemble at City Hall at 10 o'clock and march to the market. They will be headed by the Exempt Firemen, who had their headquarters in the old Washington Market, and following will be Borough President Marks, Commissioner of Public Works Folks, Deputy Commissioner of Public Works Boschen, Superintendent of Public Buildings and Offices Hines, and 300 citizens of the Marks-Folks Market Committee.

The speakers at the market will be Mayor Mitchel, Controller Prendergast, President McAneny of the Board of Aldermen, Borough President Marks, and Commissioner Folks.

A buffet luncheon will be served to Mayor Mitchel in the market by Paul A. Henkel, a great grandson of the Paul Henkel who served a luncheon to the city officials at the opening of the original Washington Market in 1813. Much of the identical silverware used on the earlier occasion will be used today.

Each day of this week will witness some form of celebration to mark the opening of the new market. The principal days will be Friday and Saturday, when representatives of the Housewives' League will give instructions on how supplies should be purchased. Special prices will obtain.

The new market represents a property value of nearly $2,000,000. The city has spent more than $132,000 in improvements on the market and merchants have spent nearly $500,000. The market has done an annual business of $5,000,000 supplying food to restaurants and hotels which feed 1,000,000 persons a day. Efficiency and sanitation have been the first consideration in reconstructing the market.

STATE FIGHTS MOSQUITOS.

Health Department Will Drain Marshland Breeding Places.

ALBANY, Oct. 24.—An active campaign for the elimination of mosquitos through the drainage of marshlands has been begun by the State Department of Health.

The Public Health Council has passed a tentative regulation, and a hearing will be given by the council at the Academy of Medicine in New York on Nov. 9 at 10 A. M. This hearing will determine what changes, if any, should be made in the council's tentative regulation.

29 DAYS IN JAIL FOR CHARLTON

Sentenced to 6 Years and 8 Months, but Amnesty and Long Imprisonment Reduce Term.

PRISONER IS GRATIFIED

Will Visit and Thank Friends at Como Before Returning to This Country.

PROSECUTOR WAS SEVERE

Wanted the Full Penalty for Young American Who Slew His Wife in 1910.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COMO, Oct. 25.—The trial of Porter Charlton for the murder of his wife here in 1910 was ended today, the young American being sentenced to six years and eight months' imprisonment.

The jury held that Charlton was only partially responsible, and that there were extenuating circumstances. He will serve only twenty-nine days in prison, owing to amnesty.

The term to which he is sentenced is reduced by the time he has been under restraint. Moreover, a year is deducted under the amnesty for all offenses committed before Italy entered the war.

The last day of the trial saw an oratorical duel between the Crown Prosecutor, Signor Mellini, and the lawyers for the defense. The crowd was greater than on any previous day of the trial, those present including many women.

Signor Mellini depicted Charlton in most unfavorable terms, his speech being frequently interrupted not only by the lawyers for the defense, but also by the prisoner. Baron Sciacca, the President of the Court, severely repressed the prisoner's interruptions. The Crown Prosecutor declared that there was nothing that extenuated Charlton's crime, and hinted, indeed, that he might be tried for other violations of the law. He said it was necessary for the dignity of the Italian courts to make an example of the accused, and demanded that the maximum penalty be imposed.

The Crown Prosecutor was followed by Signor Cattaneo for the defense. He has befriended Charlton since he was first imprisoned here. He declared that it would be monstrous to condemn the prisoner, who was an epileptic, for a crime that he committed while he was in a condition of irresponsibility and obeying an irresistible impulse. He said his own sincere opinion was that Charlton should be acquitted, but otherwise he asked the jury to show mercy.

Signor Micelli-Picardi followed with a powerful speech. He described Charlton as an infant dragged by fate to ruin, and implored the jury not to commit the injustice of condemning him, as he was utterly irresponsible for his actions when he killed his wife.

COMO, Oct. 25.—In the course of his speech at the Charlton trial today, Crown Prosecutor Mellini denied that Charlton had provocation for killing his wife, and insinuated that he married her for her savings and had appropriated her jewels after killing her.

Baron Sciacca, the presiding judge, before the case went to the jury, asked Charlton whether he had anything to add to the defense. With tears in his eyes, Charlton exclaimed:

"I trust entirely to Italian justice. I can only say that I am a most unfortunate man."

Even though he was greatly pleased by the verdict of the court and viewed with pleasure his approaching liberation from custody, Charlton maintained his usual restrained and almost passive attitude. He thanked all those about him for their congratulations.

Charlton said that after his release he would return to the United States and join his family. Before departure, however, he said he would visit and personally thank friends in Como who had, by their kindnesses, lightened the hours of his captivity, and especially Ambassador Thomas Nelson Page, who, as the representative of the American Government, had seen that his legal rights were observed.

CASE AN INVOLVED ONE.

Charlton Fled Here After the Murder—Not Extradited Till 1913.

Because of its legal entanglements, resulting in a delay of more than five years before the prisoner, a self-confessed murderer, was brought to the bar, as well as the prominent family connections of Charlton and his wife and his extreme youth, the Charlton case has gone down as one of the most interesting recent chapters in criminal history.

The prisoner, a slender, shy young man—he is but 26 years old now—was married to a woman many years his senior. He is the son of Judge Paul Charlton of the Porto Rican courts, a classmate at Yale of ex-President Taft. He married the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle of Nome, Alaska, and a sister of Captain Henry Harrison Scott of the United States Army. They lived in New York a while and then went abroad.

The news of Mrs. Charlton's murder came by cable from Milan on June 10, 1910. Her body, stuffed in a trunk, was found by fishermen in Lake Como, near the village of Moltrasio. The back of her skull was crushed, as if with a heavy club or iron bar, and her arms and shoulders showed signs of brutal handling. Charlton had disappeared.

The Charltons, it was learned, had come there several weeks before and had gone to live in a villa which they had rented from a Russian. Persons who lived near by said that Charlton and his wife, whom they knew as Mr. and Mrs. Porter, had quarreled frequently

NEARLY ALL PERISHED ON PRINZ ADALBERT

BERLIN, Oct. 25, (via London.)—Only a small part of the crew of the German cruiser Prinz Adalbert, sunk by a British submarine in the Baltic, was rescued. This was made known in the following official statement today:

"A telegram from the Naval General Staff, dated Oct. 23, states that the cruiser Prinz Adalbert was sunk by two shots from an enemy submarine off Libau. Unfortunately, only a small portion of the crew could be rescued."

The complement of the Prinz Adalbert was 557 men. An official announcement from Petrograd yesterday said that she had been sunk.

WIRELESS TELEPHONE TESTS CUT SHORT

Must Stop Talking to France Because of Interference With Important War Dispatches.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 25.—Arlington, Va., again established wireless telephone connection with the Eiffel Tower early this morning and, as on several previous occasions recently, talked clearly with H. E. Shreeve of the American Telegraph and Telephone Company, who is here in connection with the experiments.

The French Government, however, regrets to announce that the experiments must cease for the present owing to the interruption caused by them of important war messages. Although the experiments have proved successful it is probable nothing further in that direction will be tried until a transmission station has been built on this side, which hardly will be possible before the termination of hostilities.

SLAY ALL ARMENIANS IN CITY OF KERASUNT

Turks Wipe Out Entire Population in Town on the Black Sea.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 26.—A dispatch to The Daily Mail from Odessa says:

"The Turks have massacred the entire Armenian population of Kerasunt, on the Black Sea."

Kerasunt is a seaport in Asiatic Turkey, about seventy miles west of Trezbizond. It is situated on a rocky promontory, with a spacious bay on the east side. The heights surrounding are covered with luxurious vegetation. The population of Karasunt is about 24,000.

LONDON, Oct. 25. — An eyewitness story of Armenian atrocities, given to the British staff at the Dardanelles by an Armenian prisoner who was serving in the Turkish Army, is sent by the Reuter correspondent with the Dardanelles fleet. This Armenian says the declaration of martial law at Zile included the confiscation of all Armenian property.

He describes how women were tied to the tails of oxcarts and exposed to hunger and rough weather until they accepted conversion to Islam or death; how mothers were bayonetted before the eyes of their children, and how Armenian girls were distributed as chattels among civil and military officials.

The prisoner says that as a soldier he was compelled to assist in many massacres, being on one occasion a member of a party of forty soldiers which superintended the death of 800 Armenians. His account closes as follows:

"There is reason to believe that German advisers of the Turks have urged upon them the undesirability of allowing a large alien and presumably unfriendly population to inhabit ports which lie open to Russian attack."

MALLORY SHIP BURNS WITH BIG COTTON CARGO

Freighter Colorado Destroyed off Georgia Coast—Crew Picked Up at Sea.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 25.—In a wireless message to the Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company today, Captain Clarence Kirwan of the steamship Suwanee announced that last night he rescued the crew of the Mallory Line freighter Colorado, cotton laden, which caught fire at sea.

Captain Kirwan said he came upon the burning steamer near Cape Romain, off the Georgia coast, about twenty miles north of the mouth of the Savannah River. According to his message, the Colorado already had been abandoned. It was a moonlight night and the sea was calm. The Colorado's men were evidently taken from the boats. The Colorado was bound for New York from Charleston.

Special to The New York Times.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Oct. 25.—The crew of the steamer Colorado of the Mallory Line, Charleston to New York, with cotton, which was abandoned, burning, off Cape Romain, is reported off Tybee tonight on board the steamer Lenape. The vessel is bound for New York.

The crew of the Colorado was picked up by the steamer Suwannee of the Merchants' and Miners' Transportation Company, which left Savannah Sunday afternoon en route to Baltimore.

It is said the burning liner will be a total loss. Several tugs and other vessels are standing by. The Colorado carried 5,000 bales of cotton. It is not known how the fire started.

No word has been received so far at the office of the Mallory Line regarding the cause of the fire aboard the steamer Colorado. Captain Congdon sent a wireless message yesterday morning from the steamer Suwanee saying that he and the crew of thirty-seven officers and men were safe on board the Suwanee and expected to reach Baltimore tonight.

RUSSIANS BEGIN GENERAL ADVANCE

Petrograd Plans Have Been Helped by the German Concentration in North.

BIG RESULTS PREDICTED

Meanwhile the Germans Are Pushing Forward to Take Dvinsk by Flank Movements.

BOTH SIDES ACTIVE THERE

Austrians Said to Have Broken Russian Line on a Two-Mile Front.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 26.—A general advance is now well under way on the Russian front, according to the Petrograd correspondent of the Morning Post, who intimates that the Russian military plans are being furthered by the German concentration of troops in the north in the attempt to gain Dvinsk and Riga.

The correspondent writes:

"The Germans have temporarily abandoned frontal attacks on Dvinsk and now put all their hopes in a variety of manoeuvres to capture it by flank approaches.

"It is now pretty plainly indicated that their attempts to get across the Dvina are being concentrated at two points, the northerly being an island six or eight miles long and two miles broad, which divides the Dvina stream a few miles southeast of Riga, and the southerly being about Illoukst.

"The island above Riga offers certain facilities for bridging, and judging by the intensity of bombardment now being maintained by the Germans on this spot, bridging operations are beginning.

"From a strategic point of view, the whole German scheme toward Riga, Dvinsk and the Dvina River generally seems doomed to prove another fiasco, for the most important work at present is going on in a region about which officially nothing is heard.

"The Russian plans are well served by the concentration of the German forces to the northward. This produces precisely those conditions which were postulated by the Russian plans, and before the Winter closes down there are likely to be some brilliant results from the general advance now well under way on the Russian front."

Russians Attack in the North.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 26.—The Russians are fighting pitched battles in the Riga and Dvinsk regions in an effort to retake the ground won from them by Field Marshal von Hindenburg last week. The Russian attacks southeast of Riga have been repulsed, according to the Germans, as were those undertaken northwest of Dvinsk. The German forces, however, which crossed the Illoukst, north of the town of that name, withdrew in the face of a superior Russian army.

It is also asserted by the Germans that Russian attacks in the lake district south of Dvinsk were repulsed, and that the Austrians have broken through the Russian lines over a front of more than four kilometers west of Komarow.

The German campaign in Courland is being interfered with by British and Russian submarines, which have stopped all mercantile traffic to the Baltic ports, and one of which has sunk the cruiser Prinz Adalbert.

The official report from Berlin says:

Group of Field Marshal von Hindenburg: South of Kekkau, southeast of Riga, a Russian attack was repulsed.

Counterattacks made by the Russians against position taken by us on the 25th northwest of Dvinsk failed. The number of prisoners has now increased to 22 officers and 3,705 men. Twelve machine guns and one mine thrower were captured.

Weak German forces which had advanced north of Illoukst, over the sector of the same name, withdrew to the western bank of the river before the attack was carried out by superior forces.

North of the Dreswiaty Lake Russian attacks against our positions near the Gateni frontier valley were unsuccessful.

Group of Prince Leopold of Bavaria: The position is unchanged.

Group of General von Linsingen: West of Komarow the Austrian troops have penetrated the enemy position over a front four and one-half kilometers wide.

This report of the operation in the Russian theatre of war was issued by the Austria War Office:

Near Novo Alexiniec we recaptured heights east of Lopaszno, which we evacuated Friday. Near Czartorysk our attacks are progressing. Near Komarow we repulsed the enemy.

Otherwise the situation is unchanged.

The official bulletin from Petrograd says:

In the Riga region the fighting continues. South of Lake Babite the Germans unsuccessfully assumed the offensive. In the region of Olai there was an artillery duel.

On the left of the Dvina, south of the Ikskue Railway, the Germans launched several attacks, some of great ferocity. Five attacks were repulsed. During the sixth a party of Germans succeeded in penetrating one of our works. Our troops, fighting with courage and determination, cut up the great majority of the Germans and captured the rest. The attack was finally repulsed.

On the front, in the region of Freidrichstadt, there were small engagements on the Dvina River. On the left bank of the Dvina, northwest of Jacobstadt, and in the forest region west of Liwenhof, there have been only actions by small detachments.

Near Dvinsk, in the region east of Illoukst, various fighting which the advancing eGrmans continues incessantly. After the occupation of Illoukst, the Germans attmpted to develop their offensive, but were stopped on the border of the forest, west of Illoukst.

Enemy attempts to make progress to the east of the village of Pochlitsa, and toward the south of Illoukst, were repulsed.

South of Lake Mezoum the artillery fighting is very violent. There are also artillery duels on the Demmen

BRITISH TRAITOR GETS LIFE TERM FOR SPYING

Sentenced in a Civil Court, He Has the Right of Appeal.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—It is officially announced that a British subject has been tried and convicted in the Old Bailey Court on three counts of an indictment charging espionage and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

The prisoner has the right to appeal.

ART WORKS RUINED IN AIR RAIDS ON VENICE

Tiepolo's Frescoes Were the Glory of the Wrecked Church of the Scalzi.

ROME, Oct. 25, (via Paris.)—Enemy aeroplanes last night made two separate attacks on Venice, and this morning at 8:40 o'clock three Austrian machines dropped several bombs on the city, slightly injuring three persons, but doing insignificant material damage.

In the earlier bombardment, however, Italy suffered the first serious loss of art treasures which she has experienced in the present war. One of the bombs fell upon the roof of a church and crushed the ceiling ornamented with frescoes by Tiepolo. Another missile fell upon the piazzetta of the Cathedral of St. Mark and in front of the Palace of the Doges.

The text of the statement follows:

Enemy aeroplanes made two attacks, separated by a short interval, upon Venice last night, throwing many bombs, some of which were incendiary. The first attack was at about 10 P. M.

One bomb fell on the roof of the Church of the Scalzi. It crushed the ceiling, which was ornamented with beautiful frescoes of Tiepolo. An incendiary bomb fell upon the Piazzetta of the Cathedral of St. Mark, in front of the Palace of the Doges, without doing any damage. Five other bombs fell either in canals or upon places in the city where only slight damage was produced.

The aeroplanes returned at about 11 P. M. One bomb fell in the court of an almshouse and set fire to piles of wood. Two other bombs exploded without doing any damage. No one was hurt.

The Rome newspapers express great indignation at the bombardment of the famous Scalzi Church in Venice and the destruction of the Tiepolo frescoes. The news of the bomb attack on Venice has stirred the people of Rome to an extraordinary degree.

The Giornale d'Italia, in announcing the partial destruction of the edifice, concludes with the hope that "the pious Emperor and his faithful Archdukes may be happy that the weight of their wrath has fallen upon the Church."

The frescoed ceiling in the Church of the Scalzi at Venice was one of the best known works of Giovanni Battista Tiepolo. The church itself is a fine example of the rococo style of architecture—according to some authorities the second best specimen of this debased post-Renaissance style in Venice.

Tiepolo's ceiling represented various subjects, the most important being "Angels Bearing the Casa Santa from Nazareth to Loreto." The Casa Santa is the house at which, according to the legend, Christ lived at Nazareth, which was carried by angels to Dalmatian coast in 1291, after the Holy Land was abandoned to the Saracens, and which was as mysteriously transferred to its present site three years later. Loreto has for years been one of the great Catholic pilgrimage resorts.

Tiepolo painted the ceiling in 1743-1744. He was born in 1696 and died in 1770. He was the last great master of the Venetian school of painting, a contemporary of Goldoni, the playwright, whose appearance in the world of letters so long after the Renaissance had run its course was almost as remarkable as that of Tiepolo in the realm of art.

Tiepolo's work, which is found all over Venice, is notable for great delicacy of coloring and infinite variety of fancy.

RUMANIA CLOSES FRONTIER TO BULGARS

Refuses to Allow Transit of Goods and Searches Passengers and Luggage.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 25, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—As Bulgaria has arbitrarily refused to allow the transit to Rumania of goods landed at Saloniki, even when they were imported before the outbreak of war, Rumania is retaliating by refusing to allow the transit of Bulgarian goods.

She has therefore practically closed her frontier, and commercial relations between the two States are completely interrupted.

Meanwhile the surveillance of passengers bound for Bulgaria has increased. Luggage is carefully searched, and attempts at smuggling are often frustrated.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 25.—Notwithstanding more encouraging news from Serbia, much apprehension is expressed here over the course of events in Rumania. It is thought her isolation will force her to abandon her neutrality.

The imminent Ministerial crisis is not regarded as a favorable sign for the Quadruple Entente. Fears are expressed that the Germanophile Ministry will dominate popular opinion. Italians are not very hopeful of the final outcome, and urge the Allies to be ready for the worst.

Another delayed official statement, filed on Saturday at Nish by the correspondent of the Paris Havas Agency, follows:

One of our columns made a counter-attack on the right bank of the Mlawa, in the direction of Alloud-Dva, on Oct. 21. We took two mountain cannon, two machine guns, and two field kitchens. We also made successfully another counterattack at the village of Rachatza and captured horses and machine guns.

Fighting continued with desperation on the northern front on Oct. 22, but without change of position.

On the eastern (Bulgarian) front the situation is unchanged, although fighting continues. Engagements occurred in new regions—Krivola, Veles, and Skotlie.

Allies Tell Serbs to Hold Out Five Days, Then Aid Will Come

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 26.—The Allies have asked the Serbian headquarters to resist the Teutons and Bulgarians for only five days more, by which time effective aid from the Allies will be forthcoming, says The Daily Telegraph's Nish correspondent under date of Sunday.

The correspondent adds that, judging by the fine spirit the Serbian troops are displaying, they can hold out double that time.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATHENS, Oct. 25, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—Today's news of land fighting is favorable to the Serbians, with the exception of that near Pozarevec, where the Serbians were forced to withdraw a few kilometers to higher and better ground. The Serbians continue to hold their own and the Bulgarians have suspended operations to reorganize their forces.

Increasing arrivals of allied troops daily are stiffening the Serbian resistance. In the section nearest the Greek frontier the fighting last Thursday between Bulgarians and French was very sanguinary. The French lost 500 killed and double that number wounded, but finally the Bulgarians were driven out of Valandovo and Rabrovo along the carriage road connecting Strumitza with the railway and the Vardar River.

According to authentic news from Sofia, Bulgarian wounded from Pirot and the Timok Valley are arriving in thousands, and the spectacle is not without effect on the civilian population. Even military circles are unable to conceal their dismay, for they had been led to believe that the main brunt of the invasion of Serbia would be borne by the Austro-Germans from the north, and that Bulgaria's rôle would be that of an auxiliary. Now the discovery has been made that the Austro-German force is entirely insufficient and consequently this has not failed to depress Bulgarian army circles.

A similar effect has been produced by the bombardment of the Bulgarian Aegean coast by the allied fleet, for, despite the Bulgarian official bulletins, considerable damage has been inflicted. At Porto-Lagos the ships directed a rapid fire upon a large military encampment which in a few minutes resulted in 15,000 soldiers being killed and wounded. It appears that the allied ships moved about with perfect freedom during the bombardment.

The bombardment of Dedeagatch on Thursday was especially severe. Most of the houses were destroyed and fires broke out, completing the destruction. Both the railway stations, the train warehouses, the Customs House, the great steam flour mill, and the first bridge on the Anatolian Railway lines were entirely destroyed and also all the shipping and lighters in the harbor. Of course, the barracks were the first to suffer. More than 1,000 soldiers were killed in the burned ruins and a large number were wounded. The civilian victims numbered only ten, of whom two were women, the civil population having fled from the town immediately upon the approach of the bombarding squadron.

I am informed on good authority that the Greek staff are beginning to see that the German invasion of Serbia was more or less a piece of bluff to entice Bulgaria into the war. Instead of the 800,000 men announced by the German party here, barely one-fourth that force has been detailed for the Serbian campaign. This gradual enlightenment, even if tardy, will probably have an important influence on the situation here.

BULGARS NO MATCH FOR ALLIED TROOPS

Easily Routed on a Five-Mile Front by French, Whose Losses Were Slight.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 26.—The Austro-German and Bulgarian campaigns in Northern and Eastern Serbia are being carried out according to the plan, despite Serbian resistance, and the Bulgars who crossed the Timok and hold the town of Prahovo are now separated from the Germans who crossed the Danube near Orsova by only a few miles.

The Bucharest correspondent of The Times sends the following:

"The Serbian troops have withdrawn from the neighborhood of the Danube and the Austrians have crossed the river, traversing the Island of Okadale. The Austrian forces will now obtain free passage through Bulgaria from Orsova, where fifty steamers and lighters, laden with munitions, have assembled."

In the southern part of Serbia, however, the Bulgarian invasion has suffered a serious check. The French

BIG TEUTON GUNS ROLL INTO SERBIA

Pass in Endless Procession Along All Roads to the Fighting Line.

GROUND GAINED STEADILY

Troops, Battling Incessantly in Difficult Mountain Country, Throw the Defenders Back.

By WILHELM CONRAD GOMOLL.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
(The Cologne Gazette Dispatches.)

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF GENERAL VON GALLWITZ IN SERBIA, Oct. 24.—In the latest engagements the enemy has again been thrown back from his positions along the entire Serbia north front. It is a wonderful, irresistible advance against which all opposition of the enemy has proved in vain. Stubbornly as the Serbian divisions fought they could do nothing, and every effort at resistance cost them new and heavy losses, as the assault of Field Marshal von Mackensen's army is so overwhelming that even strongest positions on heights cannot withstand it.

Since the fighting about Avala Mountain, where the German troops distinguished themselves by their rapid, successful attacks, these regiments, in close co-operation with the Austro-Hungarian troops, penetrated through the rough mountain country of Podunawklje, south of Belgrade. Over rough country roads torn and cut up by heavy gun fire the troops poured along between the mountain tops in endless columns.

On all the roads of the occupied territory artillery is constantly being brought forward, and the formations already in action are steadily receiving fresh supplies from Belgrade, where the landing of ammunition and war materials is going smoothly forward. Together with the heavy German guns which I met being dragged slowly forward in the midst of the mountain country by teams of eight oxen each, I saw Austrian and Hungarian field guns, and between them the motor wagons of the mortar batteries heavily laden with ammunition pushing forward, all forging along together.

The Serbian hill country makes war difficult, but the immensely picturesque and finely equipped troops of the Teutonic allied armies offer a striking contrast to the sorry condition of the country. Forward to the south they force their way. The constant gain of ground in spite of incessant battles and the almost insurmountable difficulties of the roads naturally encourage the troops.

It is a sign of their fighting spirit that since leaving Podunawlje we have already pushed into the Kosmaj Mountains. In a series of attacks carried out on concentric lines the allied forces under General von Koevess succeeded in capturing two main heights of this region by storm. On the 824-meter high mountain of Kosmaj as well as on Kosutitza, which is 405 meters high, the Serbians had taken up strong defensive positions. They were keys to still another main position lying to the west of Lug Valley, which commands the roads which run through a narrow valley toward Palanka.

As Palanka was already threatened by an advance of the centre of General von Gallwitz's army, which had approached beyond the mouth of Jesanica River, the Serbians naturally had concentrated their main strength on these heights for a desperate resistance. To the east of the Morava Valley General von Gallwitz's troops pushed forward, and the Serbians were forced to fall back on the line Alexandrovac-Orlejvo, in the hills between the Morava and Milawa Rivers. Many prisoners were taken both in these fights and in those in the mountainous district of Jasenica.

In connection with these successes a new advance was begun from Orsova, in the northeast corner of Serbia. The battles attending the crossing of the Danube are probably only the signal for actions which are still developing. For the Serbians they will doubtless be quite as disquieting as the new operations in Vishegrad on the Drina, which can only have the object of driving back the enemy's troops in Bosnia.

FRENCH STORM CHAMPAGNE POST

Win 1,200 Yards of a German Salient After a Heavy Bombardment.

PART OF IT IS RECAPTURED

German Counterattacks Are Desperately Opposed and the Fighting Still Continues.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—Interest in today's fighting on the western front centres upon the attempts of the Germans to regain ground in Champagne lost late yesterday afternoon to the French, who captured an important fortified post north of Mesnil-lez-Hurlus. The French gains of yesterday included territory 1,200 yards long by 250 yards wide, embracing several lines of trenches, but in counterattacks today the Germans succeeded in reoccupying some parts of the centre trenches, where desperate fighting with grenades continues.

The text of the French afternoon official communication follows:

In the Champagne district our troops yesterday won an important success. The enemy occupied, in front of their second position, a salient very strongly organized, which had resisted all our previous attacks. In its southwestern part, on the northern slopes of Hill 196, at a point two kilometers (one and one-quarter miles) to the north of Mesnil-lez-Hurlus, this salient included a very important position called La Courtine, (the curtain,) which we have captured after heavy fighting. La Courtine extended for a distance of 1,200 yards with an average depth of 250 yards, and including three or four lines of trenches connected up with underground tunnels and the customary communicating trenches, all of which were organized for defense.

In spite of the thoroughness of the German defensive works and the ferocity shown by the German soldiers, our men were successful, after a vigorous preparatory artillery fire and as a result of violent fighting, in taking complete possession of this position at the end of the day.

The official communication issued by the French War Office tonight reads:

The enemy very violently counterattacked today in Champagne along the whole of the front of the fortified position of La Courtine. We remain in possession of the positions taken to the east and to the west, the Germans having succeeded in reoccupying in the centre only some portions of the trenches, where the battle continues with grenades desperately.

This is the official statement issued in Berlin:

In Champagne the French attacked near Tahure and against our salient north of Le Mesnil, after a strong preparation with their artillery. Near Tahure their attack was not carried out to its completion, having been stopped by our fire. Late in the afternoon stubborn fighting was in progress on the salient north of Le Mesnil. North and east of this salient an attack was repulsed with severe French losses.

ARMY CORPS IS WIPED OUT

Bavarian Force Practically Annihilated in Souchez Assaults.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 25, (Dispatch to The London Daily Express.)—The First Bavarian Army Corps, which has been attacking east of Souchez, has been practically wiped out. In five days it made eight assaults, being repulsed each time with sanguinary losses.

In the last two attacks it was reinforced by the Prussian Guards, whose dead bodies mingle with those of the Bavarians. It is significant that not one single attack was able to withstand the French fire. The Germans simply melted away.

Boy-Ed and von Papen Rejected Scheme to Sink Ships, the Dynamiter Declares.

DR. HERBERT KEINZLE TAKEN

Paul Daeche and He Charged with Helping to Get Explosives —$30,000 Fund Used.

Two more arrests followed yesterday in the alleged conspiracy of German agents to blow up munition ships sailing from New York and other ports. One of the prisoners taken was Dr. Herbert Kienzle, inventor and engineer, now living at 309 West Eighty-sixth Street, who is charged with having given money to a German who has been acting as a stool pigeon for the Federal Secret Service.

The money, it is alleged, was to be used in the purchase of explosives to aid in the supposed plot for which Lieutenant Robert Fay, said to be a German reserve officer—though his name does not appear on the German Army lists—and Walter E. Scholz were arrested in Grantwood, N. J., on Sunday afternoon.

The other prisoner was Paul Daeche, a young German living at 141 Hutton Street, Jersey City, who is alleged to have bought some of the large quantity of explosives found in the possession of Fay and Scholz.

Warrant for Max Breitung.

In addition to these men, a warrant is out for the arrest of Max Breitung, Secretary and Treasurer of the Oil Well Supply Company of 90 West Street, who is said to have supplied a large part of a fund of $30,000 which, according to high Secret Service officials, Fay and his associates have spent in the last few months. It is not known whether Max Breitung is related to E. N. Breitung the banker.

Scholz admitted that Fay got $4,000 from German Secret Service agents in Brussels, but it is said that much more than that came from German-American sympathizers.

Fay, Scholz, Breitung, Kienzle, and Daeche are charged with conspiracy to despoil the owners of a vessel of money, goods, or merchandise laden on board thereof. But among Secret Service officials, New York police, and New Jersey police the dominant sentiment yesterday was not so much satisfaction over the arrests already made as expectancy of further developments.

Ready Confessions a Surprise.

The interest aroused by the confessions of Fay and Scholz that they had made mines to attach to munitions ships leaving American ports was eclipsed by surprises that they made the admissions so readily.

Fay was questioned all Sunday night by Secret Service men under the direction of Chief William J. Flynn and New York detectives directed by Fifth Deputy Police Commissioner Guy H. Scull and Captain Thomas Tunney, and finally yesterday morning he made a statement admitting that he had come to this country to blow up ships, that he had been sent by German Secret Service officials, and that he had talked with Captain Franz von Papen and Captain Karl Boy-Ed, Military and Naval Attachés, respectively, at the German Embassy in Washington. He insisted that these officials had "strongly declined" to have anything to do with the operations of his mines in American waters, only suggesting that perhaps he might find a field of activity in the hostile country of Canada.

Smiling as They Confessed.

Scholz later made similar admissions. Both men were smiling as they confessed that they had made and had intended to use mines in American waters, and Scholz said with cheerful resignation, "It looks like twenty years, doesn't it?"

And the police are now asking why it is that the prisoners gave up so easily—why they confessed so much about their own activities. The long list of fires and explosions in munition factories, the finding of fire bombs within the last few months on no fewer than seventeen vessels leaving American ports all the way from Boston to San Francisco, the series of passport frauds, the recurrent outbreaks of strikes in munition factories which have not in all cases been attributable to the desire for the eight-hour day, the threats against and attacks upon active American partisans of the Allies, beginning with the attempt to assassination J. P. Morgan on July 3 and continuing down to the killing of Franklin R. Voorhees, a Chicago broker in war materials, on Saturday night—all these activities, it is believed, can hardly be altogether disconnected.

The arrest yesterday of Kienzle and Paul Daeche of 141 Hutton Street, Jersey City, both of whom, it is said, aided Fay in procuring his explosives, does not yet indicate that the police have penetrated the higher circles of the supposed plot. But the impression was prevalent that the sudden yielding of Fay and Scholz was due not only to the fact [illegible] hundreds of pounds of explosives had been discovered in their apartment at 27 Fifth Street, Weehawken, and in other places where they had been active, but quite as much to the hope that by sacrificing themselves they might save some one higher up.

Arrest of Daeche.

While Fay and Scholz were being questioned yesterday morning, before daylight, in the Weehawken Police Station, detectives went to a rooming house at 141 Hutton Street, Jersey City, and there arrested Daeche, 21 years old, a German whose father, it is said, owns a large wire mill somewhere in Central Germany. Three years ago the boy came to this country to live with his uncle at the Jersey City address, while getting a business education, according to the story told by his uncle. When the war started he tried to get back, but could not. He was quoted early in the day as saying that he was in this country in the interests of the German Government to try to prevent the manufacture of dumdum bullets for the Allies, but when questioned later Daeche denied that he had made any such statement.

The police say that Daeche fell in with Fay and Scholz, went to Bridgeport, Conn., last week to try to buy explosives for them, and sent them a telegram from that place which was found in their effects after their arrest on Sunday, and led to his arrest. With Fay and Scholz he was arraigned before Recorder George Rander in Weehawken, and all three were remanded until 9:30 A. M. today. It is believed they will be removed to the Hudson County Jail in Jersey City, and later delivered to the Federal authorities. None of the men had employed any counsel yesterday.

Fay—he continues to insist that Robert Fay is his real name—made to the police early yesterday morning an extended statement of the circumstances which led him to come to this country. He denied that he had anything to do with the promotion of fires or explosions in ammunition plants, saying that he was an engineer himself and familiar with machinery factories, and that he knew that any factory with an up-to-date repairing crew would repair any damages within three or four days. He declared that his first interest in the question of stopping shipments of ammunition was aroused last Winter when he was serving in Champagne with the Sixteen Reserve Regiment of Cologne, which, after a successful charge one day, destroyed a French battery with dynamite, only to find that other guns were in position the next day to replace those that had been put out of action.

To Stop Munitions Exports.

"Then," he said, "I realized that the only successful method for us to use was to stop the source of supply—to shut off the export of artillery and munitions from American harbors. I had had some experience in the use of hand grenades and mine-laying, and had patented a device for exploding mines. So after application to my Colonel I was put into connection with the secret office in Brussels, which arranged for my passage to this country, leaving it to the military authorities in this country whether they considered it advisable to use this device in the United States or possibly in Canada. I came on the Rotterdam in April, and saw Captain von Papen and Captain Boy-ed, who declined to have anything to do with such a project and advised me not to try anything in this country. But they said developments might indicate whether I should do anything with it in Canada.

"I got into communication, then, with my brother-in-law, Scholz. This man Daeche had nothing to do with us at all. We looked over the various parts of New York Harbor and took our apparatus down to the Hudson at night to make experiments to see if the casing of the mines was water-tight. Each of the mines was to contain about eighty pounds of the highest explosive we could get—trinitro-toluol. They were to be attached to the rudder post of single-screw freight steamers, and upon explosion would probably blow off the rudder and the screw. In this way ships would be disabled, but no passengers would be killed, especially as we should make no attacks on the larger vessels, such as would be principally used for passenger traffic. For I hadn't been able to attach my mines to twin-screw steamers.

"We intended to take the mines out in our motor boat and then hang them on to a piece of driftwood which we would swing alongside the stern of a ship as it was docking. The time clockwork mechanism would explode the mine after it was well out of the harbor.

"I have been ready since the beginning of July, an dhave been waiting to strike until I got permission from the German military officers here; but I could not get this permission because they did not desire to have the slightest political complications with the United States. But I thought it was worth while. I figure that it takes on the average twenty shells to kill one soldier. Then if I stop a ship carrying 400,000 shells I am saving 20,000 lives, am I not?"

Scholz Corroborates Fay.

Scholz talked to newspaper men in the afternoon, and corroborated Fay's statement that the two had nothing to do with explosions in munitions plants or with fires in the holds of ships. Their only activity, he asserted, was the manufacture of mines to be attached to rudder posts. Scholz said that he married Fay's sister, but this is doubted by the authorities. Fay seems to be of a considerably higher social class, and no wife of Scholz's has been found in the police investigations.

Scholz has had a varied experience. Apparently he came from Elberfeld, in Westphalia; he studied architectural draftsmanship in Germany, and after coming to this country four years ago, he worked at several occupations. He was a draftsman for the Lackawanna Railroad; he took a correspondence course in farming, and another in acting for the movies; and he was employed on the Harkness estate, at Waterford, Conn., when Fay arrived in this country last April and wrote arranging a meeting.

"Fay had got $4,000 from the German Secret Service officials in Brussels," said Scholz. "We established ourselves in the boarding house of Mrs. Robert Stewart at 28 Fourth Street, Weehawken, and stayed there until Saturday, Oct. 16, when we moved to Mrs. D. L. Barbeau's at 27 Fifth Street. It was Fay's idea to put these clockwork mines on the rudder posts; they would damage the ships, but would harm nobody. We made one experiment with an empty mine, which we affixed to a ship belonging to one of the allied nations as it lay in New York harbor. From this experiment we found that it would take about ten minutes to fasten the mines on. The mine was floated down, and then sunk under water and affixed to the rudder post.

"The mechanism was started by a cable attached to the rudder of the boat, which connected with a lever which operated a ratchet wheel inside of the mine. Every time the rudder was moved the cable was pulled, the lever was jerked up, and one cog in the wheel slipped down. After a certain number of cogs had slipped past the end of the lever a hammer was released which struck on the cap of a cartridge and fired the mine. Thus the time at which the mine was fired depended on the frequency with which the rudder was moved during the voyage; we estimated that it would be from one to four days. Fay had this idea long before he came to America.

Rented Garage for Workshop.

"We rented the ground floor of Emil Herzig's garage on Main Street, Weehawken, for three months from May 12. We were going to use it as a workshop to make this contrivance and others with which Fay was experimenting. We made the steel caskets for the mines, and after we had manufactured them, we had no more need for the garage. It had been intended originally that, after we finished, I should operate it as a business proposition, and Fay was paying me $25 a week besides."

As a matter of fact, the two continued to rent the garage, and when they were arrested the police visited the place, and found on the ground floor a small car—Scholz's notebook showed that they had paid $350 for it—and about $400 worth of machinery, including a lathe, drill, and dies.

"After we had made the caskets for our mines," Scholz continued, "the next thing was to test our explosives. We moved our headquarters from the garage to Deegan's boathouse in West Hoboken, intending to mix our explosives and fill our mines in the motor boat after we were out in the river.

"The explosives that the police discovered were harmless in their present state. The trinitro-toluol had to be melted and cooled before it would be of any use; the chlorate of potash was not explosive and the dynamite was frozen. This plan will avail little to mitigate the sentence should Scholz and Fay be convicted; for they are held on a charge of conspiracy against the United States, and it is understood that whatever other charges are brought against them that of keeping explosives contrary to law will be a minor feature.

Scholz insisted that they bought the explosives through a middleman, but he, as well as Fay, denied any connection with Daeche. The explosives were bought, according to the police, from the Aetna Explosives Company of 2 Rector Street, the firm from which Erich Muenter, alias Frank Holt, who set off a bomb in the Capitol at Washington on July 2 and shot J. P. Morgan on July 3, made his purchases.

At least one man who, the police said, was instrumental in getting the explosives for Fay, was arrested yesterday evening in the offices of Assistant United States District Attorney Knox, to which he had been taken by Captain Tunney. This was Dr. Kienzle, a civil engineer holding a degree from a German university. His father, Jacob Kienzle, is proprietor of one of the largest clock factories in Germany, situated at Schwenningen, in the Black Forest. There is no connection between this firm or Dr. Kienzle and the Kienzle Clock Company of 41 Park Place.

Dr. Kienzle's Mission Here.

Dr. Kienzle came to the United States in the Summer of 1914 to get the exclusive American rights to inventions which he had patented in Germany. He started back at the beginning of the war on the Kronprinzessin Cecilie, the treasure ship which, after a perilous journey dodging French and English cruisers put back to Bar Harbor with her passengers and her cargo of $11,000,000 in gold.

When he came here Dr. Kienzle had letters to many prominent manufacturers, and was able to make a study of American factory systems; but his lawyer, Benno Loewy, said last night that he never had visited any munition factories.

"Why should he?" asked Mr. Loewy. "He had no interest in the munition industry; his mechanical experience was mainly connected with clocks."

Immediately after his arrest Dr. Kienzle was arraigned before United States Commissioner Houghton in the Federal Building and held in $25,000 bail for further examination on the charge of "maliciously and feloniously and corruptly attacking a vessel with intent unlawfully to despoil her owners of money, goods, and merchandise laden on board thereof." He will come up for examination on Nov. 4. Meanwhile Kienzle is in the Tombs, and Mr. Loewy said that admission was refused him when he went there last night to see his client.

"The way he is treated is an outrage," said Mr. Loewy. "He is no more guilty of bombmaking than I am, and I shall make every effort to get bail for him tomorrow."

The Federal officials declared positively that there was no connection between the case of Franz von Rintelen and Andrew D. Meloy, under indictment for passport frauds, and the activities of Fay and his associates.

Fay, Scholz, and Daeche will be claimed this morning by the Federal officials, and the local police are likely to have no further connection with their cases.

Penalty Ten Years in Prison.

A Government official who has been working on the case said last night:

"The crime alleged to have been committed is a violation of Chapters 37 and 208 of the United States Civil Code, and is known as conspiracy to despoil a ship. The wording of the statute resemble that regarding piracy, but piracy is punishable by death, and the punishment for the conspiracy charged is at the maximum ten years imprisonment and a fine of $5,000.

"The Paul Seibe named in the conspiracy is a Government Secret Service agent who wormed himself into the confidence of the conspirators after the agents of the department had learned of the probable reason for Fay's visit to this country.

"Seibe has been until recently in close contact with Breitung. It is not known whether Max Breitung is a relative of E. N. Breitung, owner of the Hamburg-American liner Dacia, which was changed from German to American registry, and captured by the French on its way to Bremen, after the transfer of the Dacia had aroused widespread controversy.

"Breitung dropped out of sight upon the arrest of his alleged fellow-conspirators. This was due to the fact that the police officials of this city picked up a clew independently of the Government and started to work on the case on their own account."

Fay and Scholz fell under suspicion at about the same time, and Paul Seibe, being of German descent and well equipped to play his part, was sent out from Washington to get into their confidence. He soon learned that Fay and his partners had been working on their scheme since May.

In spite of the fact that he got thoroughly into the conspiracy, he was unable, without directing suspicion to himself, to trace all the sources of the income which was spent in the bomb experiments. Instead of trying to find out anything about this by questioning, he kept the Government secret service men informed about the manner in which money was furnished, and several secret service officials have been working for weeks on the outside of the conspiracy to trace the principal financial backer.

Expect Breitung's Arrest.

The Government secret service men know the direction taken by Breitung in leaving the vicinity of New York, and say that probably there will be no difficulty about his arrest. He is wanted especially because he is believed to have acted with others in financing the scheme to destroy ships leaving this harbor.

The expenditures of the conspirators, as far as they are known to the United States Government officials, total more than $30,000, and their actual expenditures are believed to have doubled this amount.

The Government officials have found a motorboat purchased by Fay and have learned from the former owner the details of its purchase. Fay and his partners had used this motorboat several times recently to prove the efficiency of their mines in actual tests in the Hudson River.

They constructed a mine with a trigger which would be set off when the vessel to which it was attached attained a speed of ten knots. To make sure of the accuracy of the construction of their mines, they attached several on different occasions to rafts towed by the fast motor boat in early morning hours along the Hudson River. The Secret Service officials have learned of the explosion of several of these, and the fact that the conspirators did experiment in this was corroborated by one of them in his confession yesterday.

On some occasions these mine explosions in the river attracted attention and led to questions being put to the men in the motor boat. They explained that they were inventors seeking to perfect a new type of mine to sell to the United States Government.

A large part of the expenditures was for machinery, which was bought in different localities in order to avert suspicion. They also bought large quantities of trinitro-toluol and dynamite.

The money alleged to have been paid by Breitung to Seibe was spent by Seibe at a factory in Bayonne. Others of the conspirators bought trinitro-toluol there and bought dynamite in Buler, N. J., explaining that they wanted the explosives for experimental purposes.

Had Another Laboratory.

The Government officials have got possession of twenty-five pounds of trinitro-toluol and know the whereabouts of another 100 pounds which the conspirators were about to use for mines. It was learned last night that the ring of dynamiters had another laboratory in which much of their explosives and machinery was put together.

The Government officials who had been watching all the movements of the conspirators on the outside, in addition to receiving reports from Seibe, said yesterday that the conspirators were all ready to make their first attack on a ship, and that such an attack probably would have been attempted within the next few days, although the Government officials believed that their espionage would enable them to prevent it at the last moment and catch the conspirators red-handed.

One of the reasons for knowing that the attempt was soon to be made was that members of the ring recently had been to shipping offices making inquiries about the speed of various ships carrying munitions for the Allies. They wanted information about the speed so that in the case of a tramp steamer which failed to reach a speed of ten knots they could use a mine that would explode at a slower speed.

The ships leaving New York do not put on a speed of ten knots until they are well past the three-mile limit, so that explosions would not have taken place until ships were well outside of the harbor.

Men who have been visiting Paul Koenig, the detective agent of the Hamburg-American Line, whose record was investigated by a Government Grand Jury to disclose the purchasers of perjured affidavits that the Lusitania carried guns, have been watched closely.

It was said last night that none of the men under arrest or others under suspicion had visited Dr. Heinrich Albert, the German Privy Councillor, at the offices of the Hamburg-American Line who subsidized the Fatherland and directed the efforts of German propagandists here.

So far as could be learned by the Secret Service men, Fay and his friends worked with entire independence of official Germans and of other groups of known German agents and propagandists in this country, and received their funds from the purse of private individuals.

Besides the explosives found in the rooms of Fay and Scholz in Deegan's boathouse, and in the Richter Storage Warehouse at 245 Clinton Avenue, West Hoboken, the police believe that the couple have other concealed magazines of munitions along the river front which may be discovered.

Letters Being Translated.

The letters, more than 200, sent mostly from Germany, and all written in German, which the police found in the rooms, have been turned over to the Secret Service officials for translation. Scholz kept a notebook also, beginning in German with the year 1902, but continuing down to the last Summer. Most of the recent entries were in English. It contained various sidelights on his career in Germany and the United States, and on the various occupations in which he had been engaged.

One of the entries which aroused interest was the memorandum dated Aug. 8: "Paid the first mate of the steamship Magdeburg as salvage, when the launch No Name drifted from its moorings, $20."

The No Name was the motor boat which the two had in Deegan's boathouse. The Magdeburg is the German steamer laden with dynamite which lay in Gravesend Bay for several months unable to move out on account of the blockade by British cruisers. Her presence caused much protest from residents along the shores nearby, and eventually she was unloaded, only a few days ago.

The police wondered, on finding this memorandum, if the Fay band had got some of its dynamite from the Magdeburg. Officers of the ship declared that the only occasion they had had with Fay was once when he had been exploring the bay in his motor boat and had made fast near the Magdeburg while he went ashore. The boat broke loose from the moorings, they said, and the first mate took it back to Fay and Scholz.

Another entry showed that Schloz was fined $5 for speeding in Central Park on May 1, 1912. He had lived, it is said, in Brooklyn, and in various Jersey towns, besides working as a porter at the Wayside Inn, Deawille, N. J. Another note gave the name of Felix Lauter, 83 Fairfield Avenue, Waterbury, Conn., with the note, "Expects you Friday."

Commissioner Woods last night issued a statement expressing the appreciation of the New York police of the co-operation of the Federal Secret Service and the police of Weehawken and Union Hill.

The discovery of the alleged plot has resulted in the taking of increased precautions around the steamships loading with munitions at the Brooklyn piers. All shipments arriving at the docks are examined. At the Fabre Line and other piers private detectives watch the movements of all visitors, and the Bush Terminal Company is planning to have six armed men patrol its waterfront property in a fast motor boat every night.

LAUTER DENIES COMPLICITY.

Engineer and Inventor Admits He Met Daeche in Bridgeport.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Oct. 25.—Felix Lauter, whose name and address were found in the possession of the men arrested in Weehawken, said tonight:

"I met Mr. Daeche for the first time a week ago today in my office. I was introduced to him by Richard Zinkernagel, whose office adjoins mine. That night Daeche left for New York, but stopped to telegraph. What he telegraphed I don't know, but they might have got my address and name in that way. The next day Mr. Zinkernagel and myself went to New York, where I met Mr. Scholz. I gave him my address when in New York, and we had a glass of beer in Ohmels's Café on Fulton Street. I was with him perhaps ten minutes all told. During that time nothing was mentioned of any plot, and I was as much surprised as any one when I read in the papers of their arrest."

Lauter has been in the United States four years and in Bridgeport one year. He has been employed at the Bullard Machine Company and the American Graphophone Company, and is now interested in an independent phonograph company of which he is President. He is an electrical and mechanical engineer and has a number of inventions to his credit since coming to America. Zinkernagel is also an electrical and mechanical engineer. He was also employed in local factories, including the Bullard Company and Springfield Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Zinkernagel was decidedly ill at ease when being questioned regarding the visit of Daeche to his office.

STATE DEPARTMENT MAY ACT.

Protest to Germany Likely if Fay's Story Is True.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—If the State Department determines that Robert Fay is telling the truth in his story to the New York police of how he, a Lieutenant in the German Army, was sent to this country by the German Secret Service for the purpose of disabling by explosives steamships leaving American ports for Europe, the matter probably will be made the subject of vigorous representations to the German Government.

The Department officials were much interested today in press accounts of the confession said to have been made to Police Commissioner Woods, and it was said that a report on the case was expected tomorrow from agents of the Secret Service who assisted in arresting Fay and alleged accomplices.

The American Government, the officials said, would regard such an action as Fay attributes to the German Secret Service as an offense against the United States of grave character. It was explained, however, that not enough was known of the matter officially to hazard a presumption regarding the form any representations which might be made would take.

As to Captain Boy-Ed and Captain von Papen of the German Embassy, it was said that if Fay told the truth in his so-called confession no blame could attach to them. Fay is reported as having said that Captains Boy-Ed and von Papen, when approached by him, refused to have anything to do with his scheme, and advised against it.

The Department of Justice will ask the Secret Service and the New York police of details they have learned, with a view to comparing them with evidence the department has obtained concerning the activities of Germans suspected of violations of the United States laws. Much evidence has been collected by the department, but it is not complete. The main object is to ascertain whether there is a combination of dynamite plotters with a central head.

GERMAN VISITED VOORHEES.

Murdered Man's Partner Thinks the Caller Was a Spy.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 25.—The murder last Saturday night on his own doorstep of Franklin R. Voorhees, a wealthy broker in munitions of war, remains unsolved by the police, who admit they have no definite clue to the identity of the man who committed the deed. Opinion differs as to whether the murder was perpetrated by a hold-up man or by an emissary of a foreign country engaged in war.

Inquiries of private interest is manifested by the police in the whereabouts of a German with whom Mr. Voorhees had been in conference, and with whom it was thought he had an appointment on last Saturday. The actions of the Teuton were disclosed today by Herbert M. Starkie, a member of the Voorhees brokerage firm.

"He came into the office on Oct. 16," said Mr. Starkie, "and although we attached no significance then to his inquiries, they may have been of more importance than we thought. He came to see Mr. Voorhees, representing himself as a prospective customer. He gave his name, but I have forgotten it, and do not know whether Mr. Voorhees made a memorandum of it. He said he was an agent for concerns established in Europe and asked quotations on picric acid and glycerine. He was closeted with Mr. Voorhees the entire afternoon. The only comment I had with Fay was once when he had been exploring the bay in his motor boat and had made fast near the Magdeburg while he went ashore. The boat broke loose from the moorings, they said, and the first mate took it back to Fay and Scholz.

Another entry showed that Schloz was fined $5 for speeding in Central Park on May 1, 1912. T. J. Starkie, the representative here of the Frank R. Voorhees Company of Chicago, said last night that it was the opinion of himself, and at least some of the friends of F. R. Voorhees, the Chicago broker who was shot and killed Saturday, that Mr. Voorhees was assaulted by robbers, and was not the victim of German spies.

The Chicago broker purchased the Thomas M. Starkie Company.

"If there was any reason to assassinate a member of Mr. Voorhees's firm I should think I would have been the victim of the spy system, for all our sales to foreign governments were handled through the New York office," said Mr. Starkie. "We never received any threatening letters."

Mr. Starkie denied a story from Chicago that a mysterious man, who wore mouse-colored spats, had called on him here, or, so far as he knew, ever offered Mr. Voorhees a commission to purchase supplies for the German Government. Mr. Voorhees came to New York at intervals and was last here a month ago. Neither at that time, nor at other times, Mr. Starkie said, was the German spy system discussed.

The local offices of the firm are in the Produce Exchange Building. The firm deals in oils and has been filling contracts for the Allies for glycerine and picric acid.

KIENZLE GERMAN ARMY MAN?

Providence Journal Says He Is Teuton Propagandist.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 25.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"Herbert Kienzle, who has been arrested on a charge of conspiring with Lieutenant Robert Fay and others as agents of the German Secret Service to wreck vessels leaving American ports with cargoes of ammunition, has been well known to The Journal since last December as a German Secret Service propagandist of the most virulent type. He is the son of Herbert Kienzle, one of the largest clock manufacturers in Germany, and is a Lieutenant in the German Army.

"When Kienzle came to Providence in December he claimed that he had been a passenger on the Kronprinzessin Cecilie bound for home on the voyage which ended off the coast of Maine, and that he came back to Boston on that vessel. He came to Providence with a number of letters of introduction, by means of which he established social connections while the city was very active for some weeks as a visitor to establishments making munitions of war.

"Suspicion was first aroused against him when he attempted to use his social connections to persuade The Journal to print nothing detrimental to the German cause, and when, posing as a German gentleman temporarily stranded here for want of an opportunity to return to Germany, he suddenly blossomed out with a big portfolio of fraudulent photographs purporting to portray German soldiers wounded by dum-dum bullets used by the Allies.

"The Journal rejected these photographs as palpable fakes, and they appeared a few days later in The Fatherland. Kienzle then went to New York and establishing himself at 41 Park Place, secured stenographers and began to hurl a stream of abuse at all who did not agree with his ideas concerning German kultur.

"He then became one of The Fatherland group of advisers, and in a letter to The Journal on Jan. 4 filled with vilification, he said The Fatherland is not Ambassador von Bernstorff's subsidized periodical. The idea is too foolish to be expressed. There are fortunately sufficient number of your much loved hyphenated German enthusiasts and honest Americans in this country to subsidize The Fatherland. By the way, permit me to state that the weekly circulation today of this healthy little publication exceeds 65,000 copies."

"The Journal charged him at the time with being an agent of the German Government and declared that in pouring out his abuse in the columns of The Fatherland and The Journal he was simply earning his wages. In reply to this Kienzle declared that The Journal and many of the newspapers in New York and elsewhere were subsidized by British gold, and added: 'This is a war between England and Germany. England is fighting for the exclusive right to rule the waves and half of the earth. Germany is fighting for equal rights for everybody.

"'Were not France and Russia driven into their alliance with England by the pressure England brought to bear on them with the bugaboo of German danger? Do not France and Russia fight today for England? Don't Indian troops, Spahis, Sepoys, and even Fiji cannibals fight for bloodstained British money and not for love of England? Will not the conscience of the great French people be awakened and find that they are only fighting for England's might and rule of the world!'

"People who have followed Kienzle's movements since last January declare that he has been getting more and more vehement as time has gone by."

SAYS BULGARIA MIGHT HAVE BEEN WON

Diplomat Thinks Greece, Too, Would Have Joined Different Onslaught on Turks.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 25.—It is asserted in diplomatic circles here, which are usually well informed as to affairs in Greece, that when England was entering on the attack on the Dardanelles, which the Greek General Staff and the King of the Hellenes strongly disapproved, considering its success practically impossible, Greece was willing to join the Allies if the territorial integrity of Greece were guaranteed and 200,000 soldiers were contributed by the Entente for an overland attack on Constantinople.

An Ambassador of one of the belligerent countries is reported as saying: "Arguments and promises are absolutely useless in the case of the Bulgarians. They are impressed only by deeds. If, when the Russians were in the Carpathians, an Entente army had landed at Dedeaghatch and the Bulgarians had been told, 'We are going to Constantinople. If you are neutral you have nothing to fear. If you oppose us we are prepared to fight you. If you join us you will be largely compensated,' Bulgaria would doubtless have joined us, and Constantinople and the Dardanelles would probably have been in the possession of the Allies by this time."

DREYFUS'S NEPHEW KILLED.

Young Lieutenant Had Won the Military Cross of the Legion.

PARIS, Oct. 25.—Sub-Lieutenant Emile Dreyfus, nephew of Alfred Dreyfus, has been killed in action with his regiment, the Thirty-second Artillery.

ALLIES TO SERBIA: 'HOLD OUT 5 DAYS'

troops who joined hands with the Serbs there have, according to French accounts, inflicted a severe defeat on three Bulgarian divisions (about 60,000 men) at Krivolak, forty miles north of the point where the Saloniki-Nish Railway crosses the Serbo-Greek frontier, and are following up their success.

Details of the Battle.

The following details of this first important battle of the Allied troops comes from Cradek, Serbia, in a dispatch dated Oct. 23 and forwarded via Saloniki and Paris:

"The double attempt of the Bulgarians to cut the railway at Veles and in the Volandovo sector has been completely defeated.

"Yesterday (Friday) the attack on Veles was given up and the entire available Bulgarian strength was directed southward from Ishtip along the Gradeskar River, spreading out over a five-mile front and comprising the villages of Rabrovo, Volandovo, Piraud, Veszel, Kalkova, Kachova, and Hodova, with its objective a short stretch where the railway, running along the east bank of the Vardar River between two bridges, is most pregnable at the Strumitza Station.

"The attack, although furious, immediately developed the inferiority of the Bulgarians in contact with the experienced troops of France and England. Heavy losses are reported along the entire line. The Bulgarians are with drawing up the Gradeskar Valley, leaving the French in victorious possession of the railway from Skmilic to Nogotin, beyond which point the line for many miles is not threatened.

"The French losses were slight.

"General Serrail, the French Commander in Chief, in a statement to The Associated Press, characterized the Bulgarian reports of their advances as fantastic. Nowhere, he said, have they advanced beyond a few undefended points of no military value close to the frontier.

"An offensive movement by the Allies seems imminent. The Greeks seem to be profoundly impressed by the captivity and success of the French movement."

A dispatch from Saloniki says the French are following up their victory and are now threatening Strumitza, Bulgaria, to which place the Bulgarians, who suffered heavily from the fire of the French three-inch guns, retired in disorder. The French are now holding a line running from Barakli to Rabravo.

A dispatch to Reuter's from Athens says:

"Reliable news received concerning the last battle near Valandovo is to the effect that the French pursued the Bulgarians to the frontier. The Bulgarians have been defeated in the sector of Krupuli, (Veles,) to which three Serbian regiments from Strumitza station (in Serbia) proceeded and occupied the left bank of the Vardar. The Bulgarians for two days occupied a section of the railway, but owing to a lack of explosives failed to do serious damage.

"The French occupy the sector between Doiran and Gratzo.

"This advance places the Bulgarians who reached Ishtip, Veles, and Uskup in rather an awkward position, for a further advance of the allied army would seriously threaten their flank. In fact unofficial reports state that the advance of the French, who are being closely followed by the British, has already caused the retirement of the Bulgars toward Strumitza.

The first desire of the Germans is to open a route through Northeastern Serbia and Bulgaria to Turkey, and this is on the eve of being accomplished.

"The way, therefore, is clear," writers here do not believe that the position of Serbia is so desperate as has been painted. It is serious, of course, but they point out that the Serbians have many natural defensive positions in the mountains, in which they can hold out for months, if need be, in which the British, French, and other members of the quadruple powers carrying out their determination to help Serbia by rushing reinforcements to Saloniki and other points, the Bulgars will be in a position of great difficulty, and that the Germans and Turks, being fully occupied elsewhere, will not be able to send them much help.

Hard Pressed on All Fronts.

British correspondents in France have just disclosed the fact, made known to them by the British staff, that even after the Anglo-French offensive in September the Germans had the greatest difficulty in obtaining new reinforcements to meet that adventure, and had to call upon men just returned from Russia for rest to fill the gaps in the western lines.

From this it is argued that the Germans cannot spare a great many men for the Balkans, especially as the Russians are keeping them fairly busy from the Baltic to the Rumanian border.

The Italians, by their offensive, are compelling the Austrians to strengthen their lines, and the French by the capture yesterday of a strongly fortified salient north of Le Mesnil, in Champagne, have shown that they have not yet finished their effort to break through. The French success is considered important because the captured fortified area clears the ground for another general offensive in Champagne.

For the same reason the British are trying to force the Germans out of their redoubts and from the slag heaps to the south of La Bassée. These, however, are only preparatory operations, while the Italians are in the midst of a great offensive which has already gained for them many valuable vantage points, and, according to Rome dispatches, may any day place them in possession of the fortress of Gorizia.

Official Reports of Serbian Front.

The Berlin War Office last night issued the following bulletin of operations in Serbia:

At Vishegrad (Bosnian frontier) the bridgehead position already won has been widened. West of the Kolubara the Tamnaha crossing northwest of Ub has been captured. The army of General von Koevess have reached the general line running through Lazarevac, north of Arangjelovac, and Rebrovac, west of Ratari.

The army of General von Gallwitz, to the south of Jasenica, stormed the commanding heights east of Banicians, and after a stubborn fight on the Morava Plain, has taken Livadica Zabari, and east thereof reached the line of the Presdna height, south of Petrovac and west of Molinitza. In the Pek Valley the heights west and southwest of Kucevo have been occupied.

The troops which are advancing near Orsova have penetrated further in a southerly direction, and with their left wing have reached Sip, on the Danube.

The Bulgarian Army of General Boyadjiff has taken the ridge of the mountains between Peaks Prenoyaglava and Mikrovac, twenty kilometers (12 miles) north of Pirot.

The Vienna official bulletin has this to say of the operations:

German forces strmed positions south of Palanka, which were bitterly defended, and captured Petrovac.

In the Mlawa Valley Austro-Hungarian and German troops crossed the river near Orsova and advanced into the mountains east of the river at the narrows of Klissura. The enemy fled, leaving behind hem rifles and ammunition.

The Bulgarians during the last few days have crossed the Timok at several points between the source and its mouth. Their attacks on the heights of the left bank of the river against Zajecar, Knajdoevac, and Pirot are progressing.

Bulgar and Serb Versions.

An official communication issued at Sofia yesterday reads:

Our troops inflicted a decisive defeat on the Serbian troops in the neighborhood of Uskub. We finally occupied the town. The enemy, with more than 500 men killed and wounded, was thrown back on the Katscharik defile. Our troops are pursuing them impetuously in that direction.

On the other fronts there are no important changes.

The last Serbian War Office statement, which outlines the situation as it existed on Friday, Oct. 22, is as follows:

On the northwest front, after desperate fighting, Serbian troops retired on the left bank of Miawa on a line running from Voiko-Orachde to the right bank of the Koubrichitza to the right bank of the Touria.

Near Vishegrad, in Bosnian territory, the enemy succeeded in crossing the Drina River with three battalions, and strong groups have been observed massing near that point.

Bulgarian front: Under strong pressure by the enemy in the direction of Kniasyevac the Serbians retired on the direct defensive positions of that town. The enemy succeeded in passing to the left bank of the Timok River in an advance toward Krallevo Selo.

There is no change in the neighborhood of Pirot. All enemy attacks on the Southern Morava have been repulsed.

According to information from an authorized source the Bulgarians have taken Uskub.

ITALY CALLING MORE TROOPS.

RUSSIAN ARMY READY TO INVADE BULGARIA?

Three Divisions Massed and Twenty Transports Assembled in Black Sea Ports.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Oct. 25, (Dispatch to the London Daily News.)—The Vossische Zeitung states that between Odessa, Tiraspol, and Kishineff there are about three divisions of the Russian Landsturm.

"As two of these divisions are fully equipped it is probable," it adds, "that these, or the greater part of them, will be transported elsewhere.

"Probably this is the reason why since Oct. 20 a third of all private railway traffic has been stopped between the places named and also the reason for the presence off Odessa of about two dozen large transport ships with sealed orders as to destination."

PRINCE GOES TO SALONIKI.

Greek Heir Apparent with Large Staff Off for Allies' Base.

PARIS, Oct. 25.—The departure of Crown Prince George of Greece last night for Saloniki is reported by the Havas correspondent at Athens. The Prince was accompanied by a large staff.

The purpose of his trip was said to be to inspect the garrison at Saloniki.

PUTS GERMAN LOSSES UP TO 4,500,000

Copenhagen Estimate Based on Latest Lists—77 Airmen Among the Recent Dead.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 25, (Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.)—The last thirty Prussian casualty lists issued contain the names of 159,901 officers and men, killed, wounded, or missing. This brings the total Prussian losses published to 2,026,209. The lists do not include 228 Bavarian, 211 Saxon, 288 Würtemberg, and 54 navy lists.

The last lists included the names of seventy-seven airmen killed, seventy-five wounded, nine missing, and two prisoners, and four Generals killed and two wounded.

The total German losses up to date are estimated at about 4,500,000. Among the latest casualties are many killed by poison gas. The losses of telephone and telegraph battalions in the trenches are very heavy.

and Dreswiaty Lakes. On the front of Lakes Dreswiaty, Boginskole, Miadziol, Narotche, and Vichnevskoie engagements have occurred at many points, but without appreciable result for either side. Among the more important encounters was that near the Village of Jdeghile, west of Lake Boginskole, where the enemy was dislodged. Another encounter resulted in the capture by our troops of the Village of Petrotcha, west of Koziany.

West of Smorgon small enemy detachments were easily dispersed. In the forest region south of Krevo and on the front in the region of Lioubitchi, on the Upper Niemen as far as Krochine, northeast of Baronovichi, calm prevails.

Southeast of Baronovichi our artillery successfully bombarded an enemy column, which advanced across the village of Rousiine. On Tsexoginski Canal the fighting near Vouild, south of Lake Vygonovski, continues. The enemy has made a series of counter-attacks, but failed in his attempts to recapture his lost positions.

On the left bank of the Styr, south of Nobel, there have been many small engagements. In a fight near Solotakova, in the region of Lake Meliot, the enemy slightly pressed back our troops.

On the left bank of the Styr, north of Rafalowka, the enemy's attempt to advance was repulsed. The enemy launched several violent attacks in the region of the villages of Kouki and Komarow, west of Czartoryak. On one point he succeeded in thrusting us back, but advancing reserves restored the situation and during our counter-attack we captured many prisoners. On thousand already have been counted. Farther south to the River Ikwa, on the front of this river and in the region of Novo Mlevinetz, there has been no fighting. There is every indication that the enemy's losses in the recent fighting near Novo Mlevinetz were enormous.

In Galicia there have been small engagements on the Stripa at several points and an artillery duel to the left of the Dniester below its junction with the Stripa. East of Czernowitz everything is quiet.

Russia Thinks Present Battles Crucial.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 25.—Successes for the Russians are continuing along the entire front south of Dvinsk, while the energetic efforts being made by the Germans in the vicinity of Riga have not succeeded in shaking the position of the Russians along that part of the front.

The military authorities here regard the situation around Riga as quite satisfactory at present, and declare also that the capture of Illoukst by the Germans has not altered conditions at Dvinsk, the position of which city remains strong in spite of a renewal of the battle with furious energy in the immediate vicinity to the north and South.

However, it is semi-officially commented, "it is unwise to venture a prediction, since the future may bring unexpected results, and even change the entire position through a break on one side or the other. Everything depends, of course, on how the position shapes itself during the fighting now in progress.

ZIGZAGGING OVER RUSSIAN POLAND

J. O'Donnell Bennett Tells of His Tortuous Travels in the Conquered Territory.

EXPERIENCES NOT PLEASANT

Hunger, Thirst, Hives, Flies, Smells, and Ptomaines Among Them.

AUSTRIANS ARE CHEERFUL

Merry Under All Conditions, and Seem Delighted to Have a Chance to be Hospitable.

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

CZENSTOCHOWA, Russia, Sept. 24. —Every morning at 6 o'clock our Prussian Captain or fuehrer (meaning guide) swings himself down from the frowsy compartment of a second class German passenger coach, runs his commanding eyes along the half dozen other frowsy compartments of the carriage, and cries resonantly "Guten morgen, meine herren. Haben sie gut geschlafen."

At this inquiry a dozen correspondents from half as many countries, who have by no means gut geschlafen, poke their disheveled heads from the compartments and declare with more or less confidence that they have indeed slept well and are many times thankful for the Captain's kind inquiry.

"And you, lieber Herr Hauptmann, have you also slept well!"

"O, thank you many times, my gentlemen. I have truly slept enormously well. Colossally well. I thank you many times."

He then formally shakes hands with one and all.

This exchange of greetings is every morning identical and is performed with great ceremony, whereseever 6 o'clock happens to find us. Sometimes it is in the switch yards of a Russian town with seven consonants to three vowels—Wloszczowa is a fair specimen. Sometimes it in the midst of fields spider-webbed with lines of abandoned trenches and with naught but the ruins of a human habitation in sight. And sometimes it is in the deep, dark depths of a fir forest where there was fighting once, as you may know from the smell of dead horses borne to you on the chill morning breeze.

Our Captain's morning appearance, like his salutation, never varies. Everybody else looks ill-conditioned and blear-eyed and oily, and is as disagreeable to himself as he is to his companions. To fare for five days and nights over a besmirched country without removing one's clothes does not conduce to spruceness, nor does a morning wash in one-third of a bottle of mineral water do much to restore it. These facts serve to emphasize the marvel of the Captain's appearance, but do not explain the method by which he attains it. He seems always clean shaven. His long gray overcoat of a kind of broadcloth is never wrinkled. His boots, which the night before were caked with mud, are always presentable when he comes forth. His gloves always look as if he had just drawn on a fresh pair, and his face is never oily.

A Bullet Over the Captain's Eye.

This is the Captain who, as I told you in an earlier letter, carries a French bullet in a ledge of bone above one eye, and about it the surgeons don't know just what to do. The problem appears to cause the Captain less concern than it does the surgeons. We know, though, that the bullet makes itself painfully felt at times, for we see him pressing two fingers hard against his forehead. And it is at such times that we can hear him muttering: "Wie Kinder! Donnerwetter, wie Kinder!" when certain correspondents, who have not had the advantage of growing up under Prussian discipline, get lost and delay the rest of the party. (As to the nationality of these correspondents the reader is again given one guess.)

We know then that the old wound is hurting him.

It is partly this knowledge that makes us toe the mark every morning in the matter of that fiction about "gut geschlafen." The truth is nobody has slept well. Each man gets one of the two benches in a compartment and on it he might do well enough if it were not for the fact that, though the Autumn days in Poland are often very warm, the Autumn nights are cold—a misty, penetrating, desolating coldness which is not easily thrown off—and that, irrespective of the weather, the Polish flies work day and night. People say that they are on special duty now and that the war is the cause of their activity. I can well believe it. The grime and grease and stench of things is almost unbearable. Tennyson told it all in those half score words of his—

> Stench of old offal decaying and infinite torment of flies.

Yesterday morning, when the Captain gave me his grave assurances as to how enormously and colossally he had slept, I said: "But how do you manage it with these maddening flies about?"

"Oh, I put my hands deep in the overcoat pockets and put the undercoat around my head. It goes very well."

Last night I tried it, but I'm too fidgety. I believe our Captain can make himself do anything. Soldiers get that way. Often and often when a column halts I see soldiers throw themselves face downward in the fields and put their hands under their stomachs so the flies can't get at them, and in half a minute they are sound asleep.

After we have shaken ourselves together in the morning and each man has had a double handful of mineral water served out to him so that he can wash his face—the hands don't matter—our invaluable feldwebel, who displays the dexterity of a conjurer in the matter of evoking hard-boiled eggs from the most unexpected places, gives us each a couple of eggs and a chunk of soldier's bread. Sometimes there is coffee from a camp we may be passing and sometimes there isn't.

Thus fortified, we begin a thirty-mile and thirty-hour day of sightseeing.

Schedule Gone to Smash.

Just now we are on the fifth day of a trip that has covered a large part of the great irregular square of Polish-Russian territory which lies where Russia pushes out its extreme western boundary, an extension it effected by gobbling the biggest part of the ancient Kingdom of Poland. If you drew a line straight south from the town of Augustow, where the famous Lithuanian horses come from, which lies just over the border of the southeastern tip of East Prussia, to the little town of Sandomierz, which has a great ecclesiastical history, that line would be the eastern boundary of the region has been so desperately fought And the line would pass close to the fortress of Ivangorod. All this territory is now in German or Austrian hands, and nearly every mile of it had to be fought for. Warsaw is its metropolis.

From Novo Georgievsk and Warsaw we have been for five days jigsawing southeast toward the corner of the irregular square where the boundaries of three empires meet. From Warsaw to that corner is only about 150 miles, but the region has been so desperatelyfought over and devastated and its railway lines are so crowded with troop trains that all schedules have long since gone to smash. We travel by train, and auto, and motor boat, and on foot. We back and turn out and crawl forward and then lie for hours in the middle of nowhere. Suddenly we develop a burst of speed and cover as much as thirty miles in twenty hours.

This afternoon some of us marked down our route on one of the big general staff maps of Poland, and when we got through it looked as if a distracted hen had started from Warsaw to go to Berlin, then changed her mind in favor of Moscow, and finally compromised on Vienna.

It seemed to me that the best way to show the reader what a theatre of war whose boundaries are identical with the boundaries of a captured kingdom (I mean the old Kingdom of Poland) looks like will be to set down as simply as possible but with copious detail the impression it makes on the party of weary men who are zigzagging over it. I don't do this because I lack the sense of humor which ought to keep a man from exploiting the minor woes of correspondents when real tragedies are all around him. But sometimes the best way to impart conditions is to make the reader share the feel of them with one, and that is what I am trying to do here. It is not because it is important that I tell how we often went hungry and how the flies and the hives, the smells, the ptomaines, and the thirst often tried patience nearly to the breaking point, and how five miles an hour by rail finally came to be considered a good rate of progress, but because all these matters are part of the war picture. I think they help to show what war is—war without the glory.

Up at Novo Georgievsk we had war in one of its fleeting aspects of splendor—had it in the hour of victory and with its parade and circumstance, and we stood in the presence of the superb personalities whose deeds are shaking Europe. But down here it is the sweat and grime and the weary aftermath of war, and the long days of guarding a region which is going to be perhaps the principal factor in the adjustment of terms when the great peace is made.

None Spared by War.

Often in the last five days I have made the experiment of looking out over the wide landscape to see if I could find an unscathed tract of country. Always the experiment is a failure. Always a shattered church tower notches itself against the sky or a battered village lies crumpled at the edge of fields.

I don't believe that appalling statement can be better emphasized than by giving a list of some of the towns and villages which we have seen, and they are perhaps a tenth of the total we have seen since we left Warsaw:

Grodzisk.	Kielce.
Zyrardow.	Ludynia.
Skierniewice.	Wloszczowa.
Radom.	Koniepol.
Ivangorod.	Potak Zloty.
Novo Aleksandria.	Czenstochowa.

Once I thought I had come into a region which war had spared A careful survey disclosed no ruin on the plain. But a few paces further on a railway bridge that had been blown up lay in the soft ground at the foot of an embankment and just around a bend of woods was another bombarded village.

The whole country has a dragged-out, fagged-out look. It is flyblown and sodden and a "nobody cares" atmosphere envelops it. All is temporary and at loose ends. From Novo Georgievsk to the corner where the three empires meet all is waste and wreckage, wreckage and waste, a land of grime and ruin and sour smells, of silent fields and slatternly women, of weary sentries and bronzed mechanicians.

A traveler coming from another planet would know at a glance that the war had run into months. The Austrian and German flags flying from the ruins of railway stations are faded now. Uniforms that used to fit so trimly are shrunken and many of them have turned the color of the soil. But somehow the Austrians, who predominate in this region, always managed to wear them natty. They have a style about them, these courteous, merry lads! The German soldier is patient in a grim sort of way; the Austrian soldier is positively buoyant.

The German soldier never seems thoroughly content with life until he is singing; the Austrian soldier seems always contented, especially if he has a chance to extend a little hospitality, to do a friendly, spontaneous act. After fine experiences with them under trying conditions, Carr of The Los Angeles Times burst out with, "By George, I hope these fellows win every war they ever fight!"

TELLS BELGIANS TO DISARM.

Death Is Penalty for Disobedience, German General Says.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 25, (via London.) —A dispatch from Brussels to the Telegraaf says that General Sauberzweig has reminded the population that a proclamation on Jan. 1 ordered that all arms and ammunition be delivered to the German authorities.

The General adds that persons who are found in possession of arms and ammunition after Oct. 25 will be liable to the death penalty or imprisonment at hard labor for at least ten years.

Besides the punishment of guilty persons, communities where they are found will be fined 10,000 marks (about $2,500) for every case.

ITALIANS KILLED 25,000 AUSTRIANS

Slaughter on the Eastern Fronts Alone Accounts for That Number.

5,000 MEN CAPTURED THERE

Commanding Positions Along a 475-Mile Line Have Fallen Before Cadorna's Men.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TURIN, Oct. 24.—The titantic offensive operations begun three days ago all along the 475 miles of the Italian front continue to rage more furiously than ever. General Cadorna's forces having engaged 800,000 Austrians, of whom some 25,000 are reported to have fallen on the Isonzo and Carso fronts alone since the pitched battle began.

In the latter sectors, after sixty hours of fierce bombardment of the enemy's positions, the total haul of prisoners exceeds 100 officers and 5,000 men. The Italian left wing is advancing up an inclined plane of rugged ground, otherwise described as a huge sponge, of which every pore is a fortress. It has already swept forward east of Peteano toward the northern margin of the Gorizian Carso, where the plateau shelves into the Vippaco Valley and the very heart of Gorizia. Thence the Austrian bridgehead beyond the Isonzo, formed by Mounts Sabotino, Podgora and Peuma, will be exposed to the Italian bombardment.

The official announcement that the Italian centre has seized the intrenched dunes in the neighborhood of Marcottini is evidence that the long-contested saddle of San Martino, which connects with San Michele, has finally passed into the Italians' grip.

Intense satisfaction is felt at the complete conquest, after five months of heroic effort, of Mount Mrzli, which dominates Tolmino from the northwest.

Although, owing to the vast masses of infantry employed, the chief interest naturally centres in the more eastern sections, yet the progress on the Alpine front is very remarkable. The last Austrian has now been driven from the Col di Lana, a mountain 8,000 feet high, thus opening the way for an infantry advance in the Parola Valley, while victorious engagements chronicled around Pontafel and Leopoldskirchen reveal, incidentally, the fact that the Italians are actuaity in the Fel la Valley, and gaining ground among purely Austrian populations.

No incident in the recent fighting, however, has so thrilled the hearts of the Italian people as the capture of Beszecca and the surrounding heights west of Riva, hallowed by memories of the Garibaldi campaign. After a lapse of forty-nine years the Italian tricolor again floats triumphant over the sacred hill top of San Stefano, where lie buried the Garibaldian heroes slain there in July, 1866.

Rome Tells of Successes.

ROME, Oct. 25.—This official statement is issued by the general headquarters:

In the zone situated between Lake Garda and Adige our troops, descending from Monte Altissimo de Nago under a crossfire from the enemy's artillery, posted on the Biaena and Riva fortifications, stormed on the 24th the position of Dossecassina and Dossemit. This, with the heights conquered the 18th and 19th north of Brenttonico Crossono, gives them complete command of the road from Riva to Moro by Nago. In the enemy intrenchments we found arms, munitions, bombs, field kitchens, searchlights, and other war material.

The enemy made three attacks against our new positions in the Upper Rienz Valley during the night of the 24-25th. All of them were repulsed. Our troops followed up the retreating enemy closely and were able to get up to his trenches and make large breaches in the barbed wire entanglements.

Further successful raids by our columns in the Fella Valley are reported. Lusnitz has been burned.

In the Monte Nero zone the enemy twice attacked our positions above Mrzli, but was repulsed, leaving twenty-one prisoners. He then directed a more violent attack from the summit of Vodil against our lines extending from below Zatolmin to Mrzli, which he succeeded in piercing and partly occupying later; however, our Alpine troops, with irresistible dash, reconquered the lost trenches, taking seventy prisoners, two of whom were officers. We buried 302 enemy bodies on the scene of the action.

On Santa Pucia Heights our troops reached a small eminence between Hill 588 and the hummock situated immediately to the south.

In the Plava zone we stormed an intrenchment known as Casa Dirova yesterday. The enemy counterattacked to retake it, but was repulsed with heavy loss, leaving eleven prisoners.

On the Carso front during the whole day there was an intense action on the part of the artillery on both sides. Our batteries on the Lower Isonzo caused a serious outbreak of fire in the environs of duino.

Vienna Reports All Attacks Repulsed.

VIENNA, Oct. 25.—This bulletin was issued today, telling of operations on the Italian front:

The battle of the Isonzo is proceeding. Yesterday, the fourth day, was characterized by great infantry combats. We repulsed al the Italian attacks with severe losses, and everywhere maintained our position.

On the Tyrolean front several battalions unsuccessfully attacked our lines of defense on the Plateau of Vilgereuth. The enemy's attacks against Cima di Mezodi and the village of Sief and in the uppermost Rienz Valley failed also.

Attacks on the Krn front yesterday and last night were repulsed. Two attacks against Mrzli failed, with the heaviest losses suffered by the Italians. Southeast of Mount Sabotin the enemy penetrated one of our trenches for a short distance, but were ejected by our counter-attacks. A new attack by two battalions of Alpine troops collapsed before our fire, the enemy's forces being almost annihilated. Before the bridgehead of Tolmino an attack was directed against our positions on the ridge west of Santa Lucia, and near Selz, which remained in our possession.

The Plava district has been under heavy artillery fire. Concentrations of the enemy's troops near Plava were dispersed by our artillery. Near Zagora in the course of the day the Italians captured a projecting portion of our trenches, but were ejected during the night. Before Monte Sabotino yesterday forenoon another attack failed before our artillery fire. Later the enemy abandoned an attempt to approach our positions at the Gorizia bridgehead.

The severest fighting occurred in the northern sector of the Doberdo Plateau, where the strongest Italian forces repeatedly attacked in masses. Received by a destructive fire, the enemy was obliged to retreat under cover. An attack against our position east of Monfalcone had a similar result.

ROOSEVELT LAUDS ANTI-HYPHEN WAR

Movement to Organize Foreign-Born Citizens Who Are Americans Only Gets Indorsement.

William Lustgarten of the law firm of Lustgarten, Weymann & Pope, 68 William Street, who is at the head of a movement to organize the American citizens of foreign birth who are opposed to the activities in this country of those persons whose Americanism is generally referred to as "hyphenated," gave out yesterday a letter from Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, in which the ex-President warmly commended the movement. The letter was read at a meeting held yesterday in Mr. Lustgarten's office, where plans for extending and co-ordinating the work of organizing the loyal citizens of foreign birth were discussed. The letter from Colonel Roosevelt follows:

Oyster Bay, L. I., N. Y.,
Oct. 15, 1915.

My dear Mr. Lustgarten:

I wish to congratulate you upon having started a society among American citizens of foreign birth who are emphatically against every species of hyphenated Americanism, who are Americans pure and simple, and who stand for America and American citizenship before all else. I hold that the naturalized American of the right type is precisely as much an American as the other citizen of the right type whose ancestors came over here three centuries ago; and I am sorry to say that there are plenty of native-born Americans who are hyphenated Americans.

Americanism is a matter of the soul and the spirit. I welcome the work of your society in working against that most sinister and evil of all movements which would tend to destroy our national unity and to split us into a tangle of warring German-Americans, Irish-Americans, English-Americans, French-Americans, and Scandinavian-Americans. You and I are fellow-Americans—just plain, straight-out, ordinary Americans. Faithfully yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

After the meeting yesterday Mr. Lustgarten said that up to date he had received about 1,500 letters from Americans of foreign birth in all parts of the country indorsing the movement and promising their aid to further the work. A majority of the responses, he said, had come from New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. Ninety per cent. of the letters, he added, were from persons of German birth or parentage, in which the writers deplored the activities of others of like birth or parentage who aid or participate in movements that tend, as Mr. Lustgarten put it, "to straddle their Americanism."

"The President," said Mr. Lustgarten, "has asserted our rights without breach of friendship with the great nations with whom he has had to deal. He has performed duties and exercised privileges of helpfulness which demonstrate his desire to make offices of friendship the means of unselfish service.

"To charge citizens of foreign birth with having committed perjury is monstrous; citizens of foreign birth are and ever have been loyal to the United States. The foreign-born citizen holds his citizenship more sacred ofttimes than does the native-born American, but, as a few among us have broken the spirit and letter of the country's neutrality, we and others similarly situated, whose loyalty to America has not been and will not be doubted, must remain no longer silent.

At the meeting yesterday it was decided to appoint a provisional committee to consider ways and means to perfect the organization and to which committee may be referred suggestions for further organization in various parts of the country. Among those present at the meeting were Emanuel M. Klein, Ira Helstein, Albert Klamroth, Henry Paul Freund, Joseph H. Fink, Val J. Airlaub, Richard P. Ritterbush, J. G. Wassmuth, William McCabe, Philip Schwell, John J. Murphy, August Weymann, John D. Feinhold, Louis Gerner, Olaf Engelsen, Elfried Meybohm, Joseph H. Newman, Jacob C. Neu, Harry Weinberger, H. P. Ruhweth, Sydney E. Levenberg, Jacob Woisner, and F. T. Van Liew.

BRITISH PUT A CHECK ON SHIP TRANSFERS

Alter Seizure Code to Agree With That Applied by France in the Dacia Case.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Oct. 26.—By an Order in Council published in last night's London Gazette the Government has declared its intention no longer to be bound by Article 57 of the Declaration of London, which runs as follows:

"Subject to the provisions respecting the transfer to an enemy flag, the neutral or enemy character of a merchant vessel is determined by the flag which she is entitled to fly."

In place of this there is substituted a regulation in accordance with which ships shall be treated in the same manner as their cargoes. Enemy goods are now liable to capture at sea under whatever flag they may be; but the Declaration of London enacted that even if a ship was owned to the extent of 50 per cent. by an enemy subject she should still be entirely free from confiscation, if registered under a neutral flag.

The arguments by which this position was defended in the report of the naval conference of 1908, which framed a declaration, seem now relatively feeble. "From more than one point of view," the conference declared, "ships may be said to possess individuality; notably, they have nationality and national character. This attribute of nationality finds visible expression in the right to fly the flag, and here, therefore, is the best test by which to decide whether their character is neutral or enemy. It is, moreover, preferable to rely exclusively upon this test and discard all considerations connected with the personal status of the owners."

No reason was given as to why it should be preferable to ignore the nationality of the owners or shareholders in a vessel and be guided only by the flag she flew. Ships are property, just as much as cargoes, and the Government has now decided that both shall be regarded as such and subjected to the same tests in determining their enemy or neutral character.

"If a German is not allowed to send his cargoes to sea," says the London Daily News, commenting on the new regulation, "it is the height of contrariness to allow him to accumulate profits by carrying other peoples' goods. The attitude now adopted by the British Government on this question will be welcomed as increasing the intensity of the commercial blockade.

"It must be remembered, however, that the new Order in Council lays open a proportion of British-owned shipping to reprisals on the part of the German Government. A considerable trade is carried on with and between the Scandinavian countries by British-owned vessels registered at Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish ports, and by others in which British subjects have a part share. The retaliatory measures which Germany may be expected to take will naturally jeopardize British interests in all such ships upon which the enemy is able to lay his hands, and which hitherto have been immune by reason of the neutral flag. The Baltic is practically the only area in which the danger exists. Every possible step will doubtless be taken by those concerned to minimize these losses as much as possible, but some are perhaps inevitable. The approach of Winter naturally reduces the amount of shipping at work in the Baltic, which is in our favor.

"It would be interesting to know whether the principle of Article 56 of the declaration will be applied to part interest in ships. This declares that the transfer of an enemy vessel to a neutral flag effected after the outbreak of hostilities is not valid unless it is proven that the transfer was not made in order to escape the consequences of war."

Lansing's Report on Mexico to Russian Ambassador Optimistic—Get Clue to Border Bandits.

DOUGLAS, Ariz., Oct. 25.—Major Cervantes and 200 soldiers of the advance guard of the Villa army invading Sonora arrived at Agua Prieta, opposite here, today, and surrendered to General Calles, the Carranza commander. Surrender and amnesty were arranged beforehand by long-distance telephone. Cervantes and his men escaped only after a sharp fight with pursuing Villa cavalry at Esqueda. A detachment of Carranza troops aided the deserters. A number were killed and wounded on both sides.

According to a statement from Calles, General Pablo Lopez, commanding a detachment of 600 of the Villa advance guard, also desired to surrender, but telephone service was interrupted before arrangements were completed.

R. Garduno, Carranza Consul here, received today $10,000 as the first installment of $60,000 from the Carranza Government to care for refugees driven into Agua Prieta by the advance of the Villa invaders. O. K. Goll, President of the Chamber of Commerce, today telegraphed the State Department requesting that permission be given for the establishment of a camp on the American side of the boundary if the refugees should be driven across. Many of the refugees have been refused admission to the United States for various reasons, principally poverty and disease.

MEXICAN SITUATION IMPROVES

Lansing Reports to Russian Ambassador—Forerunner of Recognition.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Conditions throughout Mexico are showing marked improvement, according to an announcement today by Secretary Lansing. The Secretary was able to give an optimistic report of the situation to George Bakhmeteff, the Russian Ambassador, who made inquiries today preparatory, it is believed, to advising his Government concerning recognition. The British and French Ambassadors recently made similar inquiries, and it is now believed recognition of the Carranza Government by many of the European powers will follow in the near future.

BANDITS DRIVEN OFF.

American Trooper Killed in Attack n Entrenched Position.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Oct. 25.—Bandits who attacked an intrenched United States infantry camp within six miles of Brownsville yesterday escaped capture by more than a thousand troops, rangers, and deputies who started in pursuit of them in half an hour after the fight. Daylight revealed that there were possibly thirty or forty men in two attacking parties which attempted to ambush the soldiers.

Private Herman E. Moore of the Fourth Infantry was wounded in the engagement and died today. His home was in Crystal, Ind. Moore was the eleventh soldier killed in fights with bandits since last July.

TAKE PASSENGERS' GOLD.

British Officials Ask Travelers on New York to Exchange for Notes.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—How the British authorities are in every way aiding the Treasury's efforts to prevent gold from unnecessarily going out of the country was exemplified on Saturday, when the American liner New York sailed from Liverpool. Emigration officials just before the vessel's departure asked every male passenger from the first cabin to the steerage to give up any British gold in his possession and to take notes in exchange.

The request met with a satisfactory response, more than $5,000 in gold being given to the officials from the purses of the passengers.

With the drain of gold to America to pay for war necessities, the British Government is doing everything within its power to prevent individuals from taking the metal away. Banks are now cashing checks almost without exception in notes, and the British sovereign, which was so promiscuously used before the war, has now almost entirely disappeared from ordinary trade circulation.

At the critical age of middle life

To grow old gracefully! This is the hope of every man and woman at the critical age of middle life. To keep the mind fresh, the body active—too keep from too-early "slowing up" with the weight of advancing years—to be able too resist the attack of disease with the same certainty as in the younger day—this is the hope of the middle-aged.

And here the kindly help of Sanatogen brings most gratifying results. Embodying purest albumen and organic phosphorus, Sanatogen is easily assimilated into the system; it feeds the depleted cells and tissues, restores energy, reawakens the appetite, and strengthens the organism so that it is better able to withstand the inroads of disease.

Many indeed are those who, after using Sanatogen, can say with John Burroughs, the venerable naturalist:

"My sleep is 50 per cent. better than it was a year ago, and my mind and strength are much improved."

Or with the Hon. Wm. E. Chandler, former Sec'y of the Navy, who writes:

"Sanatogen is a pleasant nutriment for cases of impaired digestion. It strengthens without irritating and promotes vitality in feeble folks."

Famous men and women almost without number have given grateful praise for the restorative aid of Sanatogen, and over 21,000 physicians—after watching it in their daily practice—have written expressing their belief in Sanatogen.

To guard against the pitfalls of advancing years, Sanatogen can be helpful also to you.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists, everywhere, from $1.00 up.

AUSTRIA ISSUES SECOND RED BOOK

ENVOY VOICED SUSPICIONS

RIFT GRADUALLY WIDENED

"Czar's Unjustified Mobilization" Urged in Vain as Reason for Applying Terms of Alliance.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—The second "Red Book" dealing with the diplomatic relations existing between the Chancellery of Vienna and that of Rome for eleven months previous to Italy entering the war (May 24, 1915,) is issued today by the Austro-Hungarian Ministry of Foreign Affairs through the Imperial Embassy here.

It contains 205 dispatches, for the most part exchanged between the Austro-Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs—at first Count Berchtold and then Baron Burian—and the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at Rome—at first Von Mérey and then Baron Macchio—between July 20, 1914, and May 23, 1915, together with an appendix in which are presented Article I., III., IV., and VII. of the Triple Alliance Treaty and some correspondence exchanged between Vienna and Rome in 1911-12 during the Italo-Turkish war.

The material covering the period from Dec. 9, 1914, when Baron Sonnino, Italian Foreign Minister, sent his first note to the Italian Ambassador at Vienna, Duke Avarna, until May 4, 1915, when the latter on instructions from Rome denounced the Triple Alliance Treaty, has already been presented through Italian interpretation in the "Green Book," which was first printed in English in THE NEW YORK TIMES of June 13, 1915, in a translation that won the approval of the Italian Embassy here.

A careful comparison of the Text of the "Green Book" and that of the new "Red Book" shows a remarkable fidelity of expression between the Italian Ambassador at Vienna and the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at Rome in interpreting the messages received from their respective chiefs.

On June 27, 1915, THE NEW YORK TIMES published the full text of the first Austro-Hungarian "Red Book" on the Italo-Austrian negotiations, which was made up of a few letters principally covering the period from the denouncement of the treaty, May 4, to the declaration of war, May 24, 1915, together with an elaborate introduction to which reference was made to many of the documents, now presented for the first time in extenso in the new "Red Book" and full texts of the articles already noted of the Triple Alliance Treaty.

What Is Actually New.

It will thus be seen that what is actually new in the second Red Book deals, from the Austro-Hungarian point of view, with the conversations carried on between Vienna and Rome from July 20, 1914, when Count Berchtold sent his first note of instructions to von Mérey, concerning Austro-Hungary's prospective intervention in the affairs of Serbia, until Dec. 9, 1914, when Baron Sonnino sent his first note of instructions to Duke Avarna, concerning Italy's interpretation of Article VII., and her demand for compensation under said article of the Triple Alliance Treaty.

The Italian interpretation of these conversations has not yet been made public.

On July 20, 1914, then, three days before Vienna dispatched the fatal ultimatum to Belgrade, Count Berchtold sent a note of instructions to von Mérey, the introduction to which reads:

"We must consider the possibility that the Royal Italian Government, in case of warlike complications between us and Serbia, will endeavor to interpret Article VII. of the Triple Alliance Treaty in a way which would conform neither with the sense nor with the wording of it, and that it will claim compensation. The inclosed note will serve for your guidance in opposing such a possible Italian interpretation of the above mentioned article, which the Marchese di San Giuliano, (predecessor of Baron Sonnino in the Italian Foreign Office,) may bring forward."

Austria's interpretation of the famous Article VII. is now well known. It is based upon the Austro-Hungarian undertaking that since the intervention of the Vienna Government in Serbian affairs included neither military, territorial, political, nor economic occupation, the question of compensation could not be raised by Italy.

On July 21, 1914, von Mérey telegraphs to Count Berchtold an account of an interview he had had with San Giuliano which closes with these reassuring words:

"He has already advised Belgrade to be conciliatory.

"Finally, the Minister remarked that his confidence in our moderation toward Serbia was chiefly based on the wisdom of our sovereign. While agreeing with him on this point, I replied that for this very reason he could rest assured that our steps in Belgrade would be carefully thought out and that whatever form they might take they would be limited to absolutely necessary action.

"On the whole, the conversation gave me the impression of many friendly phases with as many mental reservations; furthermore, that the Minister evidently does not yet believe that events will lead to war, but rather expects Serbia to yield. He probably bases his calculations on an intensive diplomatic intervention in Vienna and Belgrade on the part of the powers."

On the same day that the Austrian ultimatum was sent to Serbia, von Mérey called on San Giuliano and telegraphed a report of the interview to Count Berchtold, an important part of which reads:

"The latter (San Giuliano) expressed his inability to give an opinion without being acquainted with the demands made at Belgrade by the Austro-Hungarian Government, and without having discussed the matter with the Prime Minister. The latter will proceed tomorrow to Fiugi, where events will be discussed between him, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the German Ambassador who is there at present.

"In terms which he distinctly qualified as both official and private, the Marchese di San Giuliano expressed his misgivings concerning Italian public opinion. Nevertheless, he at once wrote a letter to Secretary General de Martino, with the professed instruction to inspire the press with moderation when the news of the delivery of our ultimatum shall reach Rome."

The text of the ultimatum was supposed to have reached the Chancelleries of the great powers on July 24, but, telegraphs von Mérey, on that day, to Count Berchtold: "Owing to absence of Minister of Foreign Affairs and of Under Secretary of State, our note to the Serbian Government was delivered to the Secretary General this afternoon."

Last to Examine Ultimatum's Text.

Thus the responsible Ministry of Italy, the ally of Germany and Austria-Hungary, was the last of the great Chancelleries to examine the text of the ultimatum.

On July 26, Count Berchtold telegraphed von Mérey at Rome:

"Yesterday's telegram from Count Szögény, (Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at Berlin:) 'Secretary of State told me today that my Italian colleague seemed surprised you had not earlier informed his Government, as an allied power, of your steps in Belgrade.

"'Von Jagow replied that Germany had not been informed by us any earlier, which he [von Jagow] considered a perfectly correct procedure, because present conflict must be regarded as a matter between Austria-Hungary and Serbia.

"'He would also telegraph this to the Imperial German Ambassador at Rome for his guidance and instruct him to point out to Marchese di San Giuliano, if occasion should arise, that Italy had not previously informed her allies of her forty-eight-hour ultimatum to Turkey.'"

Earlier in the day Count Berchtold had sent this telegram to von Mérey:

"Since Serbia has refused to comply with our demands, we have broken off diplomatic relations with that country.

"You will at once call on the Minister of Foreign Affairs or on his representative and make, in effect, the following declaration:

"'The Royal Serbian Government has refused to comply with the demands which we have been compelled to make for the permanent safety of our vital interests. In so doing it has manifested its unwillingness to abandon its subversive aspirations, which aim at the constant disturbance of some of our territories upon the border and at their ultimate separation from the Dual Monarchy.

"'To our regret, and much against our will, we are therefore placed under the necessity of forcing Serbia by the most drastic means to alter radically her hitherto hostile attitude.'"

On this same 26th of July Count Berchtold reminded von Mérey of the instructions he had transmitted on the 20th inst. and added others based upon Austria-Hungary's intervention in 1911-12 limiting Italy's campaign against Turkey and Italy's acceptation then of the Austro-Hungarian view.

On July 29 von Mérey telegraphed to Count Berchtold the views of the Italian Government in regard to Article VII. and the fact that Germany concurred in the Italian views, but he added:

"This reply fully confirms my impression that this Government is chiefly concerned in the question of compensation; that it is determined to force a solution at this time and to this end invokes Germany's interpretation of Article VII., and does not even shrink from attempts at blackmail. It is also worthy of note that the Italian Government desires the exchange of views to take place in Vienna and not Berlin."

ANTI-CONSCRIPTION PLEA.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—A manifesto opposing conscription has been issued by a comparatively small number of members of Parliament. Among the reasons given for their opposition is that the compulsory system would so deplete the ranks of the industrial workers that Great Britain would be unable to meet the obligations she has assumed on behalf of the Allies to supply them with stores of munitions and give them substantial financial help.

It is further declared that compulsion would arouse bitter opposition among the workmen and irretrievably destroy national unity, which is essential to the successful prosecution of the war.

LAUD THE HOHENZOLLERNS.

Berlin Celebrates Anniversary of the House's Rule.

BERLIN, Oct. 25, (by Wireless Telegraph to Sayville, L. I.)—All the churches of Berlin held service yesterday in commemoration of the five hundredth anniversary of the establishment of Hohenzollern rule over Brandenburg. The service in the cathedral was attended by Emperor William, Empress Augusta Victoria, Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, many Generals and Admirals and the Diplomatic Corps, including the American Ambassador.

The streets outside the cathedral were crowded by thousands of persons who could not gain admittance. Emperor William was cheered enthusiastically.

FOR $50,000 FUND FOR POLES

Mme. Sembrich Presides and Hudson Maxim Speaks at Meeting.

The American Polish Relief Committee of New York at a meeting held yesterday afternoon in the committee's rooms, at 14 East Forty-sixth Street, launched a plan which has for its object the raising of a $50,000 fund for immediate relief work. For two weeks the committee will collect pledges, and the campaign will wind up with a rally in a theatre on Nov. 8.

Mme. Marcella Sembrich, active head of the organization, presided at yesterday's meeting and the principal speaker was Hudson Maxim. In introducing him Mme. Sembrich made a plea for stricken Poland and told of the desolation that had been visited upon that unfortunate country.

In making his appeal for Poland Mr. Maxim spoke of America's own need of preparedness for war.

"I have been working hard for national defense," he said. "We must have defense if we do not want this country to be despoiled and desolated as was Poland. It is our duty to prepare so that we may not be Belgianized and Polandized."

Mr. Maxim said the whole civilized world, that had believed that civilization had outgrown barbarity, now found it was mistaken and that men were as brutal as they ever were.

WELCOME OVERSEAS TRUST.

British Merely Require Adequate Guarantees of Goods' Destination.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—British authorities have let it be known that the newly established American Overseas Corporation will receive the recognition and approval of the British Government as soon as it is shown by the character of the men back of the organization and its European connections that it can be guaranteed that goods exported under the corporation's rules will not reach the enemies of the Entente Allies. At present the British Embassy is kept busy answering requests for information from American exporters, and much of this work will be obviated if the association undertakes to look after the exports.

Secretary Redfield's indorsement of the project has been accepted as practically removing any doubt as to its legality under American anti-trust laws.

Operating a Model 10

Remington Typewriter

Miss Stollnitz wrote 114 words per minute net for fifteen minutes, a world's record for novices in International Championship Contests

This novice event is open only to those who have never used a typewriter previous to September, 1914. It is therefore the one event that gives a real indication of the machine's part in the development of speed in typewriting.

The question of typewriter merit is not determined by what the exceptional operator of exceptional training can do, but by what the average operator can do.

And the best answer to this question, afforded by any speed contest, is, what can the novice do?—for the novice stage is the stage through which all operators must pass.

By this test the Remington has proved itself to be THE operator's machine—the machine which enables the operator to do the most and the best work from the very outset, and ever after.

It Is a School's Work That Counts

CONCENTRATION is the keynote of our work. Before a boy leaves here he has learned once for all to keep his mind on one thing at a time. It is not a cramming process. It is simply utilizing the moments a boy wastes if he lets his mind wander. These records are more than isolated cases. They are representative of the type of work we do. Names and indisputable records on request.

Not by Cramming, but by CONCENTRATION

MR. MELLEN SAYS HE 'HOGGED' TRAFFIC

Ex-President Tells Court He "Did What He Could for New Haven."

SOMETIMES HELPED PUBLIC

Correspondence Shows Disappointed Lover Was Sent to Make "Kicking Patrons" Sorry.

Armed with dozens of volumes of the correspondence and records of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, Frank M. Swacker, counsel for the Government, undertook yesterday in the Federal District Court before Judge Hunt to show, with Charles S. Mellen on the stand, how William Rockefeller and the ten other Directors began to crush the New York & New England Railroad Company in the course of the alleged conspiracy to monopolize the transportation facilities of New England. Mr. Mellen's criticism of the records was that what he did he had thought to be his duty.

First there came a memorandum from William E. Barnett, Secretary to the New Haven, in which he sketched out a policy by which the Wilson's Point service of the New England might be discredited and finally dropped. Then there came the resolution of the New Haven directors to hold any of their number harmless for any expenses he might incur for the company which, it was understood, referred to the backing William Rockefeller gave to the Goldsmith suit against the New England.

A lengthy correspondence showed how the New England had regarded as "a declaration of war" the refusal of the New Haven to continue the advance of charges to be collected on through freight hauled over to the New Haven, and how the New Haven had retorted that it could not provide capital for its rival.

Last came the deliberate diversion of traffic, that which had come from the West over the Poughkeepsie Bridge and the New England to Boston, to the Harlem River and the Shore Line route, and the refusal to quote through rates for coal from the Philadelphia & Reading unless it agreed to use the New Haven lines exclusively.

As Mr. Mellen stood, a tall, thin figure, by the map stand and heard these former triumphs of his now held up as breaches of the law, he maintained that what he had done was in the way of his duty to his company or for the absolute advantage of the public.

Plan to Kill Terminal Co.

The attack by the Government on the methods of the New Haven in fighting the New York & New England began with the production of a memorandum in the handwriting of William E. Barnett, Executive Secretary, and at one time Vice President of the New Haven.

The memorandum dealt with the New England Terminal Company, which, operated by the New England and the Housatonic companies, provided the former with the entrance to New York by Wilson's Point, which, according to the Government, the New Haven Directors had set out to destroy. It took the form of a plan to cripple the terminal company in such a way that no one would care whether it were put out of business or not. It read:

Reduce Terminal Company's equipment to a minimum—say one tug and one tencar float—so as to keep up a mere semblance of a line.

Fill the float daily with carloads of freight from N. E. and from Hous. If N. E. sends five carloads any day supplement this with five from Housatonic; if N. E. sends six carloads, add four from Housatonic. If more freight comes than floats can hold the Terminal Company, by reason of the inadequacy of its facilities, cannot handle it, add more, or some other way. This keeps up a colorable operation of the line, which bondholders would not object to as long as their coupons are paid.

N. E. wouldn't object, because as I understand it they want to run their freight some other way.

N. E. couldn't well object to Housatonic sending the bulk of their freight some other way because to do so would be pot calling kettle black.

The proceeds of sale of all the terminal equipment (except a tug and float) would go to pay in- debts of Terminal Company, or if necessary to taking up bonds or increasing the sinking fund.

After operating for a time such an inadequate line perhaps everybody would be glad to abolish it entirely.

Judge Hunt admitted this document, although he said he had spent two hours on Sunday in the Bar Association endeavoring to satisfy himself concerning the point raised by the defense, and did not come away entirely satisfied. Mr. Swacker explained that the Government did not contend that the memorandum showed that the measures had been carried out, but merely the intent of the New Haven Company at the time.

Rap at Civic Bodies.

Then the Government put in a letter in which the first reference was made to the Goldsmith suit, which proved the undoing of the New England. It was brought in 1893 against the company by a Boston liquor dealer, Nathaniel F. Goldsmith, and, as stated by Mr. Batts in his opening for the Government, the responsibility for the cost of it is alleged to have been finally taken over by Mr. Rockefeller in order that it might be pressed to the embarrassment of the rival of the New Haven.

Reference to it came first in a letter written on April 30, 1892, by Charles P. Clark, President of the New Haven, to Frank Thomson, First Vice President of the Pennsylvania. This communication was marked "personal and confidential," and in it Mr. Clark said that on May 1 the New Haven was beginning to send a portion of the Pennsylvania freight over the Shore Line, "but have not hired a brass band to emphasize the fact," and he particularly asks Mr. Thomson to instruct all his officials not to aid or encourage any attempt of the New England to make trouble for the New Haven either directly or presumably at its instance by fruit dealers, consignees, or public-spirited bodies in Boston or elsewhere, however high-sounding the name."

Then from a letter written on Dec. 9, 1893, by George F. Randolph, General Traffic Manager of the New England, to Mr. Mellen, it appeared that the New Haven was declining to continue to advance to the New England certain charges alleged to be due the latter on through freight.

New England Complains.

"This can only be regarded," he wrote "as an open declaration of war on our business and a direct blow at our interests, but it hardly seems possible to me under existing circumstances that this can be your intentions."

He quoted the general practice of railroads in this matter and pointed out that the New Haven was permitting the Pennsylvania, the Lehigh Valley, the New York Central and the West Shore to get the same kind of advances. To this Mr. Mellen replied in a letter of Dec. 13, 1893, which in part read:

"When we receive such a communication from you we begin to query for what purpose you think our railroad exists, except it be to promote the interests of your company. * * *

"You ask us to advance to you in cash as expenses your earnings on business to local points on our line, well knowing that we must give two to four weeks' credit before we can make collection."

Then he added that the New Haven could handle the business in question by connections with other lines, and if there were any complaints from the customers of the New Haven he would take them up as they came in.

Mr. Mellen thus wrote to C. Peter Clark, General Freight Agent of the Old Colony system, bidding him answer the complaints of certain Taunton shippers concerning the prepayment of charges rendered necessary by the new arrangement:

"Write just as nice a letter as you know how to each one of these people, expressing all manner of regret that you are obliged to take this action and that it embarrasses them, but ask them to give some consideration to the railroad situation, and try and put up with the situation as not being an unreasonable one, but rather one necessary for the proper protection of our property.

Writes of Drawing Tears.

"You can fix up a good letter; I have no doubt, one that will draw tears to the eyes of the people to whom it is addressed, and convince them that you are only driven to this course by dire necessity."

Mr. Clark replied that he had decided to send a man down to interview the Taunton shippers personally, and went on:

"I have selected young Palmer, and I think he will reflect our grief at the cruel situation. Palmer was to have been married the 1st of January, but the Pennsylvania Railroad cut down their force in Boston, whereby he lost his position. When he came here his pay was less, and the poor fellow has been waiting, waiting, waiting ever since. I think his mournful appearance will enable him to do ample justice to the sad side of this unfortunate situation."

Identification of documents took up a good deal of the morning session. A. P. Russell, valuation counsel of the New Haven, was called to identify books and papers of the period when Percy R. Todd was Vice President of the company, after Mr. Mellen had gone to the Northern Pacific, and then John T. Johnson, a colored man, from the office of the President of the New Haven, was sworn to carry on the testimony along this line.

As Johnson stepped toward the witness stand he stopped to shake hands with William Rockefeller, beamed on Lewis Cass Ledyard and the other Directors, and nodded kindly to Mr. Mellen.

The Government did not find the witness very satisfactory. He knew all about his own functions in handling the letters, but he could not tell definitely that they had been posted. On this point the defense suggested that before a letter was put in evidence it should not only be shown that it came from the letter-press books of the New Haven, but that it had actually been sent. Mr. Mellen came to the assistance of the Government in this respect.

"A great many letters," he said, "have been copied in books that were sent to Boston, in no instance, to my knowledge, without a notation upon the press copy leaf that the letter was canceled or not sent. I know of no instance as far as my personal experience goes, and yet I cannot say what my clerks did."

The trial will be continued this morning at 10:30 o'clock, when Mr. Mellen will again be on the stand.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS SUBJECT TO NEW RULE

No Passports for Those Going from One Belligerent Country to Another.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—A new policy was announced tonight by the State Department with reference to the issuance of American passports to writers intending to visit the war zones of Europe. Every effort is to be made to prevent the missuse of the American passport for unneutral purposes. The text of the announcement follows:

"The number of newspaper writers who have applied for passports has caused the department to rule that hereafter it will issue passports to writers who contemplate visiting belligerent countries only when they are regularly accredited to the department by responsible journals or recognized press associations.

"The department will not issue passports to individuals who are paid, or expect to be paid, by the agents of foreign Governments for matter which they may publish. Before issuing passports to writers the department must be assured that their purposes are of a neutral character.

"The department will not issue passports to writers who contemplate going from the territory of one belligerent country to that of the enemy.

"The object of this ruling is to insure the continued neutrality of the United States, and to prevent individuals from putting their safety in jeopardy."

PITTSBURGH PIVOT OF SUFFRAGE FIGHT

Allegheny County's Vote, Leaders Assert, May Decide the Pennsylvania Contest.

WAGING HOT CAMPAIGN

Pros and Antis Both Confident—Democratic Leader Favors Suffrage, but Keeps Hands Off.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Oct. 25.—The woman suffrage campaign appears to thrive better here than anywhere else in the Keystone State. Allegheny County, of which this hustling soot-laden city is the centre, is very likely to prove the battleground where a suffrage or anti-suffrage conclusion will be reached in case the vote on the Constitutional amendment to enfranchise the women of Pennsylvania should be close.

Of the marked apathy in some other parts of the State which THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent has visited there is no visible sign here. Both the suffragists and the anti-suffragists have militant organizations which are carrying on a vigorous campaign. The headquarters of both the suffrage advocates and the antis are among the busiest places in Pittsburgh. If anything the suffragists are the more active. They have the advantage of the antis in that there are no suffragist ethics to prevent open-air campaigning, while the rules of the anti-suffrage organizations militate against such methods.

The antis admit that they have found it difficult to reach the multitude of industrial workers, many of whom are "Lunkies," which in Western Pennsylvania parlance means workers of the immigrant class who do not understand English.

Both the suffragists and the antis speak hopefully regarding the prospective and possibly the pivotal vote of Allegheny County. Both sides admit that their expectations are not based on an exact canvass of the voters, such as is made by the men's organizations prior to election. It is doubtful whether there exists any trustworthy basis for an estimate of the coming vote in this part of the State. The leaders of both the Democratic and Republican organizations here assert that they are taking no active interest in the fight, and have not bothered about making a suffrage canvass.

Mrs. J. O. Miller, head of the Equal Franchise Federation, when questioned today regarding the outlook for Woman Suffrage, said:

"Our sincere belief is that the Woman Suffrage amendment will carry in Pittsburgh and Allegheny County; that rural districts throughout the State will return large majorities, and that Philadelphia will give at least a small majority that will be favorable.

Miss Julia Morgan Harding, President of the Pittsburgh branch of the Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, spoke with optimism and assurance about the prospect of defeating the woman suffrage amendment in Pennsylvania as it was defeated in New Jersey.

The headway made by the suffrage cause in Allegheny County and in several other western counties of the State, is due in a large measure to the moral support it has received from the younger and more progressive element in the Democratic organization. Democrats, once were quite powerful in Western Pennsylvania under the leadership of Colonel J. M. Guffey, for many years the Democratic National Committeeman from this State. Colonel Guffey fought Bryan for years successfully. He transferred his political enmity to Woodrow Wilson when the latter boomed up as a potential figure in the fight for the Presidential nomination in 1912. This, together with his reactionary views and his many corporation affiliations, proved his political undoing. His nephew, Joseph S. Guffey, a Wilson Democrat, when the Wilson boom in Pennsylvania was in its embryonic stage, wrested the leadership of the Democratic organization in the western counties away from his aged uncle and has succeeded in retaining control throughout four bitterly fought primary campaigns. With the death of James K. Hall of Elk County about a year ago, the last prop of the old Guffey machine crumbled and left the younger and more progressive Guffey supreme.

"I strongly favor woman suffrage," Mr. Guffey said to THE TIMES correspondent. "I shall vote to give the women of Pennsylvania the ballot and I shall give them all the personal support in my power."

There is nothing in the Democratic platform to pledge the organization to the suffrage cause. For that reason Mr. Guffey has refrained from bringing any pressure to bear on his followers and has resisted efforts emanating from other quarters to make the Democrats in Allegheny County take up woman suffrage as an issue. The indications are that a majority of the Democratic regulars here, as elsewhere in the State, will go to the polls a week from tomorrow and cast their vote against Amendment 1.

Perhaps what the suffragists prize as their most valuable asset in their campaign is the almost united support they are receiving from the newspapers—not only the dailies in this city, but the weeklies throughout the county, which ordinarily are strongly swayed by political influences brought to bear by the respective machines. Of these latter, only one is outspoken against suffrage. Two of the eight Pittsburgh newspapers are taking a neutral stand on the question. The rest are advocating the ratification of the woman suffrage amendment.

PLAN GALA THEATRE EVENING.

Suffragists to Speak at Many Shows Tomorrow Night.

Nearly every theatre in Manhattan has opened its doors to the suffragists for a gala theatre evening tomorrow, and there will be many box parties. There will be suffrage decorations and speeches. At the Globe Theatre, Miss Mary Johnston, the writer, and her sisters, Miss Elizabeth and Miss Eloise, will see "Chin-Chin" as the guests of Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, with Miss Mary Garrett Hay, Mrs. Holman, wife of the Australia Premier, and her friend, Mrs. MacIntosh.

Mrs. Marcum W. Marks at the Belasco will entertain Mr. and Mrs. Oscar S. Straus and Mr. and Mrs. William McCarroll. Mrs. Frederick Nathan will be at the Harris Theatre, Dr. Katharine B. Davis at the Century, and Mrs. Richard Aldrich at the Candler, and Mrs. John Blair at George M. Cohan's Theatre.

Fire Commissioner and Mrs. Robert Adamson will see "Under Fire" at the Hudson Theatre, Miss Lillian Wald will have a box at the Gaiety, Mrs. Charles Tiffany will be at the Lyceum, Mrs. Anna Ticas Weeks at the Bandbox, and Mrs. Charles Frieley Winch at the Republic. The Men's League for Woman Suffrage will be out in full force at the Hippodrome, where James Lees Laidlaw, the President, will entertain Judge and Mrs. Charles Guy.

"I am with you heart and soul," said David Belasco, in extending the courtesy of his theatre to the suffragists.

"Certainly. Count on me for the cause," said Daniel Frohman in his letter to the Theatre Committee.

DR. KOO APPOINTED CHINA'S MINISTER

Yuan Shih-kai Names Brilliant Columbia Graduate, Long in This City, to be New Envoy.

PEKING, Oct. 25.—President Yuan Shih-kai today announced the appointment of Dr. Wellington Koo, Minister to Mexico, Peru, and Cuba, to be Chinese Minister to the United States in succession to Kai Fu Shah, who is recalled to Peking.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—The United States Government has been advised officially of the intention of China to send Dr. V. K. Wellington Koo to Washington as Minister in place of Kai Fu Shah, who is being recalled. Today's announcement from Peking followed the receipt of word there through American Minister Reinsch that the American Government would be pleased to receive Dr. Koo.

The change in Ministers is considered of much significance. Dr. Koo is a protégé of President Yuan Shih-kai, and for years was his private secretary and interpreter. Since the resignation of Sun Pao Chi from the portfolio of Foreign Affairs it has generally been understood that his friend, Kai Fu Shah, the present Minister here, also would resign. There have been intimations, too, that the latter would be recalled, because, it was alleged, he did not furnish comprehensive reports of the state of American public opinion or take an active part in the parleys here in connection with the Japanese-American negotiations. So far as the Washington Government is concerned, however, Mr. Shah's presence here has been continuously acceptable.

The prospective Minister to the United States is under 30 years of age, and speaks English perfectly. He made a brilliant record in Columbia University, being elected to the Phi Beta Kappa Society for scholarship. Besides being a friend of the President of China, he is a favorite of Lin Tseng-Tsiang, the present Minister of Foreign Affairs. His wife is the daughter of Tong Shao-Yi, the first Minister of Foreign Affairs of the new republic.

RESTS MADDEN CASE.

Counsel for Gangster Believes Recanting Will Save Client.

Judge Nott, in General Sessions yesterday, announced that he would give the District Attorney's office until Thursday in which to file briefs opposing the motion for a new trial made in behalf of Owney Madden, the west side gangster, now in Sing Sing under a twenty-year sentence for the killing of "Patsy" Doyle on Nov. 28 last.

Charles J. Colligan, who has been appearing as counsel for Madden, decided yesterday to rest his case on the recanting testimony given by Frieda Horner, Margaret Everdeane, and "Willie" Mott, three witnesses for the State in Madden's trial, who since the gangster's conviction have filed affidavits saying they had been compelled to commit perjury at the trial by Assistant District Attorney Walter R. Deuel. Mr. Colligan has until next Monday in which to submit a brief in reply to the District Attorney, after which Judge Nott will render his decision.

SUFFRAGE CAMPAIGN TO END WITH A RUSH

CLOSE WITH 24-HOUR RALLY

Speaking Will Cease Saturday and Leaders Will Rest for Long Watch Tuesday.

Suffragists began yesterday to speed up their campaign for the last week before election. There have been 6,500 volunteer women workers in the State for weeks, and the Woman Suffrage Party, organized in every district in the city, will put on 500 extra workers in Manhattan alone. The Women's Political Union will have twenty speakers out on Saturday evening, and it will have a twenty-four-hour relay meeting Friday night and part of Saturday. In the Tribune Building the women have a room from which they are sending out appeals to voters. They are working night and day. In each envelope is a letter from Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, President of the Women's Political Union; a piece of literature, and a sample ballot showing the men how to vote for the woman's amendment.

The work is all volunteer; girls from downtown offices come in after they leave their own work and toil late into the night. Mrs. Margaret Lawrence is in charge during the day, and Mrs. Nora Blatch de Forest comes in after her office hours to carry on the night work. Already 50,000 voters have been reached by this means, and the work will go on until Election Day.

The Publicity Committee of the Empire State Campaign Committee, Chairman de R. Whitehouse, Chairman, will meet every afternoon this week at the residence of Mrs. Ogden Mills Reid, 35 West Fifty-third Street, and from there will be issued the last answers to antis. Allan McCurdy reported to the New York women that many misstatements were made to the voters in New Jersey just before Election Day. They were told that conditions were serious in the States where the ballot has been given to the women.

"The vote has been taken from the men, and the women have all the offices," was one of the statements Mr. McCurdy said he heard made to a crowd of ignorant Italians.

The Empire State Committee is filling all gaps in its army of speakers up-State, putting in new ones where others have been obliged to leave.

The Women's Political Union had a "Capital and Labor" meeting last night, Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer and Miss Josephine Casey, a labor woman, speaking in the open on Thirty-seventh and Fifty-third Streets, west of Broadway. Mrs. Havemeyer carried the little "Ship of State," which she has used in the upper part of New York to stir the people to a belief in women's democracy.

The notes of the fife and drum corps, which is part of the outfit of the Woman Suffrage Party, will open a twelve-hour suffrage meeting at Fortieth Street and Broadway at 10 o'clock this morning. Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson and Collector of the Port Dudley Field Malone, will be among the speakers. Miss Mary Newcomb, who arranged the meeting, will fill in between speakers.

Friday evening the last of the big Manhattan campaign rallies will be held under the auspices of the Woman Suffrage Party at Carnegie Hall. Congressman Edward Keating, whose work for woman suffrage, is urged by his interest in child labor; Mrs. Philip Snowden of England, who has spoken at twenty-six mass meetings for suffrage during October, and John W. Keller, former President of the National Democratic Club, will be among the speakers. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt will preside. There will be four automobiles outside the hall in charge of Mrs. Mabel Russell filled with speakers for overflow meetings. There has been a great demand for orchestra and box seats for the meeting since the parade. Mrs. Ira Clark Balch, Mrs. Peter Sexton, Mrs. William Riggs, Mrs. Jervis Fairchild, Mrs. Frank Stratton, and Mrs. Philip Comstock are on the Committee of Arrangements.

The anti-suffrage campaign will be closed by the mass meeting in Carnegie Hall under the auspices of the New York State Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, Saturday night speakers will be former United States Assistant Attorney General James M. Beck, Colonel John P. Irish of California, former New Jersey Assemblyman John A. Matthews of Newark, and Miss Minnie Bronson. All the boxes are taken for the meeting. The anti-suffrage headquarters, 37 West Thirty-ninth Street, will be open to 10 P. M. every night this week for the sale of anti-suffrage buttons, pennants, and literature.

MRS. CATT TO MEN "ANTIS."

Calls Wheeler Leaflet, Now Withdrawn, Unchivalrous and False.

The Empire State Campaign Committee issued a statement yesterday regarding a leaflet circulated by the Man Suffrage Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, entitled "Woman Suffrage: Some Underlying Principles and Comments," which Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, its head, had demanded withdrawn, and her correspondence with Everett P. Wheeler, head of the association. The statement, after saying that the men's organization had withdrawn the leaflet, said:

"It has been the contention of suffragists that the anti-suffragists speakers and writers do not scruple to defame the characters of the women leaders of the suffrage movement, and that they are equally reckless of the truth in their statements with regard to suffrage facts and arguments."

There are three letters from Mrs. Catt and one from Mr. Wheeler in the correspondence given out. Mrs. Catt says in her first letter, after demanding that the leaflet be withdrawn at once, and that its statements be retracted as untruthful:

"The leaflet says: 'Woman Suffrage should be republished, because of the type and attitude of the leaders it has drawn to the cause,' and then goes on to say, after naming me with others as 'accepted leaders,' 'All are opposed to the doctrine that the family is the unit of society and the State.' The inference from that statement, when taken in connection with the context of the rest of the leaflet, is that I hold immoral views and am an enemy to the home and family. I am not."

Mrs. Catt also calls untrue statements made in the leaflet regarding the suffrage States. She says in conclusion:

"The action of your association in delaying reply and in persistently circulating this libelous leaflet, cunningly designed to mislead, with its implication therein that millions of women who have or desire the vote wish to lead 'loose' lives, is rankly dishonorable, and the exact opposite of that chivalry of men to women on which you anti-suffragists claim woman can rely for justice."

MEN PLEDGE SUFFRAGE AID.

Committee of Prominent Men of All Parties Sign Declaration.

Following the example of the men of New Jersey a group of New York men yesterday signed a declaration of suffrage faith. They are all suffragists of long standing, but are not among the rank and file of the suffrage workers. They issued a statement in which they took up the argument of the women in the home, and say that when she asks to vote she "merely asks to keep up with her own work after it has left the house and gone into the community. She gladly admits that her place is the home, and adds that home is everywhere."

The last paragraph says: "We, the signers of this statement, declaring our intention to vote for the amendment, belong to various parties, but we are united in our desire to have our State true to the fundamental principles of democracy."

The signers were Jacob Gould Schurman, Adolph Lewisohn, Herbert Parsons, Charles L. Guy, William A. Prendergast, John Mitchell, Egburt E. Woodbury, John K. Sague, Robert Adamson, Samuel Untermyer, Frederick M. Davenport, Dudley Field Malone, Norman Hapgood, William G. Willcox, Samuel McCune Lindsay, James Legs Laidlaw, Ogden M. Reid and Frederic C. Howe.

Promised to Speak in Columbus Dec. 10, but Didn't Tell Secretary.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Unknown to his official associates, President Wilson made an engagement to speak in Columbus, Ohio, on the night of Dec. 10. The first information that official Washington had on the subject came in letters of appreciation from people in Columbus. The writers of these letters got responses that they had been misinformed. Columbus insisted, however, that the President had promised, and Mr. Wilson was asked about the matter. He confirmed the Columbus version.

Apparently the President forgot to have an official record made of the engagement.

To Vote on Non-Partisan Rule.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 15.—California at a general election tomorrow will vote on the question of making the State Government wholly non-partisan, as its county governments and some State offices now are. Governor Hiram W. Johnson and other State officials have canvassed the State speaking for the non-partisan constitutional amendments. There apparently has been no great opposition to the amendments.

CLEARS IMMIGRATION LAW.

Supreme Court Cancels Ruling of Tribunals Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—The United States Supreme Court today overruled two lower Federal courts and the Commissioner of Immigration in New York in their ruling that, in determining whether an immigrant was likely to become a public charge, economic conditions in the part of the United States to which the immigrant desired to go should be taken into consideration. In the case at issue the Supreme Court held that the action of the immigration authorities of New York in ordering the deportation of some alien laborers on the ground that they were not likely to find work in places where they wanted to proceed was illegal.

The opinion was rendered by Justice Holmes. He laid down the principle that the condition of the immigrant himself and not external conditions in this country must serve for guidance as to the immigrant's admissibility. The case at issue involved some Russians, originally sixteen in number, who landed at Ellis Island. On the ground that they were likely to become public charges they were ordered to be deported, and fourteen of them actually were sent back to Russia. All Geglow, who intended going to Portland, Ore., appealed in behalf of another of the party who was to accompany him to the Pacific Coast. Habeas corpus proceedings were instituted and the petition was denied by two United States courts.

Cleary Man in Court.

Special to The New York Times.

NYACK, N. Y., Oct. 25.—Josiah Felter, Chairman of the Rockland County Board of Supervisors, who was indicted following an investigation of the accounts of former Town Clerk William V. Cleary, the slayer of Eugene Newman, appeared before the Supreme Court today and asked that the indictment be dismissed.

Felter was indicted on the charge of having figured in the misappropriation of $50,000 of the town poor fund. At the request of District Attorney Gagan Judge Tompkins took an adjournment until next Saturday.

It Isn't a Question of Price

TOO often men make the mistake of judging things with "price" as a basis. To some men a five-dollar hat is always a five-dollar hat, no matter what it is actually worth. Mere "price judgment" is deceptive.

For Instance:—

This Cutaway Frock Coat and Vest $19.75

Silk lined and bound edge.

In dark and Oxford Vicuna, cut on exceptionally graceful lines and finished like a custom garment. The price does not begin to give a true idea of the value; it simply emphasizes how careful you should be to choose a store that knows how to buy. We have not seen an outfit as good at $25 anywhere in New York.

Worsted Trousers at $4.75

Neat, dark stripe effects, with black background. To go with the Cutaway Coat. Others at $3.75 to $8.75.

Silk Lined Fall Overcoats, $14.75

Dark Oxford, Cambridge and black Vicunas. Lined to edge, or faced with guaranteed silk. Strictly hand-tailored. A dignified, dressy model.

How to Heal Skin-Diseases

A Baltimore doctor suggests this simple, but reliable and inexpensive, home treatment for people suffering with ring-worm, rashes and similar itching, burning skin troubles.

At any reliable druggist's get a jar of resinol ointment and a cake of resinol soap. These are not at all expensive. With the resinol soap and warm water bathe the affected parts thoroughly, until they are free from crusts and the skin is softened. Dry very gently, spread on a thin layer of the resinol ointment, and cover with a light bandage—if necessary to protect the clothing. This should be done twice a day. Usually the distressing itching and burning stop with the first treatment, and the skin soon becomes clear and healthy again. Sample free. Dept. 8-R, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

MRS. NICHOLS'S MAID DESCRIBES MURDER

Edith Langfeld Testifies She Thought Men Binding Her Were Playing Joke.

CHIEF ACCUSER OF TALLAS

Girl Asserts the Defendant Was In Better Position Than She to Cry Out Warning.

The circumstances in which Mrs. Elizabeth B. Nichols, wealthy widow of one of the founders of the grocery firm of Austin Nichols & Co., was strangled or frightened to death when three men entered her home at 4 East Seventy-ninth Street on the night of Sept. 8 and robbed her of $17,000 worth of jewelry were described in minute detail by Edith Langfeld, a chambermaid; before Judge Malone and a jury in General Sessions yesterday. The girl was the prosecution's chief witness against Onnie Tallas, Mrs. Nichols's pantry boy, who is on trial for murder in the first degree because he admitted the burglars to the house, knowing of their felonious purpose.

The men with whom he was indicted—Arthur Waltonen, formerly employed by Mrs. Nichols as a butler; Eddie Lehto, and an Italian whose name is unknown—have not been arrested. Tallas, by his own confession, knew Lehto and Waltonen when he opened the door to them. He insists he was ignorant of their intention to attack Mrs. Nichols if she offered any resistance.

According to Miss Langfeld's testimony, as given yesterday under direct examination by Assistant District Attorney Brothers, Tallas, who is 21 years old, but looks much younger, played a passive part in the tragedy. The butler, Vitale Ernes, and the cook, Ilone Toivonen, were out on the night of the crime. Mrs. Nichols was in the library on the second floor, clad in a white wrapper and pink slippers, with numerous diamond rings on her fingers and a gold watch suspended from a diamond necklace at her throat.

Thought Murder a Joke.

Miss Langfeld was just about to fall asleep in the butler's room, which she always occupied on the butler's night off. Shortly before 9 o'clock she heard the door bell ring, and heard Tallas walk down the hall. A silence of several moments followed. She wondered who entered. Suddenly a tall, slender man, with a straw hat and a black mask, which covered the whole of his face, appeared at the foot of her bed. She recognized the figure and contour of Waltonen, the former butler. She thought he was playing a joke on her, and she said nothing as he, without a word, pulled down the window. He stepped to her bedside and bent over her. She raised her hand, and gave his mask a slight tug without pulling it from his face.

"What have you got that thing on you for?" she asked.

The man did not answer. He pressed a revolver to her temple. She still thought he was playing a practical joke, and she pushed the revolver away lightly with her fingers, remarking, with anger:

"Take that thing away. Do you hear?"

Another man appeared in the room, also masked. He produced a rope, with which they tied her hands. They bound her ankles together with a towel. She could not be convinced that "Arthur," as she referred to Waltonen in her testimony, was serious, and so she made no outcry. But when a third man, without a mask, entered, short and stocky, whom she never had seen before, the chambermaid realized that something more serious than a joke was going on. Waltonen and the second man, known to be Lehto, leaned over her.

"Where is the Madam?" they asked.

"I can't tell you," she replied.

"You must tell us," they insisted, pushing a pair of revolvers to her face.

"Maybe she's upstairs. I don't know where she is," the girl answered.

One Man on Watch.

While the third man stood guard over her, she testified, the two others identified as Waltonen and Lehto disappeared into the upper part of the house. She listened intently for sounds from above. There was no scream. But the bell with which Mrs. Nichols was accustomed to summon her servants rang twice, and, faintly, a third time.

Ten minutes later the chambermaid heard the burglars going down the back stairs. The man at her side urged her once more to keep still and left the room. After they had banged the outer door behind them, the girl worked herself free of her bonds and walked into the hall. Tallas called to her from the other end. She walked up to him, unbound the rope with which his hands had been but loosely tied, and then ran upstairs, with the pantry boy after her.

The two found Mrs. Nichols lying on the library floor, with a piece of bed sheet across her mouth. The diamond rings had been torn from her fingers. The diamond necklace and the gold watch also were gone. On her forefinger was the gold bridge of her eyeglasses, the lenses having been broken in her fall. At first the chambermaid thought her mistress was unconscious from fright. She bathed Mrs. Nichols's face with water, then rushed to the window with Tallas and shouted for help. It was not until policemen and an ambulance surgeon arrived that she realized Mrs. Nichols was dead.

Miss Langfeld was cross-examined by former Assistant District Attorney Le Barbier for the defense. Under cross-examination she insisted it would have been of no use for her to give her mistress warning, because Mrs. Nichols could not have heard her voice. Tallas, out in the hall, was in a better position to do that, but he did not utter a sound. Moreover, she testified, she could not rid herself of the idea that it was all a joke until Waltonen and Lehto had gone upstairs, leaving the third man at her side, who as soon as she moved her lips to speak would press the cold barrel of a revolver into her temple and mutter: "Keep still! Do you hear? Keep still."

The trial continues today.

NO CUT SALARY FOR BRUERE.

He Upsets a Plan to Save the City Nearly $200,000 Next Year.

The Budget Committee of the Board of Estimate, which has been holding sessions on the 1916 tax budget in the Municipal Building, refused yesterday to vote for a plan to recognize the staffs of the committees of the Board of Estimate, as recommended by Director Tilden Adamson of the Bureau of Contract Supervision and Director George Tirrell of the Bureau of Standards.

The plan was to abolish most of the committee staffs and existing bureaus, including the chemical laboratories, and to put all under the supervision of a general director, who would also have charge of a central testing laboratory. The plan was to offer the position to Henry Bruere, City Chamberlain, who was expected to resign his present position, paying $12,000 a year, and accept a much smaller salary. When Chamberlain Bruere heard of the plan he appeared before the committee and refused to make the change. As only the Mayor and the Controller seemed to favor the scheme, a vote on it was not taken. It was estimated that the plan would make a saving of $193,554 in the 1916 budget.

The Budget Committee agreed to reduce the number of surgeons in the Police Department from twenty-four to twenty. The sub-committee had recommended that the number be reduced to fifteen. Commissioner Woods told the committee that since he has been Commissioner, the work of the twenty-four surgeons had reduced the sick list, and that many patrolmen had been refused retirement. By doing this, he said, the surgeons had saved $420,000 to the pension fund.

Public hearings on the budget before the Board of Estimate have been postponed until Wednesday, as it is impossible to get the budget ready before that time. The hearings on the Board of Education and the library appropriations will be held Friday afternoon.

29 DAYS IN JAIL FOR CHARLTON

and often the woman was heard crying late into the night.

Fourteen days after the body was found Charlton walked off the liner Prinzess Irene on to the North German Lloyd pier in Hoboken. Confronted there by Captain Scott, his wife's brother, and Chief of Police Hayes, he broke down, admitted his identity, and confessed the murder. He said in his confession:

"My wife and I lived happily together, but she had an uncontrollable temper, and so had I. On the night of the murder she had the worst outbreak of temper I ever saw. I told her to keep quiet or I would make her keep quiet. Then she had another outbreak. I took up a wooden mallet with which I had been preparing a table and hit her on the head and body two or three times. At midnight I put the body in a trunk, dragged it to the lake, and threw it in."

Mrs. Charlton had figured in the newspapers before her murder. She was Mary Crittenden Scott, daughter of a San Francisco coal merchant. She married a San Francisco lawyer named Castle in 1898. Castle went to Alaska and Mrs. Castle went on the stage. While playing in New York in 1901 she disappeared and the police sent out a general alarm for her. In August, 1900, she tried to kill William B. Craig, a New York lawyer, in "Peacock Alley" in the Waldorf. She said that Craig had bothered her with attentions and had made remarks which she considered insulting. Craig appeared before the Grand Jury and announced that he did not wish to press a complaint against her.

After his confession to the Hoboken police, Charlton was locked up in the Hudson County Jail in Jersey City, where he was a model prisoner. Italy made a request for his extradition, but Secretary of State Knox replied by asking if Italy thereby meant to waive her past interpretation of one of her treaties with the United States. The point was raised that Italy, by her refusal to honor the request for extradition of Italian subjects, had practically abrogated the treaty. Months of diplomatic exchanges followed.

For three years Charlton was held prisoner in Jersey City before he was returned to Italy for trial. Every legal means was used in an endeavor to keep him from being sent back, the case going even to the Supreme Court of the United States, which decided that he must be extradited. In the course of his incarceration in New Jersey a board of alienists examined Charlton and declared that he was of unsound mind and not responsible for the commission of the crime.

In August, 1913, Charlton was lodged in jail at Como, and since then three successive dates were set for the trial, but each time circumstances arose to cause postponements. The war was the cause of the last. In the meantime, a commission had been appointed to inquire into Charlton's sanity, and he was found to be sane. His trial was finally begun on Oct. 18.

In the Italian courts the time that a man has served in jail awaiting trial is taken into consideration by the Judges in passing sentence. Charlton was hopeful, therefore, that the Judge might decide that the three years he had spent in prison in America and the two in Italy would constitute sufficient punishment.

"O. K. BILL" TO THE RESCUE

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, N. Y., Oct. 25.—Warden Thomas Mott Osborne of Sing Sing said today, after the publication of an attack on prison reform and reformers made by Dr. Rudolph Diedling of the State Prison Commission, that he was preparing a statement, to be made public within a few days, which, in his opinion, would "enlighten the people about many things." Mr. Osborne would not, however, comment today upon Dr. Diedling's statement. He excused himself on the ground that he had not read it carefully, and would say all that he had to say within a short time.

While the Warden was not named in Dr. Diedling's attack, the Commissioner so frankly expressed his opinion about reforms which Mr. Osborne has attempted in Sing Sing that the direction of his remarks could not be mistaken. Dr. Diedling, in summing up the findings of his investigation, said "the conditions in general in the prisons of this State" were growing worse instead of better.

The Commissioner's attack was directed against "the pernicious activity of so-called professional reformers" and "the destructive effect on prison discipline in the State of having unofficial Paul Prys in the employ of reform societies dog the steps of the Prison Commission." Dr. Diedling made his attitude toward prison reform clear by saying that the reformers engendered false notions of toleration of crime and "maudlin sentiment in behalf of criminals," and that "the idea of punishment should figure prominently in the treatment of those who have been committed to prison for the protection of society."

Dr. Diedling is preparing a report on prison conditions for the State Superintendent of Prisons, and many of those who read his statement yesterday believe that he will recommend that Warden Osborne's régime be brought to an end.

One reason, it seemed, why Warden Osborne had not read Dr. Diedling's statement was that he was occupied yesterday with the opening of the safe, which is to be the depository for the token money deposited by convicts in the Sing Sing savings bank to be opened soon by the Mutual Welfare League. The safe, a second-hand one, arrived at the prison yesterday, but the shipper neglected to send with it the secret of its combination. As it was locked when it arrived, it seemed at first that it could not be opened until the combination could be obtained, but in the midst of the impatience over the delay, a happy thought occurred to convict "O. K. Bill" Meyers, who is a member of the league.

"O. K. Bill" is "doing time" for "safe cracking," and he has reformed, but he has not forgotten the tricks of his former trade. He saw a good chance yesterday to open a safe with no fear, for once in his life, of burglar alarms and policemen.

"Say," he said to those about the safe, "I've opened several like that, and without soup, too. Let's have a try."

But first of all, the cracksmen of Sing Sing's society of ex-crooks were called in so that they might give "O. K. Bill" the benefit of their experience. With all the company present, "O. K. Bill" set to work to open the safe by the sound and touch of the tumblers as they were turned. It was not an easy job. "O. K. Bill" had been out of practice for a number of years during his residence in Sing Sing, but after several hours' work, there was a click, and then another, and the great steel door swung open on its hinges. The feat closely resembled that of Jimmy Valentine in the play "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

The lock of the safe was then set on a new combination by Bill Trefry, who is to be cashier of the league's bank. Only Trefry and Warden Osborne know this combination, but, if they forget it, they still have "O. K. Bill."

JUDGES DEFEND OSBORNE.

To Form State Organization to Support Sing Sing Warden.

The reforms of Warden Thomas Mott Osborne at Sing Sing were indorsed at a conference of members of all branches of the bench in this city and a citizens' committee yesterday afternoon in the chambers of Judge Thomas C. T. Crain in the Criminal Courts Building. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst headed the citizens' committee, and the others were Judge William H. Wadhams of General Sessions, Justice John J. Freschi of Special Sessions, and Magistrate Joseph Corrigan.

At the end of the conference Judge Wadhams invited all present to attend a dinner at his home on Thursday evening to take the matter up more fully. He said that Justices of the Appellate Division, Magistrates having criminal jurisdiction, and Warden Osborne would attend.

LAUD OSBORNE TO WHITMAN.

Governor Presides at Seventieth Anniversary of His Church.

The final services in celebration of the seventieth anniversary of the Presbyterian Church on University Place, corner of Tenth Street, were held in the church last evening. Governor Charles S. Whitman, who has been a member of the church for nearly twenty years, presided and made the opening address. The other speakers were Judge William H. Wadhams of General Sessions and the Rev. Dr. John Henry Jowett, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. Other services in commemoration of the occasion were held on Sunday morning and evening.

Judge Wadhams and Dr. Jowett in their addresses strongly indorsed the work of Thomas Mott Osborne, Warden of Sing Sing, to the Governor and the congregation.

MISS MORGAN'S CLUB OPENS

Her Ticket-Buying Society Has Its Housewarming in Harlem.

Most of the members of the Ticket Club, which was organized with the help of Miss Anne Morgan and other society women to purchase theatre and grand opera tickets in large quantities at reduced rates, took part last night in the house-warming of the club house of the Workers' Amusement Club, at 142 West 118th Street.

The Ticket Club has been in existence for five years, and has succeeded in enabling those who belonged to it to see most of the operas and the theatrical hits at prices considerably less than those paid by the general public. More than a year ago it was suggested that the young men and women in the club should form a social club instead of being associated merely as a price-cutting organization.

The first steps were taken some months ago toward forming a social organization and getting a club house. It was announced some time ago that the club house would be opened the first of the year, but those promoting the organization succeeded in furnishing the house and opening it last night.

The club house is a handsome four-story stone building, formerly used as a private residence. There will be no living rooms in the club house, all four stories being used for business and social purposes. The first floor will be used as an office, where the club's principal business, that of dealing in theatre and opera tickets at a low rate, will be conducted. The second floor has a restaurant and reception hall. The hall runs the length of the house, and will be used for dancing. A Victrola is on hand for informal affairs. The third floor will have reading rooms for men and women. Books have been provided, and a circulating library will be introduced later. The fourth floor will have the green room and the rehearsing room for theatricals. All of the floors are newly furnished. Membership in the club will be $5 a year, except in cases in which special arrangements are made.

The house was full early last night for the opening. Among those in attendance were Miss Anne Morgan and Mrs. A. Simmons, the chief founders of the club; Mrs. E. Phillips, Gertrude Robinson-Smith, Elisabeth Marbury, A. Rosenblatt, and others who have helped to start the club.

There was a musical program in which Ida V. Enders, Max Jacobs, Othlie Schillig, Alfred Ilmar, and Dr. Frank Damrosch took part. Dramatic classes will be organized, and a dancing class will be taught by Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle.

DOLL EXHIBIT FOR FRENCH.

Society to Also Display Toys of Allies Made in France.

A French exhibition for the benefit of the mutilated soldiers and widows and children of those killed in the war is being arranged by well-known society women for the afternoon and evening of Tuesday, Nov. 16, at the old Knickerbocker Club Building, 319 Fifth Avenue, and the entrance fees will go to the relief fund in France. Among those interested in it are Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Mrs. William Astor Chanler, Mrs. Francis McNeill Bacon, Mrs. Charles H. Marshall, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mrs. Newbold Edgar, and the Misses Maud Borland, Edith Wetmore, Louise Sands, Barbara Rutherfurd, Jane Wallach, and Mabel Choate.

There are to be dolls arrayed in the costumes of the provinces of France and dolls in the costumes of the Allies, including wax, leather, rag, and Polish dolls, the latter with a setting of Polish furniture, and paper dolls to be used as marionettes.

The fashion dolls are called Pandore, for in the eighteenth century the French fashions were brought here by dolls dressed in the latest styles in boxes representing the best and the worst, as did Pandora's box. These modern Pandore will wear frocks created by the most famous dressmakers and hats by equally famous milliners of Paris.

Doucet has dressed a collection of 100 wax dolls, two and one-half feet tall, in historical costumes. The heads have been furnished by the factories at Sevres and Limoges and are copied from the portraits of the persons they represent.

Callot Soeurs have dressed their dolls after two fairy tales, "Cinderella" and "Hop o' My Thumb," and the settings have been made by Jensen, the interior decorator.

There are to be rag dolls copied from famous paintings in the Louvre, and Van Dyck portraits, and one will represent Velaquez's Infanta Marguerita, also leaden soldiers costumed after the Revolution and wooden soldiers in the Allies' costumes, and of different ranks, including lancers on horseback.

There will also be reproductions of Alsatian villages, with much detail, and the farm houses of Normandy and Brittany are to be shown, including those of the peasant and the rich man, and these are set in hand-painted landscapes of these countries.

The wife of the Governor General of Algiers has sent a reproduction of an Arabian house, in miniature. The carpets have been woven after the patterns of old rugs and the costumes are authentic and the details exact.

Other attractions will include flying machines, automobile cannon carriages, little Po-Peep sets, plush animals that can make much noise in variety, and kindergarten toys that teach counting, geography, and four languages all at once, and many other novelties. The dolls and toys have been made in France within the last few months, when the shops were closed and the old working men, youngsters, and those disabled by the war who have been taught to take up toy making to help maintain themselves, have all contributed to the work.

$34,000,000 IS SWORN OFF.

Personalty Tax Roll Shrinks from $323,985,000 to $4,519,341.

The tentative tax assessment for Manhattan for next year was considerably lowered yesterday when 437 persons, who were on the rolls for a tentative assessment of $34,008,000, appeared before the Tax Commissioners to swear off. All but sixty-nine were allowed to escape, and the sixty-nine were held for final assessment of $400,050. Forty-eight of the 437 swore they were entitled to exemption owing to non-residence, and five were reported dead.

The total number examined to date is 3,007 and their total tentative assessment amounted to $323,985,000. Of the number, 634 have been held for final assessment of $4,519,341.

Interned German Ships Moved.

Four steamers of the Hamburg-American Line, the President Grant, Hamburg, Nassovia, and Pisa, have been transferred from the company's pier at the foot of Thirty-third Street, South Brooklyn, to a new pier at the foot of 135th Street, North River. Julius P. Meyer, general manager, said yesterday that the change had been made in order to clear the Brooklyn pier so that it could be used.

Women are more dependent on the fashion department of their publications than on any other phase of the magazine's service.

A woman could manage to run her kitchen, furnish her house and take care of her children even if there were no magazines, but the women outside of large cities positively could not be smartly dressed without the fashion department of the women's magazines.

The Woman's Magazine is a welcome friend each month in more than 250,000 homes. In our advertising columns many manufacturers and merchants are glad to associate their message with ours.

HILLES HAS ROSTER OF FAVORITE SONS

Republican Chairman Hears from Reynolds's Trip to 22 Western States.

WANT HUGHES ON COAST

Great Deal of Scattered Root Sentiment, but Not Much for Whitman — No Lack of Candidates.

The outlook for the Republicans in many States West of the Mississippi is encouraging for 1916, according to information brought back yesterday by James B. Reynolds, Secretary of the Republican National Committee, who has toured twenty-two Western States in the last few weeks. He conferred yesterday with National Chairman Charles D. Hilles.

"Mr. Reynolds tells me," said Mr. Hilles, "that he found Republicans everywhere optimistic about next year. Progressives are disbanding their organizations and returning to the fold. This is particularly true in Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Montana, Michigan, Iowa, Minnesota, and, indeed, practically every State with the exception of California. For instance, Joseph M. Dixon of Montana has quit as National Chairman of the Progressive Party and is doing all he can to bring Progressives back into the Republican Party. Senator Poindexter of Washington is doing the same thing, and so is Henry Allen in Kansas.

"Mr. Reynolds found very strong Hughes Presidential sentiment in Oregon and Washington. Senator Borah will naturally have the Idaho delegation. Iowa and Nebraska will probably be behind Senator Cummins of Iowa. Indiana is solid for ex-Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks. Senator Burton will have the Ohio delegation and probably a following from Minnesota and adjacent States.

Calls Johnson "Hyphenated."

"Mr. Reynolds tells me that in all probability Governor Johnson of California, who ran for Vice President with Colonel Roosevelt on the Progressive ticket in 1912, will head the delegation from his State to the Republican National Convention and try and be the Republican candidate for President. You know Johnson is a sort of hyphenated Republican.

"Michigan will present Senator William Alden Smith, and Kansas will be for Senator Curtis. Up to a few months ago Republican Leader Mann of Illinois seemed to be quite a formidable competitor for the Prairie State delegation, but our information is that he is inclined to support Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman.

"Whom do the Far Western Republicans expect New York to present?" Mr. Hilles was asked.

"Assuming that Charles E. Hughes will insist that he shall not be considered they rather look to New York to present the name of Elihu Root," said the National Chairman. "Mr. Reynolds found a great deal of scattered Root sentiment, but not much for Whitman.

"The Root forces are not organized, but the 'favorite son' forces are and are working energetically to get all the votes they can for their preferences. It may not be generally known, but practically every avowed candidate for the Presidential nomination has within the last six months madea transcontinental tour and shown himself to and talked with the people.

Progressives in G. O. P. Fold.

"From the Progressive camp comes the report that hundreds of thousands of members of that party are enrolling as Republicans so that they may force the nomination of Roosevelt and secure the adoption of the Progressive platform at the Republican National Convention," Mr. Hilles was told.

"I have heard that report," said Mr. Hilles. "I believe, however, that nearly every Progressive who returns will abide by the decision of the Republican National Convention and heartily support the candidates it names. Mr. Reynolds seems to have confirmed what we have always known, that Roosevelt was the 'Progressive Party.'"

Chairman Hilles will call a meeting of the National Committee at Washington soon to fix the date and place of the National Convention. Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco, Dallas, and other cities are in the field. At the present time, it was said, Chicago seems to be the most likely choice.

PERKINS ASSAILS TAMMANY.

Senator Wadsworth Speaks for District Attorney.

Charles A. Perkins, Republican candidate for District Attorney, began the last week of the campaign last night by addressing five meetings. The largest was at Terrace Garden in Fifty-eighth Street, where United States Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr., also spoke. Senator Wadsworth said the defeat of Mr. Perkins would be a severe blow to the cause of good government. Mr. Perkins said if Judge Swann was elected it would mean a reorganization of the District Attorney's office for political purposes.

"Tammany Hall is a vicious organization and no public good can be expected of it," he said. "Safety of life, limb, and property in this great city can only be assured through the cooperation of the District Attorney's office with the Police Department. Think what kind of a Police Department you would have to have in order to gain the co-operation of a Tammanyized District Attorney's office. We would have to have a Devery at the head of it.

"Tammany district leaders, I understand, have sent out orders that 'Swann must be put over at all costs.' You know what that means. It is the sure evidence of a determined, concerted effort to bring back the old days of violence, immunity from crime, and defiance of the laws of this State."

Mr. Perkins spoke also at the Republican Club of the Thirtieth Assembly District, 2,060 Lexington Avenue; Commonwealth Hall, 163d Street and Amsterdam Avenue; Bohemian National Hall, 321 East Seventy-third Street, and Apollo Hall, 128 Clinton Street.

PERKINS ANSWERS CRITICS.

Finds No Indictments Were Had in Auto Accident Cases.

In response to criticism from Colonel Edward S. Cornell of the Highways Protective Society and Charles P. Le Brun of the Legislative League for the Conservation of Human Life, District Attorney Perkins yesterday investigated the records of criminal negligence cases arising out of automobile accidents. Colonel Cornell and Mr. Le Brun maintained in their criticism that Mr. Perkins had failed for some reason or other to prosecute at least twenty of these cases.

The District Attorney discovered yesterday that not one of the defendants in the cases cited by Mr. Le Brun and Colonel Cornell had ever been held for the action of the Grand Jury. Either no arrest had been made or else the Coroner's inquest found no evidence of criminal negligence upon which to hold the defendant for the Grand Jury.

"SONNY" QUITS LYNDHURST.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Oct. 25.—Mrs. Finley J. Shepard and "Sonny," her adopted son, have left Lyndhurst, according to reports tonight. Mrs. Shepard attended a reception to Miss Katherine Black on Saturday, and then, it is said, she went away with her boy, but her destination has not been revealed. It is believed Mr. Shepard suggested that they go into retirement for a few days until the publicity about the adoption has blown over. They are expected back Wednesday.

"Sonny" has not alone won the hearts of Mr. and Mrs. Shepard, but he has won over all of the employes on the estate. While he is at Lyndhurst he takes a bath in Mrs. Shepard's big swimming pool every morning. The water is heated for him, and while he paddles about a nurse is present in a small rowboat. "Sonny" salutes a number of the workmen, who always watch for him as he goes to and fro.

It is said the boy must come from refined parents, for he has fine features, speaks excellent English, and carries himself like a well-bred child. Both Mr. and Mrs. Shepard dote on him, and he promises to be the new ruler at Lyndhurst. A friend said today:

"'Sonny' is one of the sweetest and most lovable boys that I have ever met."

THIRTEEN GIRLS DIE IN PITTSBURGH FIRE

Many Others, Trapped in Box Factory, Are Saved by the Heroism of Men Employes.

ONE RESCUER PERISHES

He Carries Out Six Girls, but Is Overcome and Burned to Death In Seventh Attempt.

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 25.—Fourteen persons were killed and eight injured by a fire in a four-story building, the two upper floors of which were occupied by the Union Paper Box Company, on the North Side here this afternoon. Of the dead, all were young women employed by the company except one. Many of the bodies were so burned as to make identification difficult. Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong at once ordered that the police, City Council, and the Coroner make a thorough investigation of the fire.

The dead are as follows:

SELLMAN, COLLETTA, aged 19.
WANER, HENEL.
ZOBOK, SOPHIA, aged 22.
FARRABA, FAROLINA, aged 15.
LINK, DOROTHA, aged 16.
BAKER, FLORENCE, aged 21.
JOSS, CECELIA, aged 17.
DUNAPPLE, BERTHA, aged 24.
BREINNING, OTILLIE, aged 20.
BREINNING, LAURA, aged 24, sister of Otillie.
MILLER, MYRTLE, aged 20.
RAUCH, MARCELLA, aged 17.
HAAG, SELMA.
VALLON, PETER.

The flames started in a pile of straw in the rear of the feed store of James Brown & Co. on the first floor of the building. William C. Kimbel, General Manager of the box factory, at once went to the third and fourth floors and warned the girls employed there to leave the building quietly. The flames gained headway so rapidly, however, that escape by means of stairways and fire escapes was soon cut off. Some of the girls attempted to go to the dressing room for their hats, and there, huddled on the floor, firemen found a majority of the bodies.

Joseph L. Bash, aged 24, and A. J. Seagle, employed on the second floor of the building, were about to jump when they were attracted by the screams of girls in the window above. The men told the girls to jump. One by one as the girls leaped Bash and Seagle caught them, lowered them as far as they could, and then let them drop to the sidewalk.

C. R. Carlisle, driver of a transfer wagon, drove his wagon into an alley in the rear of the building and threw up a rope to some girls in a window above. After making the end of the rope fast they slid down to safety.

Margaret Steigerwald, who was injured by jumping from a second-story window, said she and five other girls were trapped in the building when somebody closed a door at the head of the stairway on the second floor.

"We got our wraps and started down the stairway," said Miss Steigerwald. "As we reached the second floor some person closed the door at the head of the stairway, and we were trapped. We tried to open the door without success, and then we started back to the third floor. By that time the third floor was filled with smoke. We made for the windows. One girl pushed me away from a window, and I was the last to jump."

An attempt of a man to make moving pictures of the removal of bodies from the building was stopped by the police. W. Noble Matthews, Superintendent of Police, said arrests would follow any similar attempts.

One of the heroes of the fire was Peter Vallon, who was burned to death. When the fire was discovered he was working in the building. He groped his way through the smoke to the street, where he heard girls frantically calling for help from the upper floors. Tieing a handkerchief about his mouth, he rushed into the building. Six times he staggered to the street with a girl in his arms. When he did not appear the seventh time, spectators notified the firemen, who began a search and found Vallon's charred body on the second floor. Near him lay the body of a young girl whom he had evidently tried to rescue.

Francis Feehan, a State Inspector, made an examination of the building after the fire, and said the fire escapes were inadequate.

REFUSE TO END STRIKE.

Machinists Still Out in Schenectady, While Electric Employes Return.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, Oct. 25.—Ten thousand men, or practically all but 2,000 machinists and 1,000 electrical workers and steam fitters, returned to work at the local plant of the General Electric Company today after a three weeks' strike for an eight-hour day, accepting the company's compromise of a nine-and-a-half-hour day with a 5 per cent. increase in wages. The machinists attempted to picket the plant this morning, but were so outnumbered that they abandoned the task and are now centring their efforts to start another strike later in the week.

It was said today that the other crafts returned to work to protect their charter, as the Metal Trades Alliance, the central body for the strikers, accepted the company's offer, and promised to have the men back at work this morning. Just where the machinists stand in this matter cannot be learned. The men in staying out today acted upon the advice of International Vice President Keppler, and they look to him for protection in case of any dispute with the international organization.

This afternoon General Manager Emmons of the company issued a notice that the men would receive their first pay next Wednesday, although the regular date is two days later. This will be done to aid conditions which have arisen during the three weeks' strike. He also stated that if any of the employes are in need of money for immediate use, they may draw on their salary in advance.

CRITICISE FLETCHER FOR WAR GAME MOVES

Defeat of Defenders Arouses Brother Officers—Knight Reports on Strategy Employed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—The Navy Department has received a report from Rear Admiral Austin M. Knight, who commanded one of the fleets engaged in the recent war game off the Middle Atlantic Coast, in which, according to rumors here, the strategy of Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, Commander in Chief of the Atlantic battleship fleet, who was Admiral Knight's opponent in the war game, is criticised. High officials of the Navy Department admitted tonight that Admiral Knight's report had come to hand and also a report on the war game from Admiral Fletcher, but it was said that the reports had not been received by Secretary Daniels and could not be given out for publication. It was indicated that Admiral Knight's report had not been examined sufficiently to determine whether there was a basis for the rumors that he criticised Admiral Fletcher's strategy.

WHITE ENCLOSED CARS
CUSTOM DESIGNED

The lines are modeled with the graceful sweep of parapet, radiator and fenders which characterizes the made-to-order product. Interior appointments and workmanship are similarly indicative of a highly refined individual treatment.

Making these bodies in the White workshops has a distinct advantage. Chassis and body are designed as a unit. They fit each other in line, weight and proportion. The body designer is never constrained by the arbitrary requirements of a given chassis to distort, however slightly, the beautiful lines of his product. He works in perfect harmony with the structural definements of the chassis.

The difference between a made-to-order body imposed upon any make of chassis and a White body designed upon a White chassis is in the perfect balance which results from building each with the other in mind.

ROOT GLORIFIES THE CONSTITUTION

In Impassioned Plea He Says the Convention Worked with High Ideals.

W. C. OSBORN INDORSES HIM

Democratic State Chairman Repeats That Partisanship Played No Part.

EX-SENATOR DEEPLY MOVED

Economic Club Diners Hear Able Presentation of Merits of New Organic Law.

An impassioned appeal for the adoption of the proposed State Constitution, to the framing of which he said he had given "all there was in me—my strength and my life"— was made last night by Senator Elihu Root before 1,000 members of the Economic Club, at their dinner at the Hotel Astor.

At times the Senator was able but poorly to disguise the intensity of his feelings, and his voice shook with emotion as he told how he had worked "to restore true democracy" in the State. As he ended the diners rose and cheered him enthusiastically.

The dinner was one of the largest at which the new Constitution has been the subject of debate, and the speakers included William Church Osborn, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee; United States Senator James W. Wadsworth, Martin W. Littleton, and William R. Willcox. Mr. Osborn gave his indorsement to the Constitution with the exception of the apportionment article, and declared that the convention, of which he was a member, acted in a non-partisan spirit. He concluded with a high tribute to Mr. Root.

Only Client in Sixteen Years.

The greatest outburst of applause came near the end of Senator Root's address, when, leaning far forward on the speaker's rostrum, his face working with emotion, he said:

"Perhaps I am misled. Perhaps I insist unduly upon the work of the convention of which I was part. If I do you must forgive me. I beg you to do me the honor to believe there is no personal consideration which actuates me. Since I left this city, sixteen years ago last Summer, to devote myself to the service of the country and the State I have had but one client. I have had but one desire. I have had but one passion, and it has been for the prosperity and the honor and the growth in the spirit and in the power of my country and my State.

"I have given out all there was in me into this effort to do what I believed to be necessary for the perpetuity of our free institutions; this effort to make representative government worthy of itself. I have given up my strength and my life to help bring that about. I hope that it will not prove to have been in vain.

"No, it cannot have been in vain. This Constitution, I believe, will be adopted by the people of the State, but if it is not, the work of the convention will not be lost. It will be but the beginning of a process which through the workings of the processes of free government will bring about sooner or later in substance all the conclusions which are right and sound, for no honest effort in behalf of one's country can ever be lost."

Men Fear to Lose Jobs.

Turning to the opposition to the Constitution, the Senator with a touch of scorn in his voice said:

"Of course there is opposition. I have been seeking—I have been wondering much at the causes. No such series of provisions as this can be adopted without interfering with a great many people. A good many men will be turned out of office. You cannot retrench without turning men out of office. You cannot economize without interfering with people, and if you will look to the opposition to this Constitution in nine cases out of ten you can trace it back to the unwillingness of men to be turned out of office, or the fear of men that they will be turned out of office, the fear of men that their personal perquisites or opportunities will be interfered with.

"There is one thing I feel bound to say: The Constitutional Convention of 1915 rises above the plane of partisan politics. It refused, not without struggle, not without a contest, not without strenuous exertions and the desires of many men—of some men—to use the great majority of the Republican Party in that convention for partisan advantage. It deemed its duty to be to serve the parties that each man owed allegiance to by serving the State; and it was that which led to this extraordinary agreement. That was why Democrats and Republicans alike voted for these great salutary measures; that was why, after the close of the convention, there was almost unanimous approval of its work by the men who had been engaged in it.

United to Serve Their State.

"It is with the deepest regret that I observe that among some people, perhaps among many of our fellow-citizens, there is an unwillingness to regard this great and important measure for the public welfare upon the same basis—love of country and superiority to partisan advantage. All honor to Republicans and Democrats alike who unite, regardless of party, to serve their State in seeking to give the people of the State a better government, and regret and sympathy for the future to those who reject that and seek to frustrate this great measure for the public good in order that there may be party advantage by it."

Senator Root said that the convention had realized that there was much dissatisfaction not only here but throughout the country, and that there was an absolute necessity to make the new constitution "so good, so sound, so effective, that all demand for the abandoning of representative government and the substitution of direct legislation would pass away and be refuted."

Taking first the reforms planned for the judicial system, he dwelt at some length upon the complicated legal tangles which, he said, so frequently arise and make it almost impossible for the poor man to obtain justice or for the man not skilled in law to understand.

"I say it not without experience in legal procedure," he said, and the great crowd laughed. Mr. Root continued:

"We have got our procedure regulated according to the higher trained, refined, subtle, ingenious intellect of the best practiced lawyers, and it is all wrong. Our procedure ought to be based upon the common intelligence of the farmer, and the merchant, and the laborer. And there is no reason why it should not be.

The Legislature Dignified.

"Isn't there vital need, if our institutions are to continue, if our representative government is to live, that our Legislature shall be raised up above the low esteem in which the public holds it, and has held it for years past? Well, the convention tried to accomplish that by a series of provisions based upon an estimate of the causes for the low esteem in which the Legislature was held and in examining the causes."

Taking up various provisions, he went into a lengthy analysis to show that the convention had made a real effort to bring about, so far as it was able, a true democratic form of government for the State. He said:

"And the question relative to this Constitution is not whether some particular little thing pleases you or me. There is nobody who is fully satisfied with the Constitution. I am not. There are things in it I do not want there. There are things left out I would like to have there. That was true of every member of the convention. But the great process of free self-government went on, the subordination of minor matters to major matters, the surrendering of individual opinion upon matters of little importance in order to secure agreement upon matters of great importance went on. That process by which our country is governed and by which free government must always be achieved, went on during those five months, and the result is a great attempt to accomplish something of the first order of importance for our State and country in the form of representative government in a State."

Osborn Indorses Root.

In his speech Mr. Osborn said:

"You have heard the leader of the convention. He is a leader in the United States. He is one of the very ablest men in public service in this or any country. Supporting him were men of both parties of great ability, of great experience and distinguished character. Those small, bitter minds who allow themselves to be swayed by unworthy suspicion of partisan, financial or personal prospects on the part of the delegates, should examine the proposals upon their merits and vote in the open upon the open value of what is openly offered.

"The convention scrupulously heeded the injunction of the Chairman to regard the work in a non-partisan spirit, although largely Republican in numbers, except in the matter of apportionment."

FAIL TO FIND PARTISANSHIP.

A. B. Parker Heads Committee Urging Votes for Question No. 1.

The advocates of the new Constitution yesterday started with a rush on the last week of campaigning before election. Headed in importance by the Economic Club dinner at the Hotel Astor, scores of meetings were held in all of the boroughs at which delegates to the Constitutional Convention and others interested in good government argued in favor of the adoption of the proposed changes in the State's organic law.

The Citizens' Non-Partisan Committee for the Adoption of the Constitution sent out a campaigning automobile last night from which were held ten street-corner meetings. Prominent Democrats and Republicans spoke for the proposed Constitution. The automobile will make speaking tours of Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn every night this week. The most prominent delegates to the Constitutional Convention will be among the speakers.

Advertisements will be placed in the 3,500 surface cars of the city this morning by the Citizens' Committee, setting forth arguments in favor of the Constitution. The committee is undertaking to supply speakers for all meetings to discuss the Constitution. Its headquarters are in the City Club.

Democrats Make Appeal.

In reply to the stand of Tammany Hall against the adoption of the Constitution, a committee of prominent Democrats from all parts of the State, headed by Alton B. Parker, yesterday issued a statement setting forth that no Democrat should consider the Constitution a partisan measure, and that all members of the party interested in good government and economy in State finances should abide by the plans evolved by the vote of their representatives in the Constitutional Convention. The statement said in part:

"It is not our intention to urge the adoption of the Constitution on partisan grounds. It is not a partisan document. It was not framed in a partisan spirit and should not be adopted by a partisan vote. When the constitutional convention met, the Democratic delegates found themselves in a minority. Nevertheless, they contributed to the proposed Constitution many of its most liberal and constructive features. Practically every important article was adopted after having received improvement at Democratic hands and with the support of a majority of the votes of Democratic delegates. The Democratic delegates in the convention not only acted as good citizens, but also as good Democrats. They saw in it that the two leading reforms contained in the proposed Constitution were those to which the Democratic Party had formerly pledged itself before the people of the State.

"The first of these great reforms consists in making the Governor the official, responsible leader of the State. It gives him the power of appointing and removing the heads of administrative departments without having to submit his nominations to the Senate. It provides that all of the existing administrative agencies of the State must be grouped into seventeen great functional departments of government. This is a liberal fulfillment of the great pledge of the Saratoga Democratic platform, adopted on Aug. 26, 1914."

Home Rule for Cities.

The statement then gives the short ballot pledge of the Democratic platform and adds:

"The second great reform in the proposed Constitution consists in conferring upon our cities and counties much greater powers of local self-government and diminishing the power of the Legislature by capricious special legislation to interfere in local affairs. These provisions constitute a substantial fulfillment of the home rule pledge of the Democratic platform.

"We have examined the proposed Constitution with some care. We are convinced that it represents a long step forward in the development of better and more responsible government in this State and in accordance with the two great principles formulated by the Democratic Party. We believe, therefore, that the Democratic voters of the State should support that portion of the Constitution contained in Question 1."

The statement is signed by Alton B. Parker, D-Cady Herrick, Delancy Nicoll Eugene Lamb Richards, Morgan J. O'Brien, George Gordon Battle John D. Kerman of Utica; Thomas W. Meachem of Syracuse, Delos M. Cosgrove of Watertown; William B. Wright, Jr., of Buffalo, Cortland A. Wilbur of Binghamton; V. Everit Macy of Westchester; Francis Lynde Stetson, Harry W. Newburger, J. Sidney Bernstein, Andrew McLean, Charles A. Webber, Edward J. Byrne and George J. Ryan.

Joseph M. Price, Chairman of the Citizens' Non-Partisan Committee for the Adoption of the Constitution, said last night that the statement made by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Incorporated, that it had been refused a hearing before the Constitutional Convention was a misstatement of fact.

Movies Had a Hearing.

"Louis Marshall, Chairman of the Committee on Bill of Rights," he said, "is authority for the statement that one entire afternoon was given to hearing the request of the motion picture interests that the Constitution forbid legal censorship. The motion picture trade was represented by attorneys and others and they were told that further opportunity for a hearing would be granted if desired.

"The opposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade to the adoption of the Constitution is just another case of selfish interests opposing the Constitution for the reason that their particular suggestion was not adopted. If the suggestions of every organization, trade and interest made to the convention had been adopted, the Constitution would have been as large as the Century Dictionary and much less useful. The question of the adoption of this Constitution should be looked at from the point of view of the good of the State and not of any particular trade or interest."

Mr. Price is a member of the National Board of Censorship. He does not believe in legal censorship, but believes that the business does not deserve protection in the Constitution.

Advocates of the Constitution express no little surprise in the interest aroused all over the State by the discussion of the new Constitution. They hold that the more discussion there is, the more chance the measure has of ratification.

LABOR AUDIENCE NOT HOSTILE

Wickersham Cheered, Defending Constitution in Labor Temple.

George W. Wickersham, ex-Attorney General, spoke at the Labor Temple, Fourteenth Street and Second Avenue, last night, and told a labor audience that they had in the proposed Constitution a "great opportunity for marked improvement in the government of the State." Following his address, which consumed more than an hour, Mr. Wickersham was questioned by members of the audience on certain points in the new Constitution, and most of the questions he answered to their satisfaction.

One man asked why the Constitution did not incorporate an obligation on the part of the State to provide every man with a job. Mr. Wickersham was loudly cheered when he said he believed every man in the State could find a job if he only was willing to work.

The making of a new Constitution was described in detail by Mr. Wickersham. The criticism of policemen because cases of dismissal may not be subject to review in the civil courts he disposed of with the explanation that the Legislature could give such policemen the right of review.

Mr. Wickersham called attention to that provision of the new Constitution which requires the Legislature to publish a record of its proceedings. Today, nobody knows what happens in the Legislature, he said, other than what is published in the newspapers, and that, he said, was for the most part sensational. It was necessary for the 10,000,000 inhabitants of the Empire State to know what their representatives were doing.

BIG EXPORTS STRAIN FACILITIES OF PORT

Commerce Congestion Is Not Due to Shortage of Cars or Ships.

PRESSURE ON WATER FRONT

Much of Enormous Export Trade Will Remain Permanently, Shipping Men Say.

Export trade, experts believe, is placing a greater strain upon the pier and terminal facilities of New York than the port has ever known.

Although the Central Railroad of New Jersey yesterday lifted its embargo on freight intended for outward-bound steamships, there is still a tremendous pressure on all rail shipments, and the yards of all lines are jammed with miles of cars.

Munitions of war and foodstuffs constitute the bulk of the material destined for the use of European armies, which crowds into every terminal. Many vessels are being loaded at the water front with the products of the Pennsylvania steel mills; others are waiting to receive caravans of automobiles, and many have been chartered to take wares and fabrics to countries whose workers have gone to the battlefronts.

Investigation by THE TIMES shows that the congestion is not due to car shortage. The last statement of the American Railway Association, dated Oct. 11 and giving figures as of Oct. 1, reveals a surplus of 88,061 cars. The surplus on Sept. 1 was 191,309 cars. That general business conditions are much better than they were a year ago is shown by the report of Oct. 1, 1914, when the surplus was given as 133,368 cars. Although the surplus has been cut down along the Atlantic seaboard there is still a good margin. The shortages are increasing especially in the box-car class. The Interstate Commerce Commission has served notice on all the railroads directing them to take special care to prevent the scarcity of cars. So far the number of cars is not regarded as a factor in the situation.

Shippers said yesterday that there were more vessels available for carrying the exports than there were a year ago. The policy of foreign Governments of requisitioning steamships for carrying military supplies to Europe has greatly facilitated shipments. The congestion is due, therefore, neither to lack of bottoms nor to dearth of cars, but almost entirely to conditions about the harbor of New York.

The facilities here were under such pressure that the strikes of the longshoremen piled up an enormous volume of merchandise at every railroad terminal. The roads are just beginning to see daylight.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey in announcing the lifting of its embargo on export freight said that it would now be able to handle every class of freight as it came. The officials of the road had been working day and night to clear the yards. The Lehigh is now getting goods transferred to the waiting steamships with little difficulty.

The New York Central lines are handling enormous quantities of grain and steel. At Weehawken the elevators are filling the holds of three steamships with Western wheat. Near by are three more steamships taking on rails, locomotives, and other products of American factories. The New York Central system has the advantage of using the West Shore tracks to transship much of the heavy freight without using lighters.

Barges are at a premium in the port. The lighterage limits now extend as far north in the Hudson River as 135th Street and to the south as far as Sixty-ninth Street, Brooklyn.

The hundreds of miles of the waterfront of the world's greatest port present a busy scene. Floats can be seen waiting in the stream for their chance to approach steamship piers, which are often hemmed in by freight-laden harbor craft. Down the bay horses and cattle are being transferred to transports from the barges. Every available pier is being used to capacity.

At a time when the pressure upon the Port of New York is so great the Department of Docks and Ferries is handicapped in the making of improvements by the rule of economy. There is such a shortage of city money that steamship companies are making improvements on piers themselves and are permitted to deduct the cost of repairs and alterations from the rentals.

The railroads have extensive projects for extending their terminal facilities. The Central Railroad of New Jersey has an especially ambitious project which will more than double its present yards along the Jersey City shores.

Shipping men said yesterday that although there was now a great pressure caused by war orders, there was also an enormous trade developing which had nothing to do with munitions. Great quantities of general merchandise are being sent to other countries besides those at war, and there were numerous signs that the trade of this port with the world at large would be permanently increased.

HAY GOES ON RECORD FOR ARMY INCREASE

Chairman of House Military Committee Approves Administration Program.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—Mobilization of the full strength of Administration forces in support of the national defense program apparently was assured today when Representative Hay of Virginia, Chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, after a conference with President Wilson, announced himself in favor of the army increase plans.

Senator Chamberlain, Chairman of the Senate Military Committee, already has approved the proposal to build up a regular and continental army of more than a million men in six years. The navy's $500,000,000 building program already has been approved by both House and Senate leaders.

The importance attached to Representative Hay's announcement was indicated by the fact that soon after it was made Secretary Garrison issued this statement:

"I am, of course, delighted. This will insure the best possible results. With the aid of Mr. Hay's experience and skill in formulating the measures and his powerful advocacy in support thereof success in the House is assured. I understand that Senator Chamberlain of the Senate Military Committee takes a precisely similar attitude, so that there will be hearty co-operation and united effort all along the line. This situation should hearten and enthuse all those who are interested in seeing this vital subject properly considered and properly settled."

Representative Hay said he believed the necessary army bills to provide for the proposed increase of the regular establishment, the organization of the continental army, the increase in coast defenses, and building up of an adequate reserve artillery, small arms and ammunition, would pass the House without serious opposition. He will draw up the measures which are to shape a new military policy for the country. The program mapped out by Secretary Garrison and his advisers will be the basis for the bills, but the detail of the laws to be enacted must be prepared by the Administration's legislative representatives.

To hold a world's record for one year is an honor;
To hold it for ten years is final proof of supremacy.

International contests in typewriter speed and accuracy have been conducted annually in New York City. Last night at the Annual Business Show these trials of merit were held for the year 1915.

The honors FOR THE TENTH TIME went to the

UNDERWOOD

A record for speed and accuracy unparalleled in typewriter history.

OFFICIAL RESULTS

Machine	Class	Operator	Rate
UNDERWOOD	Professional	Margaret B. Owen	136 net words per minute an hour.
UNDERWOOD	Amateur	William F. Oswald	137 net words per minute a half hour.

The official character of these tests of efficiency is vouched for by an agreement reached ten years ago between typewriter manufacturers that the company upon whose machine the records were made should be the custodian of a $1000. silver trophy cup.

The Underwood Typewriter Company has held this cup continuously from 1906, and by this its tenth victory, takes possession of the trophy for still another year.

Holding, as it does, all world's honors for merit, speed, accuracy and mechanical superiority, the UNDERWOOD deserves first place in every business office.

JUSTICE BISCHOFF'S ESTATE INSOLVENT

Appraiser's Report Shows That Supreme Court Member Died in Debt.

INDORSER OF MANY NOTES

Involved in Financial Troubles of Firms from Which He Withdrew.

Testimony given in the report of Transfer Tax Appraiser Anthony P. Ludden in his appraisal of the estate of Supreme Court Justice Henry Bischoff, filed in the office of the State Controller yesterday, shows that the estate is insolvent. There is no definite amount fixed as to the excess of liabilities over assets.

Under the heading of contingent liabilities the following claims against the estate are listed: Andrew Friedman, $7,500; estate of Thomas Storms, $7,933.32; Irving National Bank, $65,000; and American Surety Company, $75,000. Under the subhead of rejected claims are Andrew Friedman, $2,500, and estate of Thomas Storms, $840.

Appraiser Ludden has suspended any estimated value on these claims, and accordingly has set them aside in reporting on the value of the estate for present purposes, as follows: Net estate, $10,117.09, of which $2,222 goes to the widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Collamore Bischoff of 50 East Fifty-eighth Street; $1,000 to Woodlawn Cemetery, and the remainder to the Justice's son-in-law, James Shelton Meng.

The itemized assets are given: Cash on hand, $15.94; jewelry, personal effects, &c., which include the Justice's books, $1,610.40, and his salary as Justice due, $1,548.34, aggregating $3,574.59, and 255 shares of the Metropolis Securities Company stock, $27,076.47. The debts aggregated $20,849.91, and include funeral expenses, $1,200.50; administration expenses, $1,737.45, and claims allowed, $17,205.01.

History of Notes.

In explanation of the contingent liabilities there is an affidavit included in the report by James S. Meng, the son-in-law, which reads in part:

"Referring to the Irving National Bank claim the facts are briefly: The Irving National Bank holds a note of Henry Bischoff & Co., (truckers and forwarders,) a copartnership composed of James S. Meng and Henry J. Becker, for the sum of $100,000, which the decedent indorsed, and this note by payment was reduced to $65,000, now due thereon. The bank, however, holds as collateral for said note stock of the Bischoff Banking House, a corporation, for the sum of $110,000.

"When the firm of Henry Bischoff & Co., composed of James S. Meng and Henry J. Becker, failed and were placed in the hands of trustees in bankruptcy, the trustees brought an action against the banking house, seeking to hold the banking house liable for certain deposits made by individuals who claimed that they thought they were putting their deposits in the banking house, when as a matter of fact they were placing their deposits in the firm of Henry Bischoff & Co. The outcome of this suit, if the trustees are successful, will undoubtedly cause a material reduction in the securities held by the bank, and if the bank does not secure the amount due, the estate, of course, will be liable for the deficiency, which in all probability will be nearly the entire sum."

Explaining further, Mr. Meng's affidavit says:

"The claim of the American Surety Company arises upon the bond furnished to the State of New York Banking Department, as required by law in relation to private bankers. The decedent was on the bond, and had not obtained his release. The American Surety Company, upon payment, will have a claim for that sum against the estate."

The claim of the Storms estate, the affidavit sets forth, arises upon the lease of premises which Henry Bischoff & Co. sublet to the Bischoff Banking House as a monthly tenant. The lease was made, it is explained, while the Justice was a member of the firm of Henry Bischoff & Co., and expired in May, 1915. The premises were vacant for a great part of the time, the affidavit recites.

Some Claims Rejected.

One Andrew Friedman claim, for $7,500, was on a note of the firm of Henry Bischoff & Co., composed then of James S. Meng and Henry J. Becker, and was indorsed by the Justice. The affidavit further says:

"However, upon all these claims the estate will have claims against the bankrupt estates of Meng and Becker. What will be realized upon these claims is very problematical, but it is certain no very large amount. The estates of the bankrupts are very much involved and the list of creditors, among which are many hundreds of depositors, does not lessen the burden, but will no doubt in time involve this estate, as these creditors may seek to hold this decedent's estate."

Referring to the rejected claim of Friedman, the affidavit sets forth that it arose from an original note for $7,500, of which all but $2,500 was paid, and when the last amount came due, the time was extended without the consent of the decedent. The Storms claim for $840 arose out of a lease, the affidavit states, made when the Justice was not a member of Henry Bischoff & Co.

The report shows that the widow received before the testator's death a silver service set, household furniture, paintings, bric-a-brac, jewelry, &c., and was to have the income for life from one-half the residuary estate.

Gifts of the Justice to his two grandchildren, the Misses Winifred Caroline and Anna Louise Meng of 620 West 152d Street, include a half interest each in the proceeds of a $10,000 policy in the Mutual Reserve Benefit Association of America. These gifts, the affidavit alleges, are of no value because of the financial embarassment of the institution, prior to the death of the Justice.

The Justice's provision in his will bequeathing all his interest in Henry Bischoff & Co. to his son-in-law, Mr. Meng, is held to be of no value, because the Justice ceased to be a member of the firm about a year before his death.

There is no mention in the report of the $77,000 verdict recovered by the widow from the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank for the death of Justice Bischoff, who was killed by falling from the eleventh floor of the bank building, in March, 1913. The Appellate Division has just affirmed the verdict.

$150,000 CASH TO HIS WIDOW.

Siegfried Rosenberg Also Adds $10,000 Income for Life.

That Siegfried Rosenberg, member of the importing house of S. Rosenberg & Co., left an estate in excess of $250,000 when he died on Sept. 30 in Germany is indicated by his will, filed for probate yesterday.

After bequeathing about $20,000 to charities the will provides that $150,000 in cash go to the widow, Jenny Rosenberg of Frankfurt, Germany, who also receives $40,000 in mortgages on her husband's personal effects and insurance and an income of $10,000 during her lifetime.

On the death of the widow the principal of the fund which furnishes the income for her is to be placed in the residuary estate, and that is to be divided equally between two brothers, Herman Rosenberg, who resides in Frankfurt, and Adolph Rosenberg of 472 West End Avenue; a sister, Susanne Schlessinger of Frankfurt, and a nephew, Siegfrid M. Kahn of 135 Central Park West.

The will directs that the executors set aside a fund of 50,000 marks to be used by the widow in her discretion for the benefit of Hebrew institutions, and the fund is to be known as the "Siegfried and Jenny Rosenberg Stiftung." There is a further provision that 1,000 marks be distributed among the poor of the decedent's birthplace, Langendiebach-Hanau, Germany.

There are bequests of $500 each to Mount Sinai Hospital, the Hebrew Benevolent and Orphan Asylum, the Montefiore Home, the Home for Aged and Infirm Hebrews, and the United Hebrew Charities. There are a number of small bequests, aggregating $6,000, to charitable institutions in Germany.

The income from 5,000 marks is to be used for the upkeep of the graves of the testator's relatives. He also left bequests to several cousins.

SEA FIGHTER NEVADA READY FOR HER TEST

HAS ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUNS

First of Dreadnoughts to Burn Oil —Has French Gun-Turret Arrangement.

The new superdreadnought Nevada, the greatest ship of her type afloat, arrived at the Brooklyn Navy Yard yesterday morning from the yards of her builders, at Fore River, Mass. In appearance, in arrangement of her batteries, and in many other important ways the Nevada is a ship the like of which was never before seen in New York. She has a broadside in weight greater even than that of England's great superdreadnought, the Queen Elizabeth, and the great revolving turrets are so placed that every gun in the main battery can be fired from either the port or starboard side.

Nearly three times the tonnage of the famous old Oregon, not far from twice as big as "Bob" Evans's old flagship, the Connecticut, and 8,000 tons greater in tonnage than the Delaware, the first of American ships of the dreadnought type, indicate the size and the offensive and defensive strength of the newest of American sea fighters.

The Nevada is the first of the first-line units of the navy to mount anti-aircraft guns; she is the first dreadnought in any navy to burn exclusively oil fuel, and she is the first of American line ships with a single funnel. Likewise, she does not stand so high out of the water as some of her predecessors, and for that reason does not offer the target some of the older battleships do.

The new fighter made a beautiful picture as she slowly steamed through the bay and into the East River on her way to the navy yard yesterday morning. A big blue pennant, on which appeared the words "Fore River," alone indicated the fact that as yet she has not been officially accepted by the Government, an acceptance that will not take place until after the conclusion of the official builder's trials off Rockland, Me., which will be steamed within the next week or ten days. Captain Joseph I. Kemp, Marine Superintendent of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, brought the ship to New York, making a leisurely voyage that lasted from last Friday afternoon until late Sunday night, when the Nevada arrived off the Ambrose Channel Lightship.

In the two and a half days the Nevada was at sea Captain Kemp and his assistants took advantage of the opportunity to give the ship the benefit of a little tuning up. During several speed spurts the Nevada developed a speed of more than nineteen knots, and yesterday it was stated that there is no doubt of the ship's ability to make twenty-one knots when she starts over the measured course off Rockland a few days hence. The contract speed of the Nevada is twenty-one knots.

The gun arrangement on the Nevada marks an entirely new departure in American battleship armament. In all of the vessels that have been built heretofore the guns of the main batteries have been placed two to a turret. In the Nevada the ten guns are mounted in four turrets. In Turrets 2 and 3 there are two guns, and in the other two turrets, the extreme forward one and the extreme aft one, there are three guns. The three-guns-to-a-turret arrangement is of French origin, and is being followed in the placing of the main batteries on all of the ships of the first line now authorized or in process of construction. With the exception of the Nevada's sister ship, the Oklahoma, all the big turrets on American dreadnoughts will in the future mount three guns of the latest improved type of fourteen-inch ordnance.

Another interesting feature in the armament of the Nevada is the anti-aircraft battery of four high angle three-inch guns. Two of these guns are mounted forward on the main deck, one on either side. The other two are to be mounted on top of Turret 3, just aft of the second of the lattice-work masts, forward of the aft three-gun turret. A platform, which in appearance looks like a bridge, has been erected on top of this turret and on this platform will be mounted the anti-aircraft guns. These three-inch pieces are the only guns of the battery not yet in place.

The next most interesting feature of the Nevada is the fact that she will be the first dreadnought which will burn oil exclusively. Her great oil tanks have a capacity of nearly 600,000 gallons of fuel. The main armor belt of the Nevada is seventeen and a half inches thick; eight and a half feet is below the water line. The deck armor is three inches thick, while the great fourteen-inch gun turrets are, in the case of the triple-gun turrets, sixteen, and in the case of the double-gun turrets, eighteen inches thick. The conning tower is protected with a belt of sixteen-inch armor.

Immediately on her arrival at the navy yard the Nevada went into dry dock to have her bottom scraped and painted. She is expected to come out of dry dock tomorrow, and will immediately sail for the official trial course off Rockland. During her trial several high ranking naval officers will represent the Government on board, among them Rear Admiral David W. Taylor, Chief Constructor of the navy; Rear Admiral Victor Blue, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation; Rear Admiral Robert S. Griffin, Engineer in Chief of the navy, and Captain Henry B. Wilson, President of the Board of Inspection and Survey.

$10,000 FOR AUTO HURTS.

E. H. Hooker's Car Ran Down Mrs. George K. Curtis in 1913.

A jury in Justice Dugro's part of the Supreme Court yesterday returned a verdict for $10,000 in favor of George K. Curtis of Montclair, N. J., in a suit against Elon Huntington Hooker, a friend of Theodore Roosevelt.

Curtis, who is President of the O'Brien Construction Company, charged that Hooker's auto hit and injured Mrs. Curtis while at Greenwich, Conn., on July 17, 1913.

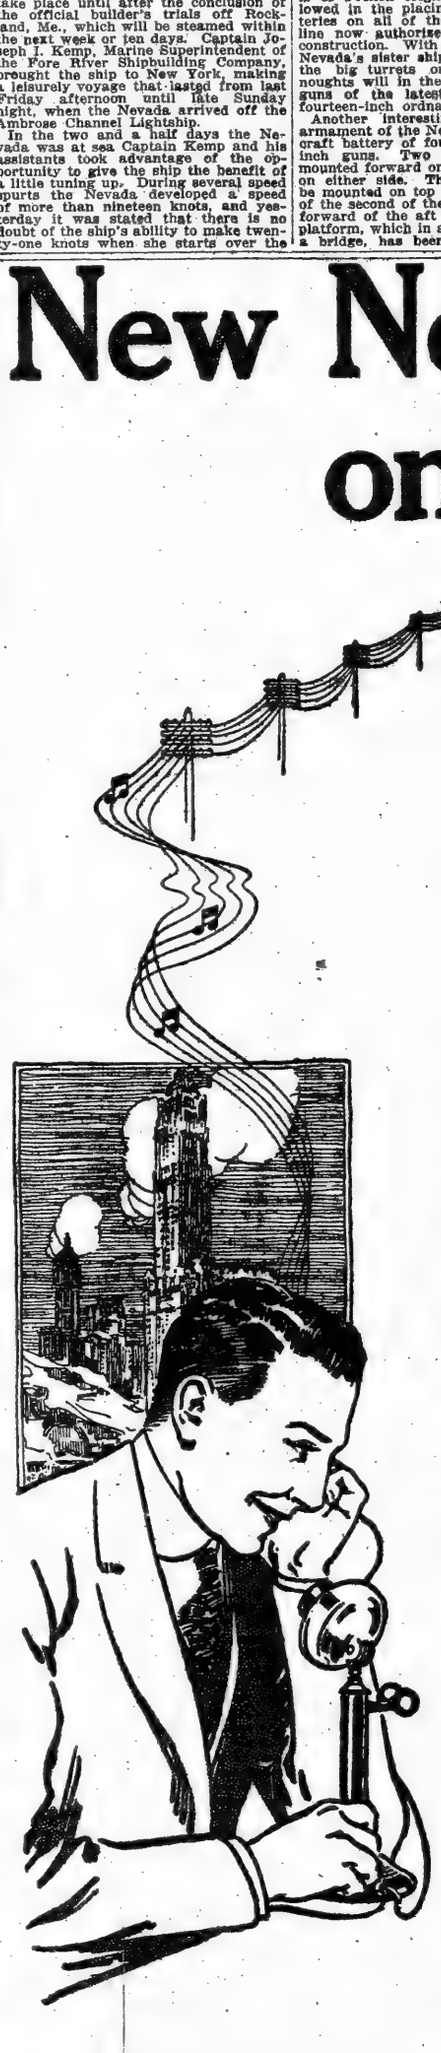
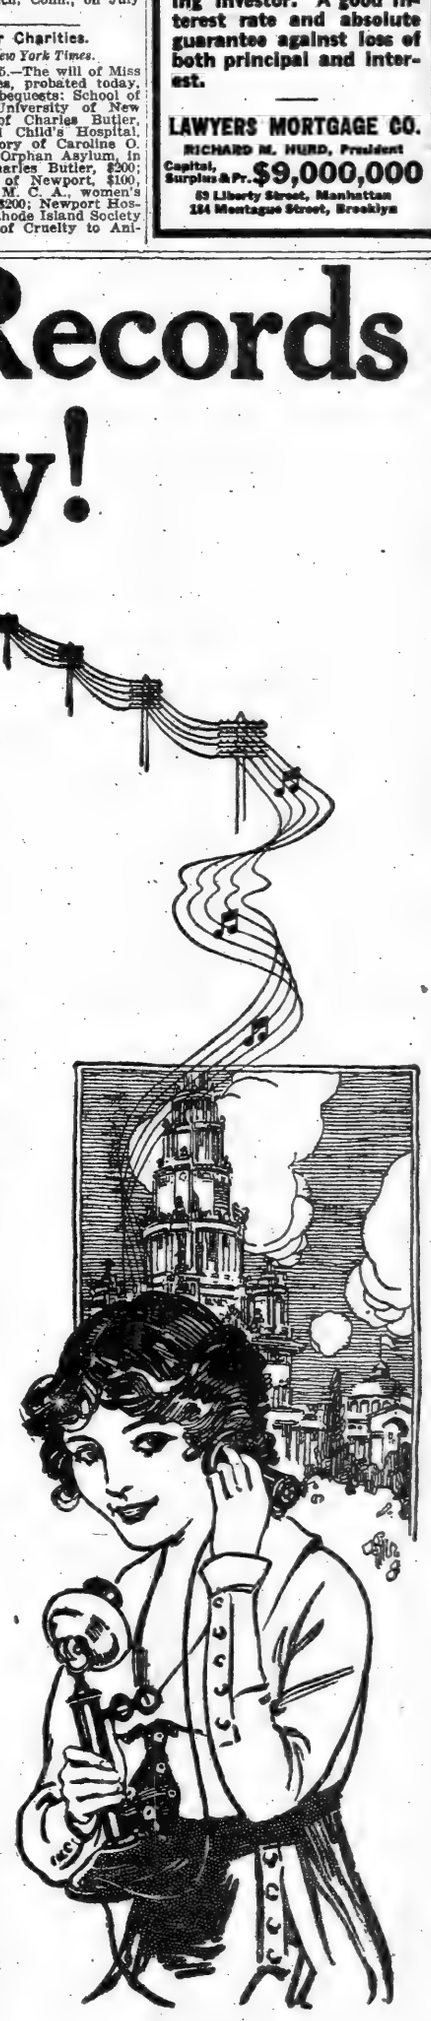
New November Records on sale today!

"Hello Frisco"

Here's a Columbia Record you can fox-trot to, all night long!





A LIVELY, cheery excerpt from that merry melange, "The Follies of 1915", "Hello Frisco" has soared to greater heights of popularity than any other product of musical New York's big Summer Frolic.

Deliciously attractive it was in "The Follies". But as an irresistible fox-trot, it has tripped the toes of the dancing populace, flashing its electric appeal through the bands and orchestras of the entire country.

In the recording of dance music, as well as vocal and instrumental selections, the Columbia process is supreme! Here, Prince's Band has again caught the spirit of youth and jollity and "pep". The record passes all this on to you, perfect in tone, time and rhythm.

"Araby"

on the other side— another fox trot

Irving Berlin's latest hit.

And this, too, makes its biggest appeal in the form of a fox-trot. Therefore, the Columbia Company have again elected Prince's Band to play it in just the way you would like to hear it. This is a happy coupling of popular numbers, a 12-inch double disc, A5715, at $1.00. You certainly ought to have it!

BUT this is only an indication, a temptation, a foretaste of the life, the fun, the sentiment, the classic beauty offered in the new November Supplement of Columbia Records.

From grave to gay—every class of music for every musical taste—the dignity of Casals; the drollery of Bert Williams, himself; the vocal glories of Claussen, Ferrari-Fontana, Seagle, Rider-Kelsey, Clark; a big group of popular hits; several beautiful trios; half a dozen new dances; the charm of the "Marimba," the musical sensation of the Exposition—nearly a hundred attractions that you will enthuse over, individually.

Don't go home tonight without the beautiful, big, new November Supplement. Take some of the records home with you. Any dealer will gladly play the rest of them for you, any time.

THE STATE'S DEFICITS.

The Bureau of Municipal Research has made short work of the dispute between Governors GLYNN and WHITMAN regarding the responsibility for the direct tax which played so large a part in producing the personal tax trouble in this city. It seems that both are to blame, and their predecessors as well. In one or two years since 1911 the direct tax equaled the deficit, but always there was such an accumulation of arrears that the State constantly was running behind until the last year was the worst of all. For 1916 the direct tax is $20,800,000, but the additional revenue needed is $20,300,000, despite sundry surprising windfalls due to the activity of the stock market.

It seems to the bureau that the State's finances have been managed according to the political reasons for or against taxation, and the modest suggestion is made that each Legislature ought rather to provide for the payment of the bills which it incurs. There is confusion between the State's fiscal and legislative years which prevents the exact apportionment of responsibility, and the intelligence upon which the Legislature acts is always behind the facts. The consequence is that the State's appropriations customarily and knowingly are below the requirements, reliance being placed upon the Supply bill to balance the State's accounts. In the record there is no trace of forethought, or such a sense of responsibility as is felt by those who deal with their own affairs and suffer if they make mistakes.

These disclosures come in the very nick of time to strengthen the suggestions of the Constitutional Convention regarding the need of a budget, and a sensible method of amortizing the State's quarter-billion debt. In the face of the record it is not possible to make a disinterested argument to the contrary. Let the faults of the constitutional amendments be what they may, if there are any, they cannot possibly rival such finance as the State has practiced under all parties since there have been financial records. The present developments regarding the canal enlargement are no worse than the original scandals in connection with the construction. The charities of the State have been habitually administered both with prodigality and mismanagement, so that the funds provided have not given the relief the taxpayers wished. If the constitutional amendments did nothing but amend the long-settled practices in this respect they would be justified.

SOME MASSACHUSETTS ALIENS.

Representatives of forty-six Massachusetts "German-American" organizations, with a membership, according to their mathematics, of 20,000, have met in Worcester and there highly resolved:

> That we, American citizens, assembled at Worcester, do not desire as an organization to indorse any candidate for Governor, but we believe in the desirability of unitedly discussing the question of the Gubernatorial candidates. We are, however, firmly opposed to the re-election of WOODROW WILSON as President of the United States.

If these resolution makers are "American citizens," why are they proposing to act unitedly as "German-Americans"? What place has "German-Americanism" in an American State? The Worcester sons of ARMINIUS are either Americans or Germans. Both they cannot be. Their opposition to Mr. WILSON'S re-election rests, notoriously, on no question of domestic policy. Because the attitude of his Administration toward the belligerent nations has been correct, neutral, American because it has been American, not German, because he has temperately but steadily maintained the rights of Americans on the high seas against German violations of international law and German savagery, these aliens at heart, whose American citizenship is merely formal, and whose real loyalty and allegiance are given to Germany, honor and help Mr. WILSON by their opposition.

To these hopeless foreigners the warning and the rebuke given by Mr. WILSON in his famous speech at Washington Oct. 11, may well be repeated:

> Every political action, every social action, should have for its object in America at this time, to challenge the spirit of America; to ask that every man and woman who thinks first of America should rally to the standards of our life. There have been some among us who have not first thought of America, who have sought to use the might of America in some matter not of America's originative, and they have forgotten that the first duty of a nation is to express its principles in the action of the family of nations, and not to seek to aid and abet any rival or contrary ideal. * * * I look forward to the necessity in every political agitation in the years which are immediately at hand of calling upon every man to declare himself, where he stands. Is it America first or is it not?

The Germans at Worcester are for Germany first. They are "men who are thinking first of other countries." They have chosen to make themselves the objects of suspicion and contempt to the great body of Americans of whatever birth or descent. Presumably they will never dare to stand up and be counted. "Very vocal, but not very influential," as Mr. WILSON said of them. If they do exert any influence, it will not be by their numbers, but by the disgust which their separatist foreign feeling and action stir in the mighty majority that is for America first, last, and all the time.

MR. HAY SUPPORTS THE PLAN.

It was a foregone conclusion that Senator CHAMBERLAIN, Chairman of the Senate's Military Committee, would give hearty support to any reasonable plan to strengthen the land defenses of the United States, and the announcement of his intention to support the measures proposed by Secretary GARRISON, therefore, will cause no surprise. The cordial support promised by Mr. HAY of Virginia, Chairman of the House Committee, however, is a welcome surprise. Mr. HAY has been "coming round" lately, to be sure, but few had hoped that he would accept Mr. GARRISON'S plan in its entirety. His announcement to that effect seems to be definite.

The plan, it must be remembered, has not all been made public. Only its principal features have yet been published. The Secretary of War gave ample assurance yesterday that, in providing for the organization of a continental army of citizen soldiers to form part of a permanent reserve, the National Guard will not be neglected. Mr. HAY said some time ago that he was willing to consider the question of Federal pay for the organized militia. Mr. GARRISON, it is understood, also favors payment for National Guardsmen. This matter will undoubtedly be brought before Congress early in the session. There is much to be said on both sides of the question, but it is likely that a safe and reasonable method of relieving the men who enlist in the State regiments from all the expense to which the service now subjects them can be devised after careful deliberation.

NO TIME FOR EXPERIMENTS.

It must be a matter of regret to thoughtful woman suffragists that the time is so unpropitious, so hostile, to the political experiment which they are seeking to impose upon three great industrial Commonwealths; and some of them upon the nation. They cannot get an undistracted attention. Their urgencies fall upon indifferent or impatient ears. However important the vote for women may look to its ardent advocates in the midst of the world-shaking shock of peoples in Europe and the economic repercussion of that shock in the United States, woman suffrage is no vital and instant question. New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, the Union and all the States, have, and will have for years to come, matters of profounder moment to deal with.

The map of Europe, Asia, Africa is being changed, financial supremacy is come to this country, the readjustments of trade and commerce caused by the war, the new readjustments that will be necessary and may involve severe economic strains after the war; the development of closer and wider business and banking relations with South America; the preservation of national neutrality and national self-respect in a period of sudden internal disputes and clashes; the inescapable weighty task of putting the nation into a state of adequate military and naval preparedness; changes of the tariff, new taxations; the full, long-delayed restoration to the railroads of the right and power to make a living; a just and stable treatment of corporations; the upbuilding of the merchant marine, injured already by the preposterous Seaman's act and still threatened by the more preposterous Ship Purchase bill; the safeguarding of manufactures after the war: these are some of the policies that Americans have, and will have, to ponder and settle. Toward the intelligent consideration and disposal of what one of them would woman voters contribute?

In moral and sentimental matters they might be active, even too active. For old age pensions, for instance, the humane instincts might be of service, sometimes, perhaps, to the sorrow of the taxpayer. But of what use in fixing the cardinal policies of business, in solving the great, cold, practical problems which the American people have to solve, would be a lot of excellent, emotional, 'prentice female voters? Unseasonable discussion of peace is the most memorable "contribution to political thought" that the women have made.

The gravest concerns of our economic, financial, and business life, of our national prosperity and our international relations, cannot be safely left in part to romantic novices. The ordinary feminine temperament does not inspire trust in the solidity of the feminine political judgment. There are more than enough feminists in politics already. Mr. BRYAN, for example. In 1896 he treated free silver exactly in the romantic manner. He lugged sentimentalities and false moralities into a financial question. The Crime of 1873, the Cross of Gold: all that patter got a considerable part of the electorate into a state of "nerves" and hysteria. There are altogether too many sobbers and weepers, romantic poets of politics, in the electorate already. To enlarge it by the admission of a whole sentimental sisterhood would be positively dangerous at present.

THE GERMAN BOMBMAKERS.

Lieutenant FAY and his accomplices in the conspiracy to blow up ships used in the munitions export trade are better representatives of German impudence than of German efficiency. Impudence is too weak a word, but it serves well enough to describe the operations of conspirators whose intent so far outruns their achievement. The confession of FAY, if that be his name, connects this branch of German effort in this country directly with the German Government. FAY declares that he was a Lieutenant in the Sixteenth Provisional Regiment of Prussian infantry; that he did service in the trenches in France; that he applied to his Colonel for permission to come to this country and try his hand at blowing up ships; that consent was given and his Colonel put him "in connection with the secret office which "handles such matters." Evidently "the secret office" means the German Secret Service. His passage was arranged and he was instructed to consult the military attachés of the empire in this country as to the employment of his devices here. He declares that both the military and the naval attaché withheld sanction and urged him to make Canada the field of his operations.

FAY'S confession may be true or may be false. Against its credibility would be urged the ineffectiveness of his labors. We have had it much borne in upon us that efficiency is the strong point of the German Government, and that in choosing its agents it sets high value upon their possession of that quality. But conspirators for the ends which FAY sought to accomplish have been actively at work in this country for many months. There have been a great many explosions both in munition plants and on shipboard, so many that they can hardly be attributed to chance and accident, yet no very great loss has occurred. It is surprising that the secret service agents of the Federal Government have taken so much time in getting on the trail of their prey.

There is urgent need that this conspiracy be broken up and that the criminals engaged in it be brought to book. They are making territory of the United States the base of hostile operations against Germany's enemies in a way that seriously compromises our neutrality. If we fail to use due diligence to put a stop to the operations of these persons, it is conceivable that we may have damage bills to pay. Apart from that, the affront to the nation and to its people is one not to be overlooked.

CARRANZA'S FINANCIAL PROBLEM

Word comes from the Mexican capital that CARRANZA and his advisers propose to reorganize the Government and re-establish the republic on a sound basis without negotiating a new foreign loan. Mr. NIETO, the Financial Minister of the Provisional Government, in an interview reported in The Sun, explains that 62 per cent. of the customs receipts will be set aside to take care of the funded debt, which aggregates 500,000,000 pesos, and as the 62 per cent. should amount, in good circumstances, to about 30,000,000 pesos, it may be ample for the specified purpose. To meet all other obligations the Financial Minister proposes to rely upon the normal revenue of the country, which he estimates at 150,000,000 pesos annually. The largest revenues in any year of the Diaz Administration were 114,286,122 pesos, the return for 1906-07, but Mr. NIETO derives his figures from the annual report of Financial Secretary ERNESTO MADERO for 1911-12, when the disbursements reached the extraordinarily large sum of 120,000,000 pesos.

It is true that Mexico's trade held up uncommonly well, in spite of the growing internal troubles, in the first year of FRANCISCO MADERO'S Presidency, but in the natural course of events some years must elapse before the receipts of the new Government can reach the high figure of Mr. NIETO'S estimate. Foreign investors will not return until they are sure of ample protection. Property that has been destroyed must be replaced. The work of rebuilding the ruined sections of the Mexican Railway between Vera Cruz and the capital will cost a great deal of money. The once immensely prosperous Tehuantepec Railway is in a bad condition, the huge works at Coatzacoalcos and Salina Cruz have been neglected and are out of order, the tracks in the Santa Lucrezia district are covered by the jungle. It is likely that the roadbed will require reconstruction for the whole length of the line, about 180 miles. The National Railway system is in a state of disorder, and its debts have accumulated. Mines and smelters which have long been out of operation cannot be reopened for business in a day. Agriculture is in a bad condition, except in Yucatan, where the valuable sisal crop has been carefully looked after.

It is well that the officers of the new Government should view the outlook hopefully, but while the customs receipts may serve to meet the funded debt interest, they will not also serve for the retirement of the war currency, the immense volume of which constitutes a part of the nation's debt. Mr. NIETO asserts that there is no more than 250,000,000 pesos' worth of this currency outstanding, but including the currency issued by VILLA, the amount is much larger. Repudiation of this would not be helpful to the work of pacification. Then the indemnities, which will not be less than another 500,000,000 pesos, must be paid with as little delay as possible if the new Government is to be firmly established. Mr. NIETO'S plan seems to be to pay for all the work of reorganization and reconstruction out of the current receipts and to retire the war currency and pay indemnities from the same uncertain source. His plan is not quite understandable, but if it includes repudiation of just claims it will be a long time before the yearly receipts of Mexican trade and taxation reach what he calls the normal sum of 150,000,000 pesos.

TIM-MADE EPIGRAMS.

If The Washington Star will persist in setting folks right about the classics, it ought to get its facts on straight. It sternly corrects a neighbor for crediting TIM CAMPBELL with TIM SULLIVAN'S immortal hitching-post epigram, and TIM SULLIVAN with TIM CAMPBELL'S "What is the Constitution between friends?" That is a desirable public service, but when The Star attempts to quote the Sullivan gem it betrays its total lack of qualifications to be a Bartlett. It says that after SULLIVAN had served two terms in Congress and decided to retire, he said, "I'd rather be a hitching-post in New York than a Congressman in Washington."

The classics must not be mutilated. Gross errors must not be allowed to stand, to corrupt the minds of future generations. What SULLIVAN said was, "A Congressman may sound all right in New York, but in Washington they hitch horses to him." He went on to express his doubts whether even in New York it was worth while to be a Congressman: "A fellow ran "into a saloon today and yelled out, "'Is Congressman SULLIVAN here! I "want to send him up to SCHNEIDER'S "to get me a plate of ham an'.'" If The Star intends to compile a dictionary of Familiar Political Quotations it must not depend on its memory; and since these epigrams by CAMPBELL and SULLIVAN are the only contributions made by either to statesmanship it is an injustice to them to hand their complete works down to posterity in a mangled form.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

He Sees Only a Part of the Truth.

German inability to see a case as a whole, and with at least two sides, could not be better illustrated than in the elaborate defense of the shooting of EDITH CAVELL, that has been made by the Kaiser's Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs. Dr. ZIMMERMANN'S argument, as far as it goes, is one not less intelligent than careful, and he talks about the woman's fate with the regret natural to a civilized man. Yet, when he stops, he has merely asserted what nobody has denied—what has been explicitly admitted by even the severest critics of the course pursued—that her deliberate disobedience of a military order issuing from competent authority rendered the imposition of the death sentence and its execution entirely regular and legal.

Statements to that effect have been contained in or implied by practically all of the adverse comments excited by the case. But while it is more than probable that any military court that had before it the evidence presented to this one would have felt compelled to reach the same decision, it is also more than probable that anywhere except in Germany there would have been effective appreciation of the fact that Miss CAVELL'S "crime" was one of precisely the sort wherein essential justice, no less than considerations of policy, demanded the exercise of executive clemency.

It is to meet just such situations that in all countries there is always put somewhere the power to exercise discretions, to make discriminations, that cannot be written out definitely in any legal code. It is a power that easily can be, and often has been, abused, yet nowhere is there a thought of abolishing it and leaving blind Justice to strike down all who come within reach of her sword.

The very men who convicted the English nurse for doing what any woman would have been the more likely to do as she was the more inspired by the highest of womanly traits should have seen, and perhaps did see, that their sentence was at once right and wrong. They should have been, and perhaps were, desirous that a commutation should come from the proper source, in this instance the Kaiser. But some sinister influence, as evidently using authority in some directions as deception in others, made impossible the appeal that might have prevented the committing of a colossal blunder.

And as EDITH CAVELL was put to death, what punishment have the Germans left to inflict on real traitors?

An Apology Shouldn't Be Grudging.

When apologies are in order it is the part of practical wisdom, as well as of courtesy and decency, to make them so full, frank, and explicit that no doubts can be left as to the sincerity of regret for offense given, of eagerness to repair it as far as possible.

Those of us who are in the newspaper business, or most of us, learned that large truth long ago, and though we have never discovered that even the best of apologies caused wounds to heal quite without a scar, sad experience has taught that those of poorer than best quality do not medicine, the aggrieved mind at all, while the grudging or defensive kind only increases the inflammatory and festering processes that are going on in him or her who treasures up a real wrong.

All this should have been known to and utilized by the members of the Men's Anti-Suffrage Association when they received protests the justice of which they could not deny against statements made in one of their campaign leaflets. Evidently it wasn't, for the document that constitutes their act of contrition not only lacks the signatures it needed for the effectual expression of that emotion, but it doesn't even say that anybody is sorry for the making of a personal attack on one of the suffrage leaders. On the contrary, it contents itself with declaring a general dislike for that method of conducting political warfare, and rather strongly intimates that the withdrawing of the leaflet from further circulation is a favor or concession, not an admission of a fall into grave error.

And that, really, is not the way to apologize. Whoever is not willing to do the thing humbly and whole-heartedly had better take as nearly as he can the attitude and tone of him who stands by his deeds or words and defies the resentment they have excited. Of course it isn't right for one who is in the wrong to do that, but there is something at least a little admirable about any display of courage, and an evasive apology is without a single merit.

For the honor and credit of their cause, the members of the Men's Anti-Suffrage Association would do well to try again, and, if they are sorry for what they did, to say so in a way that will not aggravate their original blunder.

Bombarded by Their Own Cannon.

An interesting and important disclosure in the accounts by eyewitnesses of the latest Zeppelin raid on London was that a considerable part of the damage then inflicted on the city was done by the shells fired from the ground to bring down or drive away the ruthless invaders.

That is one of the difficulties, and one of the most serious, that are created by an attack of this sort. Defensive operations against an airship overhead constitute an addition to the danger of the people below. A missile that rises to near the enemy craft and misses it, as the great majority of such missiles are sure to do, comes down with much of the power to kill and destroy that is possessed by the bombs intentionally dropped.

The ideal solution of the problem, of course, would be not to let the Zeppelins reach the city at all, but that requires the use of an enormous number of guns, placed on the circumference of a vast circle. The French seem to have managed to defend their own capital in this way, but the task of the British was a harder one, both on account of London's greater extent and of the fact that most of the route followed by the Germans in their case is over water instead of land.

Paris has better weather, too, than London, and seemingly the German eagerness to kill its civilian inhabitants is not so keen.

A Soldier's Initiative.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was very much interested in the published report of the address of Major Gen. John F. O'Ryan before the members of the Technology Club.

The General says initiative must be destroyed. I must take issue. It is this quality of initiative that makes the American soldier valuable. How often during our war did regiments, fresh from recruiting stations, give good account of themselves—Stannard's Brigade at Gettysburg, for instance? I never noticed any superiority in action between Sykes's Division of Regulars over those of any other division. I do not discourage training or proper discipline; but if it had taken as long to train and fit our soldiers for service in '61-'65 as it is now taking in England, our war might be going on yet.

JOHN R. KING,
Past Commander in Chief, G. A. R.
Baltimore, Md., Oct. 25, 1915.

WHAT TOMMY TOLD THE DUCHESS.

I bared my manly bosom to 'is 'orrid stethoscope—
I called on Gawd to witness that all my ribs was broke!
'E thumped me and 'e punched me and 'is bloomin' face was long,
But when 'e says, "Count five, my lad,"
I give 'im this 'ere song:

"It's a long way to Tipperary,
It's a long way to go.
It's a long way to Tipperary,
And the sweetest girl I know!"

They chucked me in a luggage van with 'alf a 'undred more,
And gruesome kind of cheer it was, with straw ticks on the floor.
The matey wot was nearest me 'ad lost out both 'is eyes—
'E cried for 'is old lady and then 'e ups and dies!

"It's a long way to Tipperary,
Too far for some to go.
It's a long way to Tipperary—
Ah, Gawd! 'e loved 'er so!"

I 'ad to keep my spirits up; though tears ain't no disgrace
When you're coughing blood and shrapnel, but I 'ad to save my face,
So I 'ollered in my blanket and you bet I made 'em 'ear—
"If any mate will 'elp me sing, I've two bits left for beer."

"It's a long road to Tipperary,
We're going 'ome today.
We cursed the surgeon for a thief,
But 'e wouldn't let us stay."

. . . . .

Then something must 'ave 'appened, for an English nurse was near—
With natural imperliteness, I said, "Mornin', sister dear."
She turned as white as paper. "Man, be careful what you say!
You 'aven't spoke for seven weeks—we thought you'd die today!"

"It's a long way to Tipperary,
But when I 'eave in view,
Moll won't mind the crutches
Because my 'eart is true.
'I don't mind your crutches, Tom,
I know your love is true!'
That's wot Moll will say to me
When I 'eave in view."

ROMILLY THORNTON.

NAMES FOR NEW THINGS.

They Should Be Individual, Appropriate, and Easy to Pronounce.

New York, Oct. 19, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some two centuries ago Joseph Addison, alarmed at the introduction of a great number of French words to the English language by soldiers returning from the wars in France, wrote: "I have often wished that, as in our Constitution there are several persons whose business it is to watch over our laws, our liberties, and commerce, certain men might be set apart as superintendents of our language. * * *"

In our day and country the need for superintendence of the language, though for wholly different reasons, is as great as it was in England when Addison wrote. Our great activity in mechanics and the arts is rapidly producing new devices which, coming into popular use, require names which shall be short, euphonious and individual. A few examples will illustrate what I have in mind. When self-propelled vehicles first came into practical use some one contrived "automobile," an awkward composite word lacking even the merit of describing this machine to the exclusion of every other, for a stationary engine can with equal propriety be said to be self-movable. That the word is inept is shown by its giving way, in large measure, to "car," and "motor," which in their turn are open to objection in that they name a great number of other vehicles and machines. Going from bad to worse, we now have "auto-truck" and "auto-hearse," and recently the defenseless public has been inflicted with "jitneur" and "auto-funeral cortège."

Many instances show that it is possible to coin fitting names as the need arises. I take two at random, "kodak" and "mazda," which are admirable words, because short, pleasing to the ear and bringing to the mind the objects they name and nothing else. On the other hand, "certain-teed" is indefensible and is of the class of coined words which are harmful because, being adopted for general use by persons not discriminating in their speech, they tend to debase the language.

What Addison had in mind was, no doubt, a governmental superintendence of the language. With us, laws to such an end, if possible of enactment, would be impossible of enforcement.

The great New York dailies, it seems to me, could unofficially do much for the attainment of this objective and render valuable service to the language by joining in establishing and maintaining a board, composed of men, equipped with imagination tempered by scholarship, who should be charged with the duty of passing upon new words, of naming new devices, as they appear, of approving such as are good, of rejecting such as are bad and devising other new words, apposite to the need, to take the places of those rejected. No new word could long survive the taboo of the press, and the newspapers could give force and effect to the work of this board by excluding from their news columns new words not having its sanction.

FRANCIS P. LOWREY.

Paderewski's Appeal.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The great audience which crowded Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon to hear Mr. Paderewski's noble plea for the destitute millions of Poland must have felt anew that we, in our peaceful land, have an inevitable duty of compassion toward the innocent victims of the world conflict.

The eloquence of the man we have long known as an artist, but never before as a public speaker, seemed a proof of what Owen Wister calls "The Pentecost of Calamity" in this war. The complete dedication with which the musician gave himself and his art to the cause of his country brought that vast audience to its feet in reverence. Not once but several times during the afternoon we rose instinctively as though in church, while Paderewski's playing of the music of his immortal countryman, Chopin, ("one Polish poet to whom it was given to sing of Poland in a language understood by all,") took on new significance. We felt that the European conflagration which is tragically burning away so many beliefs and ideals had but lit in this musician a flame of pure, unselfish purpose, consecrating art to humanity, and revealing the strong soul of the man behind the artist.

Though Mr. Paderewski did not tell us so, we cannot ourselves overlook the truth that some of our immediate prosperity is heightened by needs across the seas, and this fact should make every American with a conscience the more eager to help spread the appeal uttered by the great Polish pianist, not in the name of his compatriots alone, but in the name of human brotherhood.

NATALIE CURTIS.
New York, Oct. 24, 1915.

An Attitude Explained.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At the last meeting of the Central Council I was instructed to call your attention to the misleading name of the Civil Service Association, as indicated in an editorial published in your esteemed paper on Sunday, Oct. 10, 1915. We have not been informed that the Civil Service Reform Association has changed its name, and is now afraid of the term "reform," and refrains from using it. The views which you take pleasure in indorsing may be the views of the Civil Service Reform Association, but they are not the views of any civil service association made up of civil service employes. On the contrary, the civil service employes, through the Civil Service Forum and the New York Civil Service Society, Inc., have gone on record as opposed to the proposed Constitution in view of the fact that its provisions would bring all civil service employes into politics in order to protect their interests and uphold the civil service system. The home rule clause is especially drafted to reduce the salaries of all civil service employes. It aims to give to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment the power to take away the protection of the law now given to them.

Not Formerly at Louvain.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At the head of my letter, published in THE TIMES of Oct. 22 under the caption, "Why Grass Grows in Antwerp's Streets," my name and profession are followed by the mention "formerly at Louvain." This is a slight error. Though born not far from Louvain, I never lived in that city, and never was connected with its university either as student or instructor. J. L. BORGERHOFF.

A Humanist.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I ask you to be so kind as to correct the error in the heading of my letter in reply to Gertrude Atherton? You refer to me as "Germany's most eminent woman novelist." I am a Russian subject and not German. But I am writing not for Russia, nor any of the belligerents—I am writing for the great cause of humanity.

Concerning Anton Lang.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The recent report of the death of Anton Lang, the Christus of the Oberammergau Passion Play, must have come as a surprise to any one with a knowledge of Bavaria. All those taking part in the Passion Play are relieved of military service, and consequently Anton Lang has never been a soldier. The denial in today's TIMES comes as a great relief.

PETROGRAD'S FOOD SCARCE IN AUGUST.

While the Defending Army Was Being Saved, the Railroads Forgot the Russian Capital and a Famine Was Feared.

Translation of an Article in Retch, Petrograd, Sept. 5, 1915.

The food crisis in the capital has become very acute. It has reached such a stage that all the supplies of flour have been exhausted, and as a result the bakeries have had to diminish their output. The reserve which is still left will be enough, let us hope, for another week. Competent observers had foreseen the inevitability of the approaching crisis, and even have warned the Government that we are facing a famine. It is to be regretted that up to the present nothing has been done to secure bread for the capital because of the great pressure on the railroads brought on by the events of the war.
